CHINA'S NEED

O God of all the nations! hear the cry
Of hunger and distress!
Rain mercy down, like manna from the sky;
Thy suffering children bless.
Ye Christians of our land, list to the call
Of human brotherhood!
Prove now herewith the God who made us all,
And said his work was "good."

The Gospel ye have sent unto this race—
The Gospel of God's love—
He waits to show the goodness of his grace:
By you his love to prove.
Oh, let it not be said that "one of these,"
Whom Jesus died to save,
Perished, while ye lay idly at your ease,
Nor of your plenty gave.

Give of your money; give them of your grain;
Give of your labor's store;
Rich blessings to your souls will be your gain;
God will his love outpour.
Bestow your bounties while the day is here:
The time to help is now;
Let China feel the comfort of your cheer—
Lift sorrow from her brow.

The work is yours, O Christians! heed the call,
And let it not be said
That while ye basked in plenty, great and small,
Your brethren died for bread.
And, some time, ye shall hear the sweet "well
Ye did it unto me;" [done!
When ye shall meet these brethren round God's
And your Redeemer see. [throne;

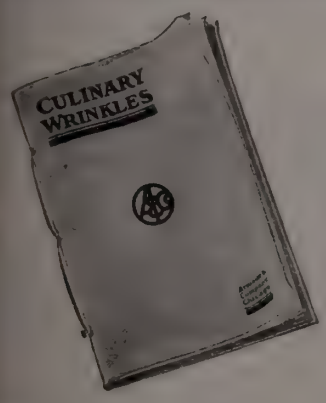
JENNIE WILSON-HOWELL.

The Cunning of Cookery

WHEN appetite waits on hunger, the pleasure of eating is confined to the flavor—then try not to satisfy hunger, but rather to titillate the palate and start the gastric juices flowing that hunger may beckon appetite. Try this with your husband, fresh from the office with the cares of business paramount; you tempt him, yet abstract him, he talks, he eats as he lives to enjoy and not to exist.

The palate tempting Soup, the kind that makes your mouth water, is best made with Armour's Extract of Beef, the best extract of the best beef. "Culinary Wrinkles," sent free, will tell how to make that kind of soup, how to make rich and wholesome gravies, how to make the left-overs of today into dainty bits for tomorrow.

Buy a jar of Armour's Extract of Beef. It will prove its worth, whether for elaborate spreads on special occasions or for your every-day plain and simple family fare.



"Culinary Wrinkles," free, will help you in many ways. Send postal today, addressing minimum. Certainly the government mints are working overtime to supply the needed cash; the mint at Nanking sends its banners of black smoke out over the refugee camps, as it labors unremittingly upon the production of two hundred million cash.

CHINA'S DEVASTATING FAMINE

Theoretically all the sufferers will have money to buy food. But they have not the food at prices within their reach. There is little public spirit or pity in China. The same heathen selfishness and disregard of suffering which leads the officials to misappropriate the government's relief funds whenever possible, leads the merchant to demand "famine prices." Thus it comes about that the food bought at Shanghai with relief funds, or sent direct from America, is the only hope of saving even a proportion of the perishing. This food is sold at prices low enough to give the sufferers sufficient food for the funds they have in hand.

The Only Hope

When it comes to the actual famine district, where thousands of families remain to await the slow, agonizing end, outside relief is the only hope. For the cities the government cannot do enough, even though it do its utmost; the real scene of want is dependent utterly upon those pioneers of Christendom's best, the missionaries. They, and they alone, are handling all relief funds and food sent from America or elsewhere. The co-operation of the local gentry (a different class from the officials) is secured, but the authority and responsibility rests with the missionaries. They are meeting the emergency with an industry, a grasp of the situation and a foresight which are a sufficient answer to countless sneers at missions.

As I am only touching, thus far, the outskirts of the famine territory, so also I am seeing only the beginning of the distress. The worst is ahead. The famine will be at its height a month hence, or about the time this article is printed. For the following five months it will ravage the country, reinforced by famine, fever and probably plague. Help cabled now will promptly get to the field to stay the hand of pestilence and starvation. A two-cent postage stamp will keep two children alive for a day; a street-car ride foregone will feed a family for the same length of time; a dollar will thwart insatiable starvation from entering the average home for at least a month.

W. T. Ellis.

Nanking, China, Jan. 10.

The Famine Camp at Tsingkiangpu

Letters and telegrams from correspondents of the North China Herald give a gloomy picture of conditions at the great famine camps. At Tsingkiangpu, the camp—or rather the series of camps—now contains an aggregate of 450,000 famine refugees. One correspondent writes:

> The women and children for miles are grubbing up roots, grass and every conceivable thing that might serve for food or fuel. In the camps one sees people eating a mixture of cooked leaves, grass and twigs, with a little cereal and rice. The horrors of the filth prevailing are unspeakable. The officials are trying to persuade the people to return home; many are doing so, but many more are arriving. The roads are thronged with the two streams of traffic, and the scene is indescribable. Unless relief works are organized the end is beyond all conception.

Another correspondent writes that smallpox is appearing in the famine camps. "As far as can be judged," he adds, "250,000 people are doomed to die in the district of Tsingkiangpu alone." He visited many of the groups and invariably found some dead or dying of hunger.

Hundreds Die of Hunger in a Night

All the correspondents agree in describing the condition in the famine camps as frightful. In one camp of some 500,000, 200 died in a single night of cold and hunger. Many of the refugees are almost naked. Even the children are so weak through want of food that they fall down while walking.

Where the hungry hordes rove about searching for food, everything seems to be exhausted: tree bark, dried roots, leaves and such leaves and vegetable rubbish as can be picked out of the frozen ground are eagerly devoured. These are not things of hearsay; the writers (missionaries) have seen these with their own eyes.

"As to the clothing of the people," writes Rev. M. A. Reid, "I cannot well describe it under that name. The people have done their best to get food and have sold everything, and in many cases even sold their children. Others have given their children away and some have deserted them. In one case a mother and father threw their two children into the river and saw them drown."

One correspondent, after spending many days in investigating the distress in a single province (Antung), concludes that of the 800,000 sufferers there, about half have a chance of pulling through. To save the 400,000, who are apparently doomed to death, will call for tremendous energy and promptitude. The official measures are absurdly inadequate, though the people are kindly disposed. On the whole, the correspondent grimly observes, as the worst of the famine is yet to come, the Chinese attitude would seem to be one of social indifference. They seem to think that the "only practical thing will be to forget the 400,000 who are dying, and to obtain seed for crops for the remainder."

All contributions to the Chinese Relief Fund should be addressed to The Christian Herald, 92 Bible House, New York. Every contribution will be acknowledged in these columns.

A Woman's Work for Women

FEW charities of the rescue class have been more abundantly blessed by results than the work which is carried on at 601 Spring Street, Richmond, Va., for the reclamation of unfortunate girls. Although the institution is not endowed, no homeless wanderer ever knocked in vain at its door, and that door has opened to a new and happy life for many a miserable outcast. Mrs. F. J. Gregory, the good matron, writes with deep gratitude of the letters she has received from many of the girls after they have learned the "way of life" under her leading, and gone out with a new resolve to live better lives wherever their lot should be cast. One girl went back to her old father and wrote to the Home: "I am so happy to serve Christ, and my father also has been brought to the feet of Jesus, and already several friends with whom I have spoken have accepted the Saviour."

The girls are now being gathered in rapidly. If any are disposed to aid in this worthy work of saving the perishing, they are invited to correspond with Mrs. F. J. Gregory, the matron, who will furnish any desired information.

What It Is

An ache in the back and a pain in the head—
That's the grippe!
A choke in the throat and a yearning for bed—
That's the grippe!
A river of heat, then a shiver of cold,
A feeling of being three hundred years old,
A willingness even to do as you're told—
That's the grippe!

Strange visions at night that deprive you of rest—
That's the grippe!
A taste in your mouth, and a weight on your chest—
That's the grippe!
A tired sensation that runs through your veins,
A queer combination of aches and of pains,
A vapid admission of absence of brains—
That's the grippe!

"OF SUCH IS THE KINGDOM"

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

SCENE II.

THE doctor has a busy day. He is late again to supper. But he brings out the candy boxes after Ruth and Ralph are asleep, and he and his wife make out an additional list of presents, including a number of mechanical toys which the doctor saw at Grab & Grind's on his way to the candy-box counter.

The next day, late in the afternoon, the doctor is down on Cass Street visiting a patient. As he comes out of the building he remembers what the girl at Grab & Grind's said about the factory, and as he turns from Cass Street into Devall, he comes suddenly upon the building—one of the old relics of the early city, almost the only one left, a wooden tenement once used as a boarding house. On the front is the sign the girl mentioned, "Small girls wanted." There is a group of them on the sidewalk exchanging slang remarks with one another, and with the boys and men hurrying by.

The doctor sees the stairway, with its pasty steps, and, obeying an impulse that is not very clearly defined, he starts to go up. On the first landing he is met by a man in a dirty paste-splattered blouse

"You can't come in here. Strangers are not allowed. It's our busy season. Unless"—the man hesitates—"you're one of the inspectors? Are you?"

"No. I simply want to see how the boxes are made. I'm a doctor."

The man reluctantly allows the doctor to pass into the room. It is a shipping-room, and there is little visible but crates of boxes.

"Where are the machines?" the doctor asks.

"Up on fourth floor," the man says curtly, and shuts the door, as the doctor steps out on the dirty landing.

Still obeying his first impulse to see how the boxes are made, the doctor slowly goes on up another flight of stairs and still another. The building trembles and rocks under the strain of high running machines. He is almost on the fourth floor landing, near the door, when he hears a bolt shot back and a key turned. The door opens, and a dirty-faced man runs out and collides with him in the obscure passage. The doctor is almost knocked down the stairs, but he is an old college football player and he steadies himself as he sends the man spinning back against the door, which has been shut again.

"What you doing!" the man yells. "Get out of the way. There's been an accident here and I'm going after a doctor."

"Well, I'm a doctor," says Wentworth, everything else wiped out by his professional instincts. "What's wanted?"

"Come here!" The man drags the doctor back into the room. Even in the hurry of the procedure the doctor is aware that on their entrance the door is quickly locked again. The man hurries him through a great room filled with pyramids of gorgeous holiday boxes, clashing machines and a multitude of small human figures moving their arms and fingers with nervous and incessant energy. At the farther end of the room, on the floor in front of one of the machines, a little form is lying unconscious. Around one paste-daubed hand is wrapped a dirty rag, which is stained with something darker.

The doctor is on his knees in a moment, his medicine case open, absorbent cotton and bandage deftly and rapidly handled. The man who has brought him in stands anxiously by the side of the foreman watching. The doctor does not ask any questions, but the foreman says:

"Scissors feed. The girls get awfully careless, you know, in rush times. We can't avoid accidents of this sort."

The other man grips his hands convulsively.

"I never thought my girl would get caught—I don't know—"

"O, well, Casey," says the foreman, not meaning to be rough, "the company will see to her in St Mary's. You needn't have been in such a rush to get a doctor. I'd already 'phoned for an ambulance. They're here now."

The ambulance man with his assistant come in with their stretcher, and after the doctor has finished his work the limp form is taken up, placed on the stretcher and carried out. The doctor sees the father of the child stoop and kiss her face and then go into the crating-room. The foreman eyes the doctor suspiciously.

"You can send in your bill to the company," he says, shortly.

"There may not be any bill," the doctor says slowly.

He is drinking in the scene as he moves through the room, his professional glance noting the pale faces, the hollow chests, the thin, poorly-clad bodies of these child slaves of Christian America. The foreman tries to hurry him along, but the doctor coolly takes his time. On one side of the room he stops near one of the machines, in front of which is the smallest girl in the factory. Her dress is calico, her hair is a tangled mop. Her face is dirty except for two partly white streaks, and, as the doctor looks at her, he sees the reason for the streaks. Tears are running down and dropping on the paste-smeared dress front.

"That girl ought not to be here," he says, indignantly, pointing at Rosy Calvaire. "She is sick."

"Sick nothing," says the foreman roughly. "She's one of the best hands we have She ain't crying 'cause she's sick."

"What is she crying for, then?" asks the doctor sharply.

"Her little brother died a few days ago. But what business is it of yours anyhow!"

The doctor thinks more rapidly than he has ever thought in his life.

"I'll make it my business. You've no right to keep that mite of a girl here; or half these other girls." His eye sweeps over the room and takes in its deep tragedy.

"No law against it, is there?" sneers the foreman.

The doctor breathes deeply. He moves away from Rosy towards the door.

"No law against it!" For the first time he realizes his helplessness, the helplessness of this room full of innocents.

They are near the door now, and the foreman unlocks it. Without a word the doctor goes out. The door is immediately locked behind him. He goes slowly down the stairs and out upon the sidewalk He passes through the group of girls out there, and goes on uptown. The tears of Rosy Calvaire the little girl with the tangled hair and the thin calico dress, why—those tears—they might have been hers—that fell on the damaged candy boxes. The doctor has a romantic temperament and a vivid imagination. They might have been damaged by tears. But what of that! He is going by Grab & Grind's Some impulse, like the one that sent him into the box factory, draws him into the store, and he fights his way again up to the candy counter.

"Do you suppose," he says to the girl, the same girl who seems to live behind the counter, "do you suppose you could find those damaged boxes I brought back here to exchange yesterday morning?"

The girl stares at him as if he were a new species of idiot, differing in some noticeable particulars from the others that are pushing and shoving through the store.

"What!" she says. The doctor repeats his question.

"What do you want 'em for?" the girl says.

Senator Charles Curtis

th his ancestors held sway long before he forbears of the other Senators ever eld of America. The new Senator is he Hon. Charles Curtis, and he will represent the State of Kansas. Any one, however, who goes into the Senate Chamber in the expectation of seeing an Indian brave in war paint and feathers, sitting with the pipe of peace in the "council of the fathers," will be disappointed. Mr. Curtis is a lawyer, well read and of dignified manners. His clothes are always in the latest fashion. He looks as he is, a man of affairs, who has got to his present high position by hard work, and who will give the same careful attention to national affairs as he has given to those of his own State. He is one of the few survivors of the Kaw tribe. The numbers of this tribe have been rapidly diminishing during the last two or three generations. When the Indian lands were parceled out Mr. Curtis and his children received allotments. He started his active career by selling papers on the streets of Topeka. Then he became the driver of a hack and while waiting for "fares" studied law. After several years of hard study he was admitted to the bar. Soon after opening his office he was elected county attorney. His next step up the political ladder was made when he was sent to Congress by the votes of the people who had bought his papers and helped him in his early business enterprises. He served fourteen consecutive years as a member of the House of Representatives. His six-year term in the Senate begins this week.

Baby Angelo's death has been ensive. Mrs. Calvaire is still sick. y is the breadwinner. She will have dollars to take home Saturday night, she works until nine and gets her a five cents an hour. The organist St. Mary's is practicing his chimes in this evening, and parts of it float ough the broken window by Rosy's chine.

le shepherds watched their flocks by night, seated on the ground.
angel of the Lord came down
And glory shone around—

Rosy sobs, as baby Angelo's face rises ore her joyless memory of her own eavement. She is saying to herself: hate Christmas!" "I hate Christmas!" r little, thin body leans against the chine and her legs tremble harder. r fingers are numb and her feet are cold as ice. The machine stops a mo- nt, owing to some choking of the omatic paper roll. Then it starts up ain, but in the interval Rosy's little nd has flown back to baby Angelo, l she does not notice the boxes as they come down toward her. The foreman is passing.

"Get to work there," he says, laying his hand on Rosy's shoulder.

The organist in St Mary's puts another Christmas hymn on the music rack, and night deepens over the city and over the child.

Answered Prayers

F. I. G., New Jersey. "The answer has come to long-continued, daily prayer. Glory to His name."

Mrs. K. F. G., Illinois. "My soul is rejoicing in the answer which has come to my prayers for my beloved son."

A Praying Mother, London. "After asking help through your 'Answered Prayer' column, it came to me in abundant measure."

E. M. R., Ohio. "I wish to render thanks to my heavenly Father for his wonderful goodness to me. He graciously answered my prayer for the life of a beloved sister."

Old Subscriber, New York. "I am thankful to acknowledge in your dear paper, which is a companion in our home, that I know the Lord does hear and answer prayer."

E. N., Wisconsin. "I wish with all my heart to tell of direct answer to prayer. In time of great need for a dear son, God delivered most wonderfully. Truly, the Lord is all in all to me."

K. F. D., Florida. "When I had no friends on earth to help me, my Father delivered me when in great trouble. I hope that others may take courage and trust him from my testimony."

"K. F., Vermont. "'The Lord hearkened to the prayer of Hezekiah, and healed them all.' My prayer is, that all done in the name of the Lord may be blessed a thousand-fold by the holy influences of God's spirits."

Reader, Ohio. "I must praise God for his goodness in answering prayers, also for the beautiful promises we find in his word. I never realized as now the privilege there is in being used as a temple of the Holy Spirit."

O. B., Kansas. "My mother and I join in testifying to God's power and goodness in answering prayer. My father and many friends have been converted lately in answer to prayer, and we have faith to believe he will continue to hear us."

A Subscriber, New York. "I prayed to my heavenly Father when all earthly hope was vain, and he heard me. I thank him for the many prayers he has answered for me. May he continue his loving kindness to all who put their trust in him."

Y., New York. "I wish to acknowledge the goodness and mercy of the Lord in answering prayer. In a recent affliction, which deprived me of the use of one of the senses, I cried to him as the Great Physician, and he restored me to normal health."

S. B., Nova Scotia. "I have known, by the happy experience of more than forty years, that God is the Answerer as well as the Hearer of prayer. The last year has been one of bitter trial, but he has been with me, and comforted me with the assurance of his help, for which I praise him daily."

COFFEE THRESHED HER

15 Long Years.

"For over fifteen years," writes a patient, hopefull little Ills. woman, "while a coffee drinker, I suffered from Spinal Irritation and Nervous trouble. I was treated by good physicians, but did not get much relief.

"I never suspected that coffee might be aggravating my condition. I was downhearted and discouraged, but prayed daily that I might find something to help me.

"Several years ago, while at a friend's house, I drank a cup of Postum and thought I had never tasted anything more delicious.

"From that time on I used Postum instead of Coffee and soon began to improve in health, so that now I can walk half a dozen blocks or more with ease, and do many other things that I never thought I would be able to do again in this world.

"My appetite is good, I sleep well and find life is worth living, indeed. A lady of my acquaintance said she did not like Postum, it was so weak and tasteless.

"I explained to her the difference when it is made right—boiled according to directions. She was glad to know this because coffee did not agree with her. Now her folks say they expect to use Postum the rest of their lives." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Your Portrait in the Bible

International Sunday School Lesson for March 17
*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE twin sons of Isaac and Rebekah were Esau and Jacob. Esau being the first born, was entitled to the birthright, which would make him the honored head of the family or tribe on his father's death and give him the largest inheritance in his father's possessions. But fathers had the right to put a younger son in place of the elder, as when Jacob himself gave Joseph, in place of Reuben, the family leadership. And a like case was David's exalting of Solomon above his older sons. A message came to the mother from Jehovah concerning these two sons: "Two nations shall be born of thee. One people shall be stronger than the other people, and the elder shall serve the younger."

Twin Patriarchs

Twins are often so alike that even the family cannot tell which is which, but these twins were opposites in every way. At birth Esau had a coarse and hairy skin, while Jacob's skin was soft and smooth; but these merely physical differences would have mattered little had not mental differences developed of a far more serious character. The next time we hear of Esau and Jacob they had grown to be thirty years of age. It was at this time Esau, returning hungry from the hunt, sold his birthright to Jacob for the red soup, an venison, which he was skilled in cooking as well as in killing. At this sacramental meal he promised to give Esau the birthright blessing, in anticipation of death close at hand. Rebekah heard this promise with great concern, though she had God's promise that the birthright honors should finally go to Jacob, and doubtless knew also that Esau had long before sold his birthright to Jacob for a bowl of hot soup. It seemed as if not only that bargain, but God's own promise was to be set aside. Like Abraham in Egypt, and Isaac among the Philistines, and all those who argue to-day that it is right to lie to save life, she thought it was safer to trust a lie than to trust the Lord. She formed a sinful plot, by which Jacob might obtain the blessing promised to Esau by her dying husband. She quickly sought out Jacob and told him what she had heard his father say to Esau, and also of her plan to secure the blessing for him.

It was that he should go to his flock and bring in two young kids, whose flesh would taste like "venison." These, when cooked in Esau's way, Jacob was to present to his father, pretending he was Esau just returned from hunting. Jacob objected, but only on the ground that his father would not be fooled by the proposed lies of word and deed, and on discovering the trick incident which, with his presumably red hair gave him the name of Esau—Edom—that is, Esau the Red.

Esau was plainly the favorite of his father and Jacob the favorite of his mother. It is seldom wise, and often sinful, for parents to show favoritism thus, except that everybody's favorite should be the baby of the house. Esau was a restless hunter, and had adventurously married a woman of an alien race—qualities that had, by the law of opposites, attracted the affection of the quiet Isaac, who was also won by Esau's frequent treats of venison. Jacob, on the other hand, was the home-loving son, devoted to agricultural pursuits, qualities which had naturally endeared him to his mother. These opposite characteristics of the twin brothers are clearly brought to view in the events which we study to-day.

Isaac, nearly one hundred years old, bedridden and blind, still had a good appetite, for he requested his son Esau to go out hunting and get him some savory would pronounce a curse upon him instead of a blessing. But the treacherous mother convinced the son, who had inherited something of her treachery, that she was equal to the occasion. When Jacob had brought the kids and Rebekah had prepared the meat, she took the soft skins of the kids, that in that country are very like human hair in feeling, and covered the hands and neck of Jacob with them, so that he would be like hairy Esau to the touch of his blind father. When Jacob came with the meat (lie number one), pretending it was venison, and declared himself as Esau (lie number two), his father almost discovered the hypocrite's trick, for "the voice was the voice of Jacob." Then he brought on lie number three (the hairy hands and neck) and got the coveted blessing.

Does any one really think God would not have kept his promise to Rebekah, that Jacob should have the blessing, without the "help" of her lies and Jacob's? Let us see how these lies separated Jacob from his mother for all the remainder of her life, and made him a fugitive from home and country in fear of his brother's revenge.

a short while Esau returned from the with the coveted deer, and brought avory venison, and brought it to his r. It was a bitter discovery to Isaac, ell as to Esau, that his brother had ded him in bringing the desired veni- nd had obtained the blessing. While d before put a light value upon the right, it now seemed inestimable to and he wept aloud and purposed in eart to kill his treacherous brother. kah, fearing this, urged Jacob to home and go far away to his Uncle n's house, to stay until his brother's r should be some way appeased. Still ning in Jacob's behalf, she went to with lie number four, and made it ar to him that Jacob must go away to elatives to obtain a suitable wife of wn race, and Isaac sent him off with lessing.

Types of Character

e Bible reveals not only the divine e, but also human nature. As in Christ ehold God, in other Bible characters ould find our own portraits for warn- nd encouragement. Everybody in the and everybody in the census is either Abraham, an Isaac, a Jacob, or an . In every age and in every com- ty Abrahams are few, often solitary. are not an Abraham unless you de to stand alone" for the right. ly you are not an Abraham if you say, "When you are in Rome do as the Romans Abraham in Ur refused to err as all the people erred in their idolatry and its companying wickedness. Idolatry then lly included both drink and lust, the hip of Bacchus and Venus under many s. He dared to be out of fashion h fashion was lewd, as it often is to-day ress and dance. The Abrahams have pre-eminent characteristic, they lead idually in the right instead of being by the crowd in the wrong. "How is a man better than a sheep?" Not h, except here and there an Abraham. istory is so pertinent here of the flock eep, of which one leaped through a place in the stone wall and fell into an y well just beyond. Every one of the made the same leap and fell into the well, from which they were dragged some wounded, others dead. "All we sheep have gone astray," in blind imi- n of the crowd we are in.

is not so hard to find modern Isaacs, gentlemen and gentlewomen, constitu- lly quiet and peaceful, who do neither uch good nor so much evil as the more uous Abrahams. Isaac, in an age of gamy, had but one wife, and in a d when war was frequent never drew word. About the only faults told of are: that he lied about Rebekah to the stines, forgetting how such "a lie to life" on the lips of his father in ot had made matters worse; and that owed a foolish partiality in his family; that he was an ancient illustration hat true saying of the wicked to-day, "good people are easily fooled." s may be found by the million to-day ny bad business that can put enough ey into print, can make them think need poisonous and fraudulent medi- s, or convince them that an acknowl- d curse by another name is a blessing. ou are an Isaac add to your goodness om.

Modern Jacobs

e Jacobs abound on our business ts, the professedly Christian merchants, hose hearts conscience and covetous- are ever wrestling—so well pictured lowell's New England stories. It was l work for these Jacobs of to-day to and save their money, and it is harder pend, and especially to give it away. yet they feel that it is their duty to to the very ends of the earth, and do. But they can hardly claim the e promise, "The Lord loveth the rally) hilarious giver." Acquisitive- wrestles with honesty in the getting with benevolence in the giving, and cience is "sometimes up and some- s down" in the daily tussle. Jacob's ives were so mixed, that we can hardly whether he was sheep or goat until that wrestle at Jabbok, where he left the e Jacob, the Supplanter, and got the name of Israel, the Prince with God. Jacobs pray and yet lie, as Jacob did in this lesson, in passing off one thing for another; and they are cowards when an issue is raised that might lose them a customer. May these Jacobs of to-day get such a vision of God, such a touch of Christ, that conscience and courage shall make them conquering Israels.

The Lying of Good People

Rebekah had the same type of character as Jacob in that, though religious, she would use deception and even falsehood, in a woman's way, to help one she loved. This is the trait of both Jacob and Rebekah that is most prominent in to-day's lesson, and as lying is regarded by many as a trivial sin, while really a menace to the whole fabric of civilization, the lying of good people should have very earnest and practical treatment in homes and Sunday Schools, with Jacob and Rebekah as mirrors in which to see ourselves. Surely every one sees that their lying was mean. It was a case of getting profit by "false pretenses." If men and women generally should adopt the habit of lying, society would go back to barbarism. We could have no courts if witnesses lied whenever it was likely to help them or their friends. The false witness is also a traitor, for he is endangering the very foundations of government. So is that worst of all civil liars, the public officer, who swears to enforce the laws and is a liar every hour of his term afterwards—a perjurer also. What would happen to the great fabric of business if lying, now so frequent, should become the rule, and men should make false notes and false checks and false invoices oftener than true ones?

We have previously noted the uselessness of the lying of Abraham and Isaac even when it seemed that they must lie to save life. And in the case of Rebekah and Jacob lying to help God keep his word was yet more ridiculous. How angry you get if one says, "You are a liar." That is a healthy sign that you still instinctively regard lying as dishonorable. And yet the very person who resents being called a liar thinks nothing of being a liar day after day, in word and deed, pretending he is himself what he is not, and which is a lie in its worst form of hypocrisy, that the thing he sells is something else than it really is.

Let us not only speak truly, but be true. "Lord, make me real."

Lying Will Out

Mr. Jacob Burkett tells the story of his boyhood. His mother gave him a basket of popcorn to plant. After planting a number of rows under a broiling sun, he could not see that the grains had sensibly lessened in number and the task seemed to be endless. He dug a hole, dumped the remainder into it, and told his mother that he had planted all the corn. She doubted and said, "Jake, if you have told me a lie that corn will tell on you." The weather was seasonable and sun and showers soon brought up the corn. She marched him into the field and showed him the thick stalks that had shot up from his wholesale planting. The truthful grains had told on him.

The Esaus of to-day are all about us—those who sacrifice future health and honor to present appetites and passions. The Bible calls him who thus trifles with his sacred possibilities, a "profane person" (Heb. 12: 16). It would seem incredible that a man thirty years of age really sold the headship of the family and the major part of his father's great estate for a few minutes' enjoyment of a dish of soup, if that history was not repeating itself all about us every day. Thousands of young men and young women every day sacrifice health and reputation and length of days and eternity for a few minutes of sinful pleasure, like the drunkard, who would "sell out heaven for something warm, to stop that horrible inward shrinking."

An Old Employee Gone Home

Charles Percy Bagnall, an aged and valued employee of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and for several years in charge of the proof room, recently passed away, at his home in Brooklyn, at the ripe age of sixty-eight years. Mr. Bagnall was born and educated in Ireland, and came to the United States in 1876. He became connected with some of the leading newspapers and held various responsible positions. He was a strong, forcible writer, with a command of clear and vigorous English. His kindly disposition and his simple, conscientious manner of life and conduct won the general esteem of his associates.

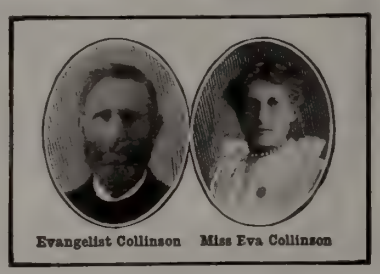
From Ship's Bridge to Pulpit

THE lives of many city missionaries read like romance. Such a life has been that of the Rev. W. H. Collinson, evangelist of the United Christian Workers City Mission Church, Bronx, N. Y. Left as a waif at a London door, some one took him in. Soon homeless again, as a mere boy he was taken on a fishing smack to the North Sea fishing grounds, and he helped bring the harvests of the ocean to the famous Billingsgate Market in London. Here he heard D. L. Moody and was converted. He had the aid and sympathy of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and soon was preaching the Word to fishermen in the market and those engaged in deep-sea fishing in the North Sea. He there witnessed the spiritual transformation of many lives. He had greater influence with the men because he had learned "to scrub the cabin, make puddings, mend nets, splice the ropes, steer the ship and command a vessel."



Evangelist Collinson Miss Eva Collinson

His first pulpit was a three-legged table in a barn, where he spoke to forty farmers on "Being Saved by Grace." His best loved work was among the fishermen, and he was the first recipient of a silk "Bethel Flag" from the late Baroness Burdett Coutts.

Like many seafaring men, the Captain likes change of scene, but is ever ready to engage in hard service on sea or land for the lost. He followed for a while John Sampson, the "Cornwall preacher," and was a co-worker with Gipsy Smith. At Steelton, Pa., he started a mission among 3,000 steel workers and held "shop" meetings. He recently held Gospel services at the Union Church, Corona, N. Y. His earnest addresses abounded in nautical terms and pictures, adding zest to his exhortations.

At the City Mission Church in the Bronx the Gospel is preached, the sick are visited and situations are secured for the unemployed. Mrs. Collinson, his "first mate," helps in his Gospel services and his daughter Eva, the "second mate" of the Gospel ship, is also the musician. Together they hold meetings on board ship, in saloons, barber shops and factories. Their work has been supported by voluntary gifts and has been a means of blessing to many.

Lincoln University's Work

General O. O. Howard writes: "Last year Lincoln University had over seventy students who made profession of faith in Christ. From our Normal Department we sent out fifty of our teachers—that is, teachers prepared in the Institution. They had schools in mountain districts, fifty in number, and averaged over sixty pupils in each school. This enabled us to make the wants of three thousand youths by first-class teachers. We are needing now our main building, which will cost us $50,000, using student labor as far as possible. We have the direct promise already of $10,000 toward it, and when we reach $25,000 I am quite confident that a single friend of the Institution will contribute the other $25,000. So I hope that our friends will not forget us in their contributions, be they large or small."

Pure at the Source

Milk is the chief article of food in the sick room and hospital. Every physician and nurse should know the source of supply before ordering in any form. It is not enough to know that it comes as "country milk." Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, the original and leading Brand since 1857.—Integrity and experience behind every can.

The Greatest of Musical Inventions---the Two-Horn

DUPLEX
Phonograph On Trial

IT is the one phonograph that gives you all the sound vibrations. It has not only two horns, but two vibrating diaphragms in its sound box. Other phonographs have one diaphragm and one horn. The Duplex gets all the volume of music; other phonographs get but half. Not only do you get more volume, but you get a better tone---clearer, sweeter, more like the original.

Our handsomely illustrated FREE CATALOGUE will explain fully the superiority of The Duplex. Don't allow anyone to persuade you to buy any other make of phonograph without first sending for our catalogue.

The Duplex is not sold by dealers nor in stores. We are Actual Manufacturers, not jobbers, and sell only direct from our factory to the user, eliminating all middlemen's profits. That is why we are able to manufacture and deliver the best phonograph made for only $29.85. We save you exactly $70.15 on the price.

Each horn is 30 in. long with 17-in. bell. Cabinet 18 in. x 14 in. x 10 in.

$29.85 Freight Prepaid

Sold through dealers the Duplex would cost $100. Our price is $29.85

7 Days' FREE Trial

We allow you seven days' free trial in your own home in which to decide whether you wish to keep it or not. If the machine does not make good our every claim—volume, quality, saving, satisfaction—just send it back. We'll stand all freight charges both ways.

NO MONEY IN ADVANCE

If you object to sending cash, you may deposit it in trust with your banker, merchant or postmaster, to be returned to you if the machine is not satisfactory to you. You are the only judge. As we pay freight, it costs you nothing to try.

Our Free Catalogue will interest you. Send for it to-day.

The Poor Ye Have Always With You

NO picture of our Lord and Saviour is more clearly imprinted upon the mental vision of his people; none was ever quite so close to the hearts of the multitude who have worshiped him through the centuries, as that in which we behold him blessing little children.

When he was with us, our Savour said,
"Suffer the children to come unto me";
Still he stands with arms outspread,
As now they gather round his knee—
And, though there's room for all the rest,
I think he loves the children best.

And as, "when he was with us," his attitude toward the children was one of peculiar tenderness and benediction, so when his earthly life was over, he bequeathed as a precious legacy to the love and care of those who would be like him the children of all time—of every race and condition. To the shepherds of his people he says, as he did to Peter, "Feed my lambs."

The streets of certain sections of our great cities swarm with young children whose only earthly heritage is sorrow. Especially during the bitter cold of the winter season are their sufferings and hardships severe. We often pass the neglected little creatures without a thought, forgetting that our Lord said: "See that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father." The Master has given a very direct commission to his servants—shall we venture to disobey, and "offend one of these little ones?" A great writer has said: "Christ built no churches, endowed no hospitals. He just loved—and so, conquered." Few among us are so abundantly prospered that we can do great material things for God, but not one is so humble or so lowly that he cannot "love, and so conquer."

Our illustration on the cover of this issue from the Illustrated London News) is typical of his perpetual attitude. It portrays the benign, protecting presence of the children's Friend hovering, unseen by its object, in benison above the pitiful, homeless figure of a sleeping child of the streets. For these he died, and his love and compassion are ever around them. May we each find in the simple lesson a renewed inspiration, an insistent reminder that we are his almoners, and that to serve him acceptably we must not forget the ministry of service to "his little ones."

India's Oldest Mission Church

Dear Dr. Klopsch : I wish to acknowledge, with grateful thanks, the sum of $142.38 received from you, and contributed by friends through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD towards the completion of the new church building at Bombay. The debt of gratitude due to you and to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by the Christians in India, increases day by day and will never be forgotten.

It is now more than two months since the appeal for the church at Bombay appeared in your issue of December 5th. In the meantime, other urgent requests have crowded upon your readers, so that ours may have been overlooked. I trust that generous friends may yet enable us to complete and furnish this house of worship for the oldest church on mission ground organized by American Christians.

A DAY OF VICTORY IN BASTAR, INDIA

From a Missionary Correspondent

MANY years ago a German Mission tried to enter Bastar. The old Rajah was unfriendly, and the attempt failed. In 1891 the Rajah died, and the following year the State came under the British Court of Wards. Previous to this the State was closed to missions. In 1891 I tried to make a tour over the State, but sickness prevented. But when, in 1893, I met Mr. Frazer, the then Commissioner of Raipur, in Bastar, and told him of my having been hindered from coming into the State in 1891, he said: "I consider this a chapter of God in history." He pointed out that if I had come then, I would have found the Rajah and his Dewan and the British Political Agent all opposed to missions. I would have found the door closed. But a year had seen the Rajah take his last departure, the Dewan had been thrown from his horse and killed, and the Political Agent had been changed. The door was open now, and he, now taking over the State on the behalf of the British Government, welcomed me, to help in doing what could be done for the uplift of these long neglected and backward peoples.

In 1893 I secured land, and then followed a great struggle to get our buildings. Mission work properly began in 1898, when one native preacher was appointed. In 1898 fruitage began, and what shall I say of the last eight years' work.

On March 25 just passed, we had a mass meeting of as many Christians as we could gather into Jagdalpur. We have now 1,000 Christians in this field, and they are scattered through more than 100 villages, and some of these are more than thirty miles from headquarters. We succeeded in having on Sunday, the 25th, no less than 420 persons in. At 2:30 P. M. we entered the Dr. Klopsch School Chapel to behold a sea of faces. The School is 60 x 40 feet, and all sat in rows running clean across the chapel. There were nearly twenty rows of them. What a sight! There was scarcely room for any more. Yet less than half our Christians could get in. Few in that company had been Christians six years. Some were baptized that very morning. More than four hundred had been rescued from heathenism here since 1898.

The first part of this memorable afternoon's programme was a testimony meeting. This writer was in charge. Forty-five minutes were given up to this. I heard eighty-three men and women, one after another, in that forty-five minutes, tell the story of Jesus' love as it had come to them. As many as a dozen verses of Hindi bhajans, a verse at a time, were interspersed.

Following this service came another. It was the time for the quarterly offering. A large piece of bagging was spread at the right hand of the preacher's table. In a little time, more than 400 people walked past the preacher's table, and as they passed, dropped upon the sacking, spice, eggs, salt, paddy, and a chicken came as well. One piece of silver only, the other coins were copper. Rs. 15 or $5 was the sum of the offering.

Then followed a sermon in Oriya by W. T. Ward, and exhortation with earnestness and fervor of spirit. At last a call was made for those renouncing sin, to stand. One after another they rose, till half a hundred were upon their feet. When they were called to the front all over the house others began to rise and follow them till they had to be told that they must kneel where they were. All were bidden to give themselves to prayer. At first there began to rise a murmur of voices. But soon there was as the sound of many waters. More than 200 persons all at once were engaged in importunate prayer. God's Spirit moved on the great deep of human hearts in a strange and real way. It did not last very long. But that God came down to men none could doubt. For a week we had been earnestly crying to God for a Pentecostal day. Seven praying bands in different parts of India were in prayer for us. God answered their prayers and ours.

The impression and memory of that hour will never be forgotten by many. Its influence will long be felt in every part of this field.

Next was a procession to and through the town. It was bazaar day. Several thousand people from all directions had come in for buying and selling. When the people lined up in front of the mission, four deep, we had a procession of about one hundred and fifty yards in length. At the front was the missionary mounted on his horse, and following were musicians, banners, pictures, illustrating the life of Christ, and pennons. One large banner was inscribed in Hindi, "Bastar for Christ." Another in Oriya, "Bastar is Christ's." Thus we marched through the midst of an astonished but respectful multitude, whose faces declared their astonishment as they saw proof that the Christians of Bastar were no feeble folk. We marched through and back again, and ended the day with a short preaching service. C. B. WARD, Presiding Elder.

Called Higher

In the death of Mr. Henry H. Wagoner, one of her most widely known and honored Christian philanthropists was lost to St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Wagoner carried his eighty-two years lightly, and his pastor epitomized the history of his personality when he said: "He was straight physically, morally and mentally." Mr. Wagoner gave many thousands of dollars to charity; churches, hospitals and colleges were alike recipients of his generosity. He is survived by a widow and two sons.

MORE BOXES OF GOLD

And Many Greenbacks.

325 boxes of Gold and Greenbacks will be sent to persons who write the most interesting and truthful letters of experience on the following topics.

1. How have you been affected by coffee drinking and by changing from coffee to Postum.

2. Give name and account of one or more coffee drinkers who have been hurt by it and have been induced to quit and use Postum.

3. Do you know any one who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?

4. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make it clear, black, and with a snappy, rich taste?

5. Have you ever found a better way to make it than to use four heaping tea-spoonfuls to the pint of water, let stand on stove until real boiling begins, and beginning at that time when actual boiling starts, boil full 15 minutes more to extract the flavor and food value. (A piece of butter the size of a pea will prevent boiling over.) This contest is confined to those who have used Postum prior to the date of this advertisement.

Be honest and truthful, don't write poetry or fanciful letters, just plain, truthful statements.

Contest will close June 1st, 1907 and no letters received after that date will be admitted. Examinations of letters will be made by three judges, not members of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd. Their decisions will be fair and final, and a neat little box containing a $10 gold piece sent to each of the five writers of the most interesting letters, a box containing a $5 gold piece to each of the 20 next best, a $2 greenback to each of the 100 next best, and a $1 greenback to each of the 200 next best, making cash prizes distributed to 325 persons.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends and see how many among you can win prizes. It is a good, honest competition and in the best kind of a cause, and costs the competitors absolutely nothing.

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

Pentecostal Revival in Illinois

BINGDON, Illinois, has just been swept by a revival such as has rarely been witnessed in the State. The le community has been turned upside n and transformed. There have been seven hundred converts and scores of sliders reclaimed in a town of 2,500. converts include gamblers, drunkards, ness men, college students, factory em- ees, grand army veterans, a gang of h young men, an infidel of French in and an editor.

ospel songs are now heard on the ts by day and night, and cottage er-meetings are held everywhere. The atmosphere seems surcharged with tual fervor. The movement has been ducted under the leadership of two g evangelists, Ira Evans Hicks and . Galloway, assisted by Homer Alex- r, brother of the gospel singer. The tings began in the largest church in town, seating eight hundred, but it was kly overflowed, and a wooden taber- le was built in three days by fifty vol- eer workers. The farmers caught the fi and drove in from the surrounding ricts. On two occasions 2,200 crowded ird the building.

ne of the converts was the editor of cal paper. Desiring to help the move- t, he turned his paper over to the evan- sts to get out three numbers. They ed three "revival editions" filled with s of the awakening in Abingdon and where. The leading feature of each e was two columns of Scripture, prom- tly displayed on the first page. These vival editions" recalled Charles M. ldon's famous experiment in journalism. y were a success and aroused interest ughout the entire community.

bingdon is a factory town, is the seat Hedding College, and has excellent pub- schools. Like a tidal wave, the revival pt through each of these institutions. the public schools many children are Christians. In Hedding College scores e converted, and few of the regular dents remain outside the fold. In the wagon factory and in all other fac- es there were many conversions.

Prayer was the secret of the pentecostal akening. The evangelists and their pers spent an hour each day in united yer, in addition to their private de- ions. Following the example of the ders, a "burden for souls" fell upon the ple, and they gave themselves to prayer never before. During the last week of meetings, over one hundred people dged themselves to spend at least thirty utes daily in earnest prayer for the aved, and for a mighty outpouring of d's Spirit upon the community. Most ristians had prayer lists and their prayers re answered in a wonderful way. At woman's prayer-meeting, over fifty tified that one or more on their list had epted Christ. One young lady said lve on her list had been saved.

Even the children have been fired with assion for souls. Last week two little ls spent an hour daily in prayer, while oy said he meant to spend two hours ily in prayer. The entire town is honey- mbed with children's prayer-meetings d Testament leagues. The members of leagues agree to carry a Testament ways with them, to read it daily and to deavor continually to win souls. At ekly prayer-meetings, conducted by the ildren themselves, boys and girls give owing testimonials, and all lead in prayer.

The red-letter day of the revival was e day last week, when the people gave emselves up to fasting and prayer. The eeting at the tabernacle lasted twelve urs, ending after 10.30 P.M. In the ternoon the people agonized in prayer, id as a result two of the most notorious aracters in the town were saved before the service closed. One has since led nine others to Christ.

Abingdon booksellers are now having hard work to supply the demand for Bibles. One of the stores wired twice to Chicago, but not getting a sufficient supply, sent a rush order to New York. A clerk sold thirty-two in one afternoon. He said some one came in every ten or fifteen minutes to find out whether a new consignment of Testaments had arrived.

Perhaps the conversions which created the most widespread interest were those of an ex-saloon keeper, his wife, five sons and four daughters—eleven in all. One daughter only was a Christian before the meetings began, now only one brother remains outside the fold. The father has established a family altar. All twelve are working for the reclamation of the thirteenth one.

Will not the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pray for this unsaved one, and for all the unsaved in Abingdon, that it may be a town swept clean for Christ?

GEO. T. B. DAVIS.

A College with Many Holidays

The students of the American College for Girls at Constantinople are rich, far too rich, in holidays, for among them they observe three Christmases, two New Years (each three days in length), two Moslem bairams and one or two Hebrew feasts. As many of these sacred days are proceded by a season of fasting, there is either a feast or famine in the College, and sometimes both at once, at different tables, for a number of weeks. The two New Years' days are accounted for by the Old and New Style calenders (the Moslem and Hebrew years do not begin at this season), which also accounts for two of the three Christmases, the Latin being celebrated on the 25th of December, New Style, and the Greek on the 25th of December, Old Style. The third Christmas is the consequence of bad weather some fifteen centuries ago, which prevented the Armenian delegation from attending the Œcumenical Council, at which the date of Christmas was changed from January 6th to December 25th, so the Gregorian Christmas is still celebrated on the former date.

T. HESTER DONALDSON JENKINS.

FOREIGN MISSIONS AT HOME

THE CHICAGO TRACT SOCIETY has had in its employ during the past year missionaries speaking seventeen different languages. They have visited 66,100 homes and placed in these homes Bibles, Testaments and Christian books in thirty-two different languages, aggregating 36,350 volumes.

A DIFFERENCE

It Paid This Man to Change Food.

"What is called 'good living' eventually brought me to a condition quite the reverse of good health," writes a N. Y. merchant.

"Improper eating told on me till my stomach became so weak that food nauseated me, even the lightest and simplest lunch and I was much depressed after a night of uneasy slumber, unfitting me for business.

"This condition was discouraging, as I could find no way to improve it. Then I saw the advertisement of Grape-Nuts food, and decided to try it, and became delighted with the result.

"For the past three years I have used Grape-Nuts and nothing else for my breakfast and for lunch before retiring. It speedily set my stomach right and I congratulate myself that I have regained my health. There is no greater comfort for a tired man than a lunch of Grape-Nuts. It insures restfull sleep, and an awakening in the morning with a feeling of buoyant courage and hopefullness.

"Grape-Nuts has been a boon to my whole family. It has made of our 2-year-old boy, who used to be unable to digest much of anything, a robust, healthy, little rascal weighing 32 pounds. Mankind certainly owes a debt of gratitude to the expert who invented this perfect food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason."

THE coming of Egg-O-See causes enthusiasm in the family. It's a food that appeals to the appetite, satisfies and delights it, and then goes about its work of giving strength to the entire system.

EGG-O-SEE 10¢

IT is a "festive board" where Egg-O-See is served. It brings good nature, pleases all sorts of appetites, and helps digestion by its flake-like form and the unique food value of purified and prepared wheat—the special Egg-O-See process.

Cold Days Demand Energy and Egg-O-See supplies it generously to old and young. Children grow rugged and healthy on Egg-O-See, and grown-ups find it gives them steady nerves and clear heads. Don't think of Egg-O-See as A DIET; it is a natural, delicious, energy-giving food which puts one in touch with nature and brings such gratifying results and overflowing life that it soon proves the mistake one makes in eating too much indigestible meat and pastry. Be natural by eating nature's food. No one can be natural with an appetite which has been falsely educated. Back to nature via Egg-O-See and outdoors.

10 Liberal Breakfasts 10c

In Canada the price of Egg-O-See is 15c, two packages for 25c. How to get well, keep well by natural means—bathing, exercise, food, etc.—and how to use Egg-O-See for every meal in the week is told in our expensively prepared booklet, "-back to Nature," sent free. We are glad to send it. You will be glad to get it.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Patriotism and Peace*

THE movement to acquaint the rising generation with the new condition that make war an anachronism in the civilized world to-day, and to point out a substitute for it which is already practicable, is not confined to American schools. French teachers have for years led in this movement; in one winter, 600 illustrated lectures on peace and war were arranged by French teachers. The numerous battle scenes which have decorated school walls are gradually being removed and "Lectures, Historiques, Pour la Paix" have been prepared for school reading, which are simple, graphic, and effective. At the Congress held at Lille, in 1905, the Association of French Public School Teachers, with a membership of 15,000, declared in its resolutions that "the teachers are energetic disciples of peace. Their watchword is, 'War against war.'"

At the International Congress, which met in 1905, at Luttich, in which eighteen nations were represented, including many German and Austrian teachers, an entire day was devoted to the theme: "What can the schools contribute to the spread of the peace idea?" Their conclusion was that the entire instruction in all the schools must be permeated with the peace idea. "Instruction in history," they said, "should be of a kind to show the great law of solidarity which unites all men, all the intellectual and spiritual workers of the past."

Ex-president Daniel C. Gilman at the Mohonk Conference (1905) said: "If you can get say one-tenth of the enthusiasm that the young men bestow upon the athletic field directed to the study of these great international questions, the great contests between nations, and the proper mode of dealing with them, the victory is ours. It may be desirable to initiate some measures by which in every college in the land, beginning with the older ones, Harvard and Yale, whose example is likely to be followed by the younger ones, until we reach California, international arbitration shall be studied. Let there be in every college and university an assembly of the students, and do not let the professors do all the talking; let some one from a distance come and tell the story and throw the discussion open to the young men. . . . I would have the same movement go into the colleges for young women, so that the educated young men and young women of our country may grow up breathing the air of international arbitration as freely and as naturally as they do the air that supports their life."

A committee of seven distinguished educators was selected to promote the study of arbitration in colleges.

Every year brings an increasing number of international Congresses, such as the Agricultural Congress proposed by the King of Italy; the Medical Congress, which gathered 3,000 physicians from over the world to France in the summer of 1905; Trades Union Congresses, bringing thousands of delegates who represent millions of workmen; Peace Congresses, Teachers' Congresses, the Inter-Parliamentary Union, and others too numerous to mention. The latest to be proposed is by the Chairman of the London County Council, who plans to bring together annually representatives of every capital of 500,000 to discuss municipal methods. In conjunction with this Congress he also proposes an exchange of pupils between the schools controlled by the municipalities holding membership in the Congress. These various international bonds of interest are multiplying in geometric ratio, and the generation now at school must have its sympathies and imagination trained to meet the new conditions.

*From Patriotism and the New Internationalism, a Manual for Teachers, by Lucia Ames Mead: published by Ginn & Co., Boston.

Books Received

An illustrated book of description has recently appeared which deserves to be ranked as literature. A Wanderer in London is not a manual of formal description, but a record of vivid personal impressions. Says the author: "Of books on London there is no end, but London is so vast and so varied that to one who would wander with a plastic mind, day after day, in its streets and among its treasures, there is not a little difficulty in deciding where to begin, and there is even greater difficulty in knowing where to end." The book is a treasure to the inexperienced but cultivated traveler who visits London for the first time. Illustrated in color and monotone. Pp. 312. Price $1.75. By the same author, Mr. E. V. Lucas, Listeners' Lure appears on the list of recent fiction. It is an engaging and delightful book, written in the form of a series of letters and dealing lightly with the manners and problems of refined society. Its delineation of character is subtle and its humor genial, although the admirers of Mr. Lucas feel that they cannot afford to lose him from among the ranks of the writers of picturesque descriptions of travel. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 284. Price $1.50.

Though there have been countless books of Bible stories for young people put before the public from time to time, religious leaders and critics best calculated to form a correct conclusion all agree that in The Bible for Young People, compiled by Mrs. Joseph B. Gilder, has been produced the very best and most thoroughly satisfactory book of its kind. Its aim, to make the Bible more attractive to boys and girls, has been admirably accomplished. The simple beauty of the edition, with its twenty-four full-page reproductions from the old masters, is well designed to stimulate the child's pride of possession. The grand old stories are told by narrative, instead of by chapter and verse, and the life of Jesus is put together in one continuous account, made up from the four evangelists. Pp. 475. Price $1.50. The Century Company, New York.

The Peaceful Patriarch

By Mrs. M. Baxter

WE read regarding Ishmael and Isaac, "Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not necessarily the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed" (Rom. 9: 7, 8). The life of Isaac was the fulfilled promise of the living God, received by faith: and when the life was required at his father's hands, it was preserved by the Word of God, again received and held by faith. Thus is he the type to us of a life having its origin and its continual support in the Word and promises of God: "We, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise"

Isaac's was not a life of sorely tried faith, like that of his father; he stood on the ground which Abraham, as the pioneer, had won for him, in a path of unlimited trust. He was also a man of prayer. As Eliezer, whom Abraham had sent to Mesopotamia, that he might seek a wife for Isaac, was returning with Rebekah, "Isaac went out to meditate (or to pray) in the field at the eventide" (Gen. 24: 63). "I shall be anointed with fresh oil," says the Psalmist (Ps. 92: 10); and no meetings or Bible readings, no intercourse with other Christians, can be a substitute for the "fresh oil" of God's anointing by the Holy Ghost. Every spiritual gift or knowledge which we receive from God, is an accession of life, and life needs to be sustained and exercised; just as in our natural life, air, food and water are necessaries, so it is with our spiritual life. Daniel, in the midst of the affairs of the kingdom, found time to pray three times a day (Dan. 6: 19). The Psalmist said, "Seven times a day will I praise Thee" (Ps. 119: 164).

In Isaac's family and household it is very evident that prayer was the ruling feature. When Rebekah was in perplexity, she did not go to her neighbors, or even to her husband, but she "went to inquire of the Lord." And it was not in vain. He explained to her that He would give her two sons, which should be two nations, "and the one people shall be stronger than the other; and the elder shall serve the younger" (Gen. 25: 21-23). Why is it not the habit in all Christian families to carry all circumstances, general and particular, to the Lord in prayer?

There was one stain upon Isaac, one which recalls to us the immense importance of the example of parents. Abraham had twice prevaricated, once in Egypt and once in Gerar, and had spoken of Sarah as his sister. Isaac did the same. God had appeared to him, and confirmed to him his promise made to Abraham. Sad to say, it was just after this that Isaac fell into the sin of denying his wife. Was not then the promise of God sufficient? Had he forgotten how, when his fatherAbraham had lifted up his knife to slay him in obedience to God's command, the angel of the Lord called out of heaven to interpose and to deliver him? and should he now tell a lie to save his life from a danger which was only a possible danger after all? God mercifully watched over Rebekah, and Isaac had the humiliation of confessing both his untruth and his cowardice before the unbelieving Philistines.

"Then Isaac sowed in that land, and received in the same year an hundredfold." It may not have been that Isaac was a better farmer than were the Philistines, nor yet that his land was better than the rest of the land of Canaan, but God had said, "I will be with thee, and will bless thee," and the same Word which brought into being light and life and vegetation in the time of the creation, was also active in securing Isaac's prosperity.

No man is really blessed of God, either in temporal or in spiritual things, without provoking the envy of those who know not God, and Isaac was no exception. "The Philistines envied him," and their envy took a practical turn, for they first stopped with earth all the wells which Abraham's servants had digged, so as to kill Isaac's cattle with drought, and then Abimelech said unto him, "Go from us; for thou art much mightier than we." Isaac did not contend the point, but went to the valley of Gerar, and patiently undid, with the help of his servants, the evil which the Philistines had done him, he digged again the wells which the Philistines had stopped.

Any Woman Can Have Good Health, a Refined Face and Good Figure
MANY a woman has surprised her husband and friends by giving 15 minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to special directions which I give to her for the care of health, face and figure. Over 20,000 women have studied themselves under my direction in the past five years.
Are You Tired of Drugs?
I use no drugs. I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercise for nerves and muscles controlling such organs, bring a good circulation of warm blood which I purify by teaching correct breathing and by prescribing the special diet, bathing, etc., adapted to each individual. I strengthen all your vital organs, lungs, heart, nerve centers and send your blood bounding through your veins as when a child.
I develop or reduce your figure to correct proportions. I teach you to stand and to walk with an ease and dignity which at once bespeak culture and refinement.
Clear Skin and a Good Figure
Every figure can be rounded out symmetrically unless bones are missing or tissues entirely wasted away, and the woman who carries from 20 to 100 pounds of superfluous flesh every time she moves has my sympathy—but she does not need to do so—and surely it is every woman's privilege and duty to keep herself attractive and pleasing.

What My Pupils Say of My Work
I wish every nervous teacher could know what benefit is to be derived from your physical culture
I have lost 73 pounds, and was never better. I look ten years younger.
My biliousness is entirely relieved.
Just think how I have gained, since I began with you, from 112 to 137½ lbs in one year
My catarrh and lungs are much better and my body, which was a bony, crooked structure, is actually beginning to look like your picture of correct pose
My head is steady, the confused feeling having gone. It is the best money ever spent for myself
Just think, Miss Cocroft, before I took up your work I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I could digest tacks. I am so happy
Personal Instructions
Write me fully, also letting me know your faults of figure, etc. I will make a personal study of your case and will let you know whether I can help you or not. Your letter will be held in strict confidence. I never publish letters without special permission, though I can send you hundreds of testimonials from women I have helped, who have given me permission to show their letters.

Dish Water that Digs
TAKE a very old coffee-cup, or a dish, that is crisscrossed with lines—and yellow from use.
Wash it thoroughly with soap and water. Dry it.
Hold it close to your face, and then sniff.
That sour, unpleasant odor tells you that there are decayed food particles and germs lurking in all of these tiny cracks.
And that soap and water have had no effect upon them.
Even the finest new china will absorb impurities and health-menacing germs—so will tinware and utensils.
Now you see how important this matter of dish washing really is—and how necessary it is to have dish water that digs.
GOLD DUST is a positive antiseptic that goes deep into hidden places—routs every germ.
No soap, borax, soda, ammonia, naphtha, kerosene or other foreign ingredient needed with GOLD DUST
Gold Dust is an honest vegetable-oil soap, ground into a smooth, golden powder. It instantly dissolves in hot or cold, hard or soft water, produces its own rich lather, and does all of the hard part of the task.
For washing clothes and dishes, scrubbing floors, cleaning woodwork, oil cloth, silverware and tinware, polishing brasswork, cleaning bath room pipes, refrigerators, etc., softening hard water and making the finest soft soap.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

Reader. I have not seen any answer to the question asked in the MAIL-BAG several weeks ago as to the origin of the phrase, "A little bird told me." May not the answer be found in Ecclesiastes 10: 20?

Very likely that is the origin of the phrase, which is known in many lands.

F. B., Hinckley, Minn. 1. What causes a star to fall? 2. Do they appear again after falling? 3. What is the meaning of the phrase "Second to None?"

1. Real stars do not fall. The so-called "falling" or "shooting stars" are really meteors. True stars have their fixed courses and orbits that can be calculated mathematically. Professor Lockyer says: "The average number of meteors which traverse the atmosphere daily, and which are large enough to be visible to the naked eye on a dark, clear night is no less than 7,500,000." 2. Probably not. 3. It is the motto of a famous British regiment and means that in courage, dash and general efficiency no other regiment surpasses them.

A. M., Keokuk, Iowa. How many people are employed on a large ocean liner?

The Cunard Line management informs us that the crews on the transatlantic steamers vary in size according to the number of passengers carried and the necessity for more or less stewards. The steamships Carmania and Caronia, 20,000 tons each, when having a full passenger list carry officers and crew to the number of 480 each. The steamships Lusitania and Mauretania, which will be added to the line next summer, will each require, it is estimated, a crew of 800.

S. F. L., Dillsburgh, Pa. Please tell me something of Angelica Kaufmann. What were her most famous paintings, where was she born, etc.?

Maria Anna Angelica Catharina Kaufmann was born in 1741, at Coire, Switzerland. At an early age she showed a marked proficiency in painting, and in 1754 her family moved to Milan to afford her special facilities for study. In 1765 she went to England, and was there made one of the thirty-six original members of the Royal Academy. She was twice married, dying in Rome in 1807. Her most celebrated work is comprised of portraits, her own being now in galleries in Munich, Dresden and London. Other well-known pictures are "Ariadne Abandoned by Theseus" and "Religion Surrounded by the Virtues."

L. O., Lawrence, Kan. What are the motets mentioned in the history of music?

They were short pieces of church music. Some date from the end of the 13th century. Fine ones were written in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Reader. What is the present production of Portland cement in this country as compared with that of say thirty-five years ago?

Thirty-five years ago the total annual production was 3,000 barrels; in 1906 it was 4,000,000 barrels. It is not in the hands of a trust. Mr. O. U. Miracle, of Minneapolis, Minn., a leading authority in the business, supplies these figures. He adds: "The output for last year would have built a cement sidewalk, five feet wide, three and a-half times around the globe."

Mrs. A. J. K., Pontiac, Ill. Is the name Daphna a Scripture name?

You probably mean Daphne. It is not a Bible name, but the name of a heathen deity—a river nymph.

H. K., Hatfield, Mass. What was the Cisalpine Republic?

It was a republic formed by the French, in 1797, in the northern part of Italy. Its existence was acknowledged by the Emperor of Germany the same year. In 1798 it was named the Italian Republic, with Napoleon Bonaparte as President. It became part of the kingdom of Italy in 1805.

T. K. S., New York. In which of Sir Walter Scott's works can I find the poem beginning "That day of wrath, that dreadful day?"

Scott, in his Lay of the Last Minstrel, borrows the former part of a famous mediæval poem, Dies Irae, the composition of Thomas of Celaus, a native of Abruzzi, who died in 1255 A.D.

Mrs. R. A. S., Fonda, N. Y. When was the last total eclipse of the sun (about 100 years ago) visible at Albany, N. Y.?

The eclipse occurred on June 16, 1806. I am unable to give the exact hour at Albany, but think it was about midday. Oh, how vivid is my recollection of my father's recital of its glories, when I was a little boy, as he observed it at Deruyter, Madison County, N. Y. For three or four minutes death seemed to reign on the earth. Hens went to roost, chickens gathered under their mothers' wings and bees returned to their hives, as at night. It may not be generally known that all eclipses of both the sun and moon repeat themselves with undeviating accuracy every 18 years, 10 days, 7 hours and 46 minutes. It occurred again in 1824, 1842, 1860, 1878, 1896, and will occur again on August 21, 1914. I observed it on July 28, 1878, at Denver, Colo., and also at Nelson in 1896. The belt of totality in 1914 will be through Russia and Siberia. No solar eclipse can remain total longer than 7 minutes and 58 seconds—only once in several thousand years. The average duration is about 3½ minutes. The two great eclipses of 1955 (India) and 1973 (Africa) will last over 7 minutes, that is, the totality will last that long. Next year there will be an annular eclipse visible in Florida and farther west.

I recently received a letter, enclosing stamp, from a surveyor in Texas, asking how far the Pole Star is from the pole and in what direction. The pole of the earth's axis is now about 1¼ degrees from the star and a line drawn from it to the star that joins the handle of the Great Dipper to the bowl. LEWIS SWIFT.

Marathon, N. Y.

A. M. A., Chicago, Ill. From what college or university was Charles E. Hughes, Governor of the Empire State, graduated?

Governor Hughes graduated from Brown University in 1881, and from the Columbia Law School in 1884. He is a trustee of Brown University.

W. G. G., Baltimore, Md. A. says that the taking of a life in any way is breaking the Fifth Commandment (thou shalt not kill). B. says: In case of punishment by the State, such as hanging, electrocuting, etc., it is justifiable and not breaking the Fifth Commandment. Who is correct?

The attitude of advanced Christian thought to-day is opposed to capital punishment. We do not believe Jesus would have advocated capital punishment. The whole question, pro and con, is a very large one, and has already been discussed in a Symposium in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to which we refer you.

F. D. E., Cherokee, Kansas. I have read your article about Patti, the great singer. I would like to know her nationality and any items of interest; also something of Jenny Lind.

Adelina Patti was born February 19, 1843, at Madrid, Spain, of an Italian father and Spanish mother, both public singers. She came to America as a child, and her musical training began here. She was married first, in 1868, to an equerry of Napoleon III. Her second husband was Nicolini, the tenor singer. After his death she married the Baron Cedarstrom.

Jennie Lind was born in Stockholm, Sweden, October 6, 1820. Married, in Boston, Mass., 1852, Otto Goldschmidt. She was as unique for her bountiful charities as for her marvelous voice, giving all her American earnings for the founding of scholarships and other charities in native Sweden. While in England built a hospital in Liverpool and a la wing of another in London.

M. E. B., Dunlap, Tenn. Please tell me what letters "I H S" on the pictures of the c mean?

"I H S" is an inscription used in t Christian Church from an early date church furniture and painted church w dows. The interpretations which have be given to the letters are threefold. One that they are meant to represent the La words, In hoc signo vinces (by this sign th shalt conquer), taken from the lumino cross which, it is said, was miraculously d played in the sky before the Emperor Co stantine and his army. Others make the the initials of the words, Jesu Hominu Salvator (Jesus, Saviour of men). St another opinion (and the earliest Christi emblems found confirm this opinion) that they are the first three letters in t Greek word, meaning Jesus.

R. S. F., Sand Brook, N. J. 1. Is there a sto erected to mark the place where Major And was hung? If so, does it have an inscriptio 2. Had Isaac Van Wart, one of Andre's captor a son Philip?

1. Such a monument was erected in 18 by Cyrus W. Field, with an inscriptio composed by Dean Stanley. It was sha tered by an explosion of nitro-glycerin in '1882 by certain persons, who felt th the inscription implied censure of Gener Washington's sentence of execution. Write to Lenox Library, Fifth Avenue an Seventieth Street, for Van Wart genealogy

L. P., New Rochelle, N. Y. Is there any list i verse of the Presidents of the United States?

The following, by Mrs. E. C. Waid, o New York City, is one of the best. It wa originally printed in the Brooklyn Eagle:

Our Presidents, George Washington,
John Adams and Tom Jefferson,
James Madison, then James Monroe,
John Quincy Adams next, you know;
"Old Hickory" Jackson follows on,
And William Henry Harrison.
John Tyler, James K. Polk are o'er:
But Zac'ry Taylor leads Fillmore.
Frank Pierce precedes Buchanan's name,
Then Abr'am Lincoln, known to fame.
But, after Andrew Johnson's time
Ulysses Grant is next in line.
"De facto" Hayes in turn gives way
To James A. Garfield. Then the day
Of Chester Arthur, from whose hand
Sceptre passes to Clev-e-land.
When Harrison's single term is run
Comes Cleveland for another one.
Then "Prex" McKinley takes the power,
Roosevelt rules the present hour.

T. J. T., Meridian, Calif. How many signers of the Declaration of Independence were there? How many were Catholics? How many were Protestants? How many were not counted in any denomination?

There were fifty-five signers of the Declaration of Independence. Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, Md., was a Catholic. The New England men were Congregationalists, as that was the "State Church," and in order to hold office men were obliged to be members of that church. The rest were generally Episcopalians or Presbyterians. It is not possible to find out in every individual case, without an unreasonable amount of research, but probably all were connected with some denomination, because men of any standing in a community in those days were church members.

How to Start a Local China Famine Relief Committee

A number of people have written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stating that they would like to start a China Famine Relief Committee in their town, and asking for information concerning the best mode of procedure.

We should say that the first thing to do is to write down a number of names of public-spirited men and women, and to each of these address an invitation about as follows:

Kind Friend:

A sore famine has visited China. Millions of men, women, and children are affected. Multitudes must die of starvation unless help is promptly sent them. I am endeavoring to form a Relief Committee, and earnestly invite your co-operation. Will you serve as a member? Systematic effort will speedily result in generous contributions, and our community will thus be represented in this great international life-saving work. I enclose circular setting forth China's great need.

A meeting for the purpose of forming such a Relief Committee will be held in the parlor of.....(or lecture room of.....Church, or some other place adapted to the requirements) on Wednesday evening next, at eight o'clock. We are sure that we may count on your practical sympathy and hearty co-operation, and hope that you will find it convenient to join us in this movement.

Very cordially yours,

Send this letter to at least double the smallest number you may think sufficient to constitute the Committee. If possible, before you prepare the circular, get three or four clergymen of your town to join you in sending out the call, and at the same time to supply you with a goodly number of very desirable names to whom it may be addressed.

Before the meeting, write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for such literature as it may be able to provide, for the purpose of informing yourself on the real status of the China famine and the latest news concerning it, also, for leaflets for distribution on the occasiou of the meeting. Get some of the clergymen to agree to talk on the occasion and encourage the work, and settle with them as to which one of those present shall be called temporarily to the Chair during the organization proceedings. Then elect a Chairman, Vice-Chairman, a Secretary, one Corresponding Secretary, and a Treasurer. Let the Treasurer, if possible, be an officer of a bank. Then elect a Press Committee, whose duty it shall be to call upon the newspapers of your town, and ask them to give the widest publicity to the famine needs and to the proceedings of your Relief Committee; also arrange with them to publish the names of all contributors, together with the amount contributed by them. Then appoint another sub-committee to visit all the Young People's Societies and all the churches, and persuade them to take an active hand in this grand and glorious work.

Each church may have its own sub-committee to operate among its own members and to report to the General China Famine Relief Committee. This will result in a series of operations that must be crowned with success and must induce numerous contributions for the cause. As soon as some money has been contributed, and as often as the treasurer of the fund may deem proper, send a remittance on account to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that the money may be cabled immediately to China and do the work for which it was contributed. Thus, ten dollars collected to-day in your State, and sent on to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, reaching here the day following, may, the very next morning, be doing its work in China. Don't keep the money in the treasury, but let it immediately start on its work of beneficence. Every day's delay must result in loss of human life.

China's Famine Cry Answered

The Christian Herald Cables $65,000 More, Making $101,000 to Date—The Famine Still Spreading—Terrible Scenes of Suffering in the Famine Camps

LL indications point to the conclusion that the great crisis of the Chinese aine is rapidly approaching. Missionary and Civic Relief mittees are straining every e to save life by the quick atch of food supplies to the es of suffering. The Imperial Government, too, is co-operating most vigorously; even with all these agencies at work, the famine spreads, the deaths multiply ously and the terrible sufferings among the interior population of the five ken provinces increases. The situation is summed up in the following special e dispatch from the editor of The North China Daily News:

"SHANGHAI, Feb. 27.

DR. KLOPSCH, New York:—The distribution of relief by the missionaries is eeding smoothly, but it is merely a drop in the ocean in view of the tredous extent of the need. Famine area tending, and deaths are increasing. Many he refugees in famine camps are being back to their homes. Food riots are rring in isolated places."

n view of the urgency of the situation, proprietor of this journal has cabled, ugh the State Department in Washington, additional sum of $65,000, to be applied ediately by the Missionary Committee in purchase of food and distributed at the tres of suffering in Anhui, Chekiang and ngsu Provinces, and, if possible, in Honan vince also. This remittance, which is anced in anticipation of contributions, es the grand total of $101,000 forwarded ct to the famine field by THE CHRISTIAN RALD to date.

t is especially desirable that all who wish aid in this humanitarian effort to save the ishing thousands in China should send in ir gifts as quickly as possible. Every conution will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTN HERALD and cabled direct to the famine d through the State Department.

Mr. Wm. T. Ellis, our special correspondent China, sends by the latest mail the follow- graphic letter, giving further news from the nine camps:

ANGSU PROVINCE, CENTRAL CHINA, Jan. 17.

Succor is following hard on the heels of rvation. A white stream of strength-giving ur, milled by American hands from wheat wn on American farms, is already flowing o the region which day and night re-echo h the moans of the hungry multitudes.

Refugees Mourning for Their Dead

They Cover the Head with a Cloth While Lamenting the Loss of Dear Ones

The first installment of fifteen thousand bags of flour began to arrive at Tsingkiangpu, the distributing centre, this morning. Twenty thousand other bags are on the Yangtze River and the Grand Canal, following the same course. Each of these dusty white bags, so familiar to American eyes, contains fifty pounds of food. This means a grand total of a million and three-quarters pounds of flour, enough to sustain the entire three million famine sufferers, on the meagre fare of the Chinese, for three or four days. But the famine must last five months!

The overwhelming magnitude of this calamity can be understood only by breaking it up into fragments. Take, for example, a little district containing ten thousand people—and what are they among three million? The Chinese estimate, which certainly does not err on the side of generosity, is a cent and a-half a day for each of these. That is to say—it will require $150 a day to keep that district alive during the famine, or $4,500 a month. Since the famine will continue for five months more until the spring wheat can be harvested (less than half the normal crop is expected), this one district will require help amounting to $22,500. China and the rest of the world will have to go deeply into its pockets if these three million human beings—"God's images carved in yellow ivory," to paraphrase Fuller's saying—are to be kept from premature graves.

The paralyzing fact about this famine is its duration and its geographical extent. The worst is not yet. Five months of utter want is the lot of a third of the inhabitants of an area almost as large as the State of New York. Thus far the deaths from starvation have been comparatively few—only a matter of a few thousand at the outside estimate. Most of these have been complicated by disease or cold. From the standpoint of the native, the mortality has not been great. The grim reaper's greatest harvest is still to come. The worst of winter is not yet here; providentially the season thus far has been comparatively mild for North Central China. These people are inured to a degree of cold and hunger that an Anglo-Saxon could not stand. All the missionaries engaged in relief work are looking forward with dread to the situation a month hence, when starvation, plus cold, plus disease, will be sweeping away many thousands daily. One frequently sees famine sufferers who are only skin and bones and whose bodies are exposed to the winter

"Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy"

THE Bible may be compared to a family album. When you turn the sacred pages, the different faces you see there are like your own ancestors. They are men of another age and another land, but they are men like ourselves. Their faults and their good qualities are plainly described, and we see that they were such men as those we associate with to-day. Moses and Joshua and Gideon and David and Paul and Peter and Mary and Martha and Lazarus do not seem to be so much Jews as human beings like ourselves. Not strangers, but your own flesh and blood. By their own mistakes and sins and failings and spiritual triumphs they are preaching their practical lessons. They seem to sit by your side and say, "My son, I would not live as you are living. I would not sin as you are sinning. The only true and happy life is the Gospel life. I know your temptations by experience. There were black days in my life as there are in yours, but they were the dark days when I was following my own selfish will. When I surrendered my life to the divine will there were no 'dark days.' Try to live for Christ, my child. By my own sad history I want you to learn this lesson." Yes, the Bible pages are simply filled with pictures of those who are part of us, as you seem to be part of them.

Portraits in the Bible

But though the Bible is a great photograph album with its hundreds of saintly faces pleading with us to be good, the Bible also has its Rogues' Gallery as well. There the fiendish faces are pilloried for our warning. There is Cain, the murderer, and Jezebel, the painted hag, whose bleeding carcass is being eaten by the dogs under the walls of Jezreel. There is the swaying corpse of Prime Minister Haman dangling from the hangman's noose, which he had prepared for just Mordecai. There is the Babylonish banquet hall, where Belshazzar and his intoxicated revelers were holding the high carnival of death. There is the cruel face of bloody Herod, and the demoniac visage of the unrepentant thief blaspheming Christ, when they were both dying upon the Cross. There is Judas, the traitor, clutching the blood-money for which he had sold his Master. These sinful faces are all there. They seem to be human lighthouses, flashing out their red lights over the stormy seas of life, warning us away from the fatal rocks upon which they have eternally foundered. Yes, the Bible seems to be crowded with two kinds of pictures. There we find the saints and the fiends. The pictures of the saints are pleading with us to come and kneel at the foot of the Cross. The fiends, by their miserable fate, are continually calling: "Beware, beware, beware!"

Denunciation of the Pharisee

Among all the excoriated sinners of the Bible not any are more vehemently denounced by Christ than the Pharisees. In one place Christ compares them to the whitened sepulchres filled with dead men's bones and all uncleanness. In another place Jesus compares these Pharisees to the woman who cleanses the outside of her cups and yet leaves the inside corrupt and filthy. In another place Christ describes a Pharisee and a Publican praying in the Temple. To the Pharisee God is turning a deaf ear. To the Publican God is reaching out the hands of forgiveness and love. In another place Christ is comparing the Pharisee to a wolf crawling around in sheep's clothing. In my text he calls them hypocrites. In other words, these Pharisees may seem to have the face of an angel, but they have the claws of a tiger. Though they may seem to be the friends and helpers of mankind, yet everything they touch they pollute and destroy, as does the infectious hand of a leper. "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." This was Christ's idea of the Pharisees when he was upon earth. It is just as true a picture of the Pharisees to-day.

Now why should the faces of the Pharisees always be found in the Rogues' Gallery of the Bible? These men, as a class, represented the brains and the wealth of the East. They had among their representatives most of the social and political and ecclesiastical leaders of Palestine. When candidates were about to be inducted into their order they had to take vows of piety, and pledge themselves that they would give one-tenth of all their financial income to the Lord. They held most of the seats in the Sanhedrin, yet here Christ is denouncing them as worse than thieves and murderers and social outcasts. Why is all this? Let us study their origin and then mark the spiritual degeneracy of these men, who were outwardly fair to look upon but inwardly were as a writhing mass of decomposition.

Origin of the Pharisees

First, their origin. But what is the etymology of the word? Pharisee originally comes from the Hebrew word perushim or separatists. A Pharisee in broad terminology means "a separator." A separator from what?

Away back in the time of Jehoiakim, 600 years before Christ, Nebuchadnezzar, King of the Chaldeans, with his mighty army swept southwestward and laid siege to and captured Jerusalem. As was the custom of that day a large number of the Hebrews were carried away from the land of their nativity. There, within the strong walls of old Babylon, they had to dwell. No Temple had they. No priesthood had they. Surrounded by the sins of a heathen nation and under the shadow of the shrines of the idols, they had to do something to prevent their children becoming immoral idolaters. So what did they do? They withdrew themselves just as far as possible from associating with these sinful Babylonians. They did what the Puritans did when they were exiles in Holland. They did what the foreign missionaries are accustomed to do amid the awful customs of the heathen lands. They keep their children within their own homes as far as possible. And when their boys and girls grow too big to be longer kept clean from the contaminating immoral influences of the East, they send them back home to be educated in the American homes and American institutions. "Oh," said an American missionary some years ago to me in India, "the hardest burden which a missionary has to bear is this separation from his children. But what can a missionary do? I cannot allow my children to grow up amid the licentious influences of this land. I must separate them from these evil surroundings and, therefore, I send them back home to be educated and to be kept morally and spiritually pure."

The Pilgrim Fathers

"When the Puritans arrived in the city of Leyden, which was to be their home for some years to come," wrote the author of The Pilgrim Fathers of New England, "the exiles from Scrooby lived very much together, a community within a community, dwelling among a strange people." Thus was it with the Hebrews in the Babylonish exile. They kept as completely separate as possible. In order to keep their Hebrew religion pure and undefiled, they became in time a people narrow and bigoted and clannish. So the beginning of the sect was altogether commendable. The Jew was a despised captive; he could not reform the conditions around him; but he could register his protest against them by withdrawing himself from them. Not all the Jews of that time were willing to thus withdraw at the cost of obloquy and perhaps financial loss. Those who did withdraw were called Separatists or Pharisees. Though the Pharisees as a class were narrow and bigoted, they had their origin in the noblest and purest of ideals. They were first organized as a sect in order to protect their own morals and the morals of their children.

I cannot illustrate my thought better than by taking you for a little while in old Jerusalem to the "Wailing Place" of the Jews. It is one of the great sights for the Palestine tourist to see. Though Jerusalem has been under foreign control for centuries upon centuries, yet the intense patriotic Hebrews have not forgotten their race or their religion. They are not allowed to enter the Mohammedan mosque, which is built upon the site of the old Temple; so they gather day after day at the foot of the walls, where there are stones that once formed part of the Temple. There they repeat over and over again the lamentation of the Seventy-ninth Psalm? "O God, the heathen are come into thine inh- ance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they l laid Jerusalem on heaps. We are become a reproac our neighbors, a scorn and a derision to them that round about us. How long, Lord? Wilt thou angry forever?" Thus they stand day after da their fathers stood, and month after month and after year and century after century the weeping wailing and praying and pleading goes on. Thus the exiled Hebrews become the Pharisees or the se rators of Babylon. Day after day, year after y they pleaded with God to bring them back to Davidic capital. "How long, oh Lord," they cr "how long must we live amid these licentious and b pheming Babylonians? How long? How lon How long?" Thus they prayed. Thus they plead And thus they refused to mingle with the Chald sinners. Thus we find that the genesis of the Pharis was inspired by love for God, by love for purity by love for the Mosaic laws.

Degeneracy of the Pharisees

Having explained the genesis of the Pharisees, i sad to have to trace their spiritual degeneracy. Wh God took pity on the race and permitted them to ret to Palestine, the Pharisees were proud of the attit they had taken. They had been faithful while ma of their brethren had not, and they were proud of Now, spiritual pride is always a bad thing and leads m into serious faults. If you once teach the doctrine th the most important fact of a man's life is to live by set of rules and stand up straight, it is not very diffic for him, like a fancy pigeon to go strutting arou bending backward. As he had separated from t idolatrous Chaldeans, he now separated himself from brethren and plumed himself on his obedience to t minute letter of the law. In order to keep separat from his fellow-men, he said, "I will obey the law Then, in order to try to follow out the letter of the l he lost sight of the spirit of the law. Then he sai "If I pay my tithes and I keep the laws of purity a I obey the law of the Sabbath why I am a perfe man." Now you know and I know that there is no of laws ever made that the man who wants to eva them cannot find a way to climb over or under or around, if you only give him time enough to work o his schemes.

The Pharisees said, "We must obey the Bible." The in order to bolster up the Bible, they hedged it arou with a lot of traditional commands of the Talmu Then as soon as they had made the letter of the la binding they evolved a lot of rules, by which they cou circumvent or crawl around the commandments of th law. For instance, by the old Talmudic law, it was n right for a Hebrew to go farther from his doorstep the Sabbath Day than one and three-quarter miles. Th Pharisee rigidly obeyed that law. But how did he c it? He took a small stone, which he placed at th front of his door. He called this his doorstep. The when he wanted to make a long Sabbath journey h picked up this doorstep and put it into his pocket an went his way, carrying his doorstep with him, and course was never away from it. Thus he was able to g as far as he wished and still keep the letter of th Sabbatic law. He obeyed the letter of the law; he brok the spirit of the Sabbatic law. He strained at the gnat truth and he swallowed the huge humpbacked camel error.

Evasion of the Law

As a man of common sense, you know that a ma may be technically right and yet morally wrong. He ma obey the law of the State to the letter, and yet be a dishonest as any criminal behind iron bars wearing th convict's stripes. If you are conversant with history you know that gold went up to a high premium durin the Civil War. A short time after the Civil War a tax collector was elected for one of the counties of Illinois By the law of that county all taxes must be collecte in gold. This tax-collector collected all those taxes i gold and then he paid the taxes into the treasury of th county in currency and pocketed the difference. He wa r winds. One little child of four or five, whose could be counted, was dressed only in a single nt which did not come to its knees. So it spent of its time crouching in the sun, to make the one over all of its nakedness. Alongside of this poor was a boy of eight or ten years suffering from pox, his face all broken out. At the time I was panying a missionary who was inspecting the s of a village and a crowd was thronging us. This boy and three other smallpox patients mingled with the others, who unconcernedly replied, when l, that they knew their companions were suffering the disease. At one hovel the missionary called, e in here, I have something interesting to show ! I entered the tiny room, where four members of amily were gathered, and on the dirt bed I saw ipest, rankest case of smallpox one would care to ss. The man's face was broken out, black and en, so that his eyes were almost closed. Of course d not had a doctor, nor were his family paying particular attention to him. This was a faint fore-e of what will prevail when the plagues of famine, er, typhus and smallpox begin to ravage the already tten district.

But this article is to deal primarily with relief meas-s. China is exerting herself to an extraordinary ree. Taxes have been remitted, in whole or in part, oughout the region where the worst suffering pre-ls. The Empress Dowager has made repeated gifts the famine fund and has ordered government grants. ny officials have been assessed a certain per cent. of ir salaries. The mints are on rush orders turning coin for the needy. Every launch that comes up canal, brings boxes of ten-cash pieces; and the ndling of these have made work for hundreds of lies, whose singsong as they stagger beneath burdens ne of the melodious memories of the Orient. The dge has been made to the public that every famine ferer will receive three-cash a day. If foreign flour be sold all over the starvation area at normal prices less, this will avail to keep body and soul together.

But nobody seems confident that this aid will last a month; the Chinese are sure it will not. Many say that the nation is too poor to stand the drain.

Missionary Relief Work

Responsibility and authority for the disbursement of all relief funds, from whatever source (outside of the Chinese Government), has been given over to the foreign missionaries. Representatives of the local gentry, who are a more responsible class than the officials, are associated with the missionaries in the work of distribution, but the latter control the funds. This speaks volumes for the esteem in which the missionaries are held by both Chinese and foreigners. Shanghai has long been regarded as a hotbed of criticism of foreign missions. Yet here is the most representative committee that could be brought together in the Far East, comprising the consuls of several nations, leading business men of British and American citizenship, high government officials, Chinese of rank, and distinguished members of the foreign mission body, all uniting to place the relief funds which they are collecting from the whole world in the hands of a company of faithful, earnest foreign missionaries. Incidentally, the distribution of this timely aid will do more to establish the missionaries in the esteem and confidence of the Chinese than a decade of ordinary mission endeavor.

Government relief in the famine district proper consists of "cash" (the small native coin valued at one-fifteenth of a cent). This is distributed every ten days. In the mad scramble to get this, many persons are injured. This week, one man was literally crushed to death near Tsingkiangpu. The great camps of 300,000 refugees at the latter place are being broken up by the officials, under threat that no more money will be given unless the people return home. As an additional incentive to leave the sufferers are told that the foreigners are going to distribute relief in the country districts. There is talk of starting work on a long-disused system of canals, to give employment to the needy and to prevent a recurrence of the disastrous floods of the past year. Under foreign pressure it is quite likely that some relief works will be undertaken before long.

In the meantime, the foreign missionaries are arranging to sell the Shanghai committee's flour. This is a bread-eating district; the wheat crop is greater by far than the rice crop. Thus, in more than one sense, it is from America that aid comes. The flour will be sold at normal rates or less, to bring down the prevailing famine prices, so that with the money supplied by the government the people may secure sufficient food. Thus also a return supply of money will be secured for the purchase of additional flour, so that the relief funds may be made to reach much farther than if they were directly expended. In some regions, where no money is being supplied by the government, it is being found necessary to send the cash. In these cases the missionaries and their helpers make a personal canvass of the villages, looking into the supply of food possessed by each home.

The missionaries in these forty thousand square miles of Central China are nearly all of the Southern Presbyterian Church. The China Inland Mission has a few missionaries, and the Catholics have two stations. On the edge of the famine region the Northern Presbyterians have a few missionaries; but the bulk of the relief work devolves upon the Southern Presbyterians. They are calling to their assistance missionaries of various denominations who are able to speak the dialect of this part of China. A large force of workers will be busy for the ensuing five months, for all concerned realize that the present calamity, coinciding as it does with the centennial of Protestant missions in China, affords what may be the opportunity of a century for the Church of Christ to prove herself here.

The Bravest Little Woman

By GEORGE WHITEFIELD D'VYS

There's no craft afloat can beat her,
As the home-post draweth near;
There's a howling mob to greet her,
As she comes up to the pier.
And when shades of night are coming,
Ev'ry fisher thinks of sport,
For he knows things just go humming
When the Fiji is in port!

SIXTY hardy, happy men sent the words ringing far out across the waters of Provincetown Harbor.

Aboard the Fiji, sure enough, it was fo'c'stl' night. During the afternoon a light fog had settled over land and sea, and as night came on the weather became heavy, and many craft found anchorage within the range of Long Point and Wood End, and dories glided from schooner to schooner as the men went about making calls. Ed Osgood's reputation as a host was evidently widespread, for the Fiji seemed the mecca of nearly all, and, indeed, on this particular night it would be impossible for men to receive more hospitable treatment that skipper Ed accorded his visitors.

"Hello, Jim," he called heartily, as a newcomer stopped at the binnacle lamp to light his pipe. "Crowd in here somewhere, you elongated old seine-heaver, you. You're just the man for the occasion. Come, now give us that 'Pump—pump' song, will you? Everybody will help him out on the chorus. Won't we mates?" he shouted, as long Jim advanced to a place made for him in the centre of the forecastle.

"Give us the whole story, Jim," called John Griffin from the rear. "We were aboard the Ednah D at T wharf up in old Boston the last time you spun it, so I calculate more'n half of us is new to it. Go on, lad. We'll do the chorus all right, no mistake."

"Coffee first," Jim answered cheerily, as he went over and helped himself. "You fellows got onto me too soon. But go ahead all hands; hit up that chorus once or so, to get me keyed up to it, you know, and then I'll sail in on the yarn, all canvas set and 'Old Glory' at the peak."

With great gusto, again and again the hardy fellows sent the words rolling out into the night.

And we drank the steaming coffee,
And we took another hump,
And we kept on steady pumping,
Pump—pump—pump!

"Hurroo! That's it, you're right we did!" Jim shouted, as he caused the sudden disappearance of a huge piece of pie, and after smacking and wiping his lips a minute or two, he continued: "You're right we did; and upon my word, mates, with the life-lines out, it was nothing but pump—pump—pump a whole night long, and some of us dropping to the deck from sheer exhaustion.

"You see, it began right here in the old Bay State," Jim declared. "Old Cap'n Hartwell, of the four-masted bark Jenny Marston, had a plucky little sixteen-year-old daughter. The old man had a winter run from Boston to where they've just been having a bit of an earthquake at Kingston. That year diphtheria closed her school a spell, so she begged the cap'n to take her along, saying she guessed she was rugged and strong enough to stand one trip. He allowed the park gymnasium had done much toward making her a stanch, able-looking lass, but, said he, 'it takes more than strength. For instance,' said he, 'when the wind was roaring and the seas tossing us about like a bit of cork, wouldn't you be the least bit afraid?'

"And the girl up and said to him, 'I'd not be your daughter if I were!'

"That answer tickled the old cap'n mightily, and her mother consenting to it, the girl went along.

"She brought us coffee and sang songs to cheer us"

"Now, Tom, that first verse," Jim called to the chanty man of the Fiji. "Break her out, lad, and we'll all stand by to help on the pumps."

"Lend a hand, mate," Tom called to John Griffin, and together they began the ballad:

'Twas a little Yankee lassie—
Lillie Hartwell was her name—
And with noble Gracie Darling
She must share unceasing fame.
With the Jenny Marston leaking,
When an ocean grave seemed near,
She did nobly help us pumping,
And she had but words of cheer.
And she served and made us coffee
From the galley's biggest pot;
And she smiled just like an angel,
As she served it boiling hot.
And we drank the steaming coffee,
And we took another hump,
And we kept on steady pumping,
Pump—pump—pump!

The closing lines went forth with vigor, all hands joining heartily.

"And now I'm going to take you down to Jamaica," Jim continued, as the last echoes died away. "Ah, my lads, that's the winter trip for you and no mistake! Haddocking off the banks may pay better twenty to one; but nobody gets frost-bitten in Jamaica! When all up here is under snow, down there it's plants everywhere; while the Gulf Stream breezes and the wonderful scenery all go to making you about as happy as you can ever be this side of the Jordan, I'm thinking.

"Then the place is so still. Why, from morning till night there's only the rattle of the little busses that are hunting up passengers to carry, and the singsong bawling of black women peddlers, who go up and down the streets singing their names, their numbers and the kind of goods they're selling; and, mind you, they carry their wares in a big basket stuck up on top of their heads.

"Think of me, mates, going up and down Rogers Street with a basket on top of my head, and me singing a song like this:

Long Jim, he's gwine past, number forty odd;
Long Jim, he's gwine past, with mack'rel, hake and cod!

Pandemonium reigned, as Jim drawled out this plaint, and once again it was "All hands up!" and when Erastus, the cook, had supplied all with coffee, Jim resumed:

"Yes, if you like this weather, flowers and quiet, Jamaica is all right, but if you take anything in the way of drink, and take it on the quiet, lolling on the gentle slopes beyond the town, where the most beautiful harbor eyes ever beheld is before you, and a beautiful mountain aft, then look out, for you're apt to shut your eyes to it all and fall asleep, and know nothing more till your ship's miles and miles off shore.

"That's the way it was with me, and I'm blessed if I know whether the craft that took me there as first mate, started out under jibs and reefed foresail, or with main and fore catching the Gulf breezes. All I know is, I got down to Harbor Street, and she was gone!

"That's how I happened to be on the island New Year's Eve, '96, lads. If you ever ache for a full-fledged Fourth of July in midwinter, manage to be in Jamaica on a New Year's Eve! It's all of that and bedlam let loose besides, and no mistake!

"Bands play; there's the rattle o little fire-crackers, and the bang o cannon-cracker, the tooting of horns fireworks. That's the Fourth of part of it.

"Then there's the prayer-meeting
Every church is wide open to all, an

OUR NATIONAL POET

:OM Old Cambridge, in Massachusetts, to the last town to take its place on the map in the Far Northwest, people have been honoring the cen-y of the birth of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, taking the well-thumbed volume of his poems down o the shelves, have read again the beautiful meas- of the "Voices of the Night," have wept over the wanderings of Evangeline, and have felt with Paul Revere poems all familiar and well loved. If the library in an American home consists of one book, that one book is the Bible; if it is composed of two books, it is the Bible and Longfellow's poems. He was and is the most read of all American poets. It has been so for two generations, and as there seems to be no diminution of love accorded both to the poet and to his works, it continue to be so for years to come.

ongfellow as a Young Man

ongfellow is the poet of the American people. He charmed with his verse the highest and most cul- d of his literary contemporaries, and the laborer, knew not what poetry was until he had read some he fugitive pieces as they appeared in the press of day, and who was led to read the more ambitious ns as they were issued in book form. Longfellow d and wrote just at the time when intellectual ds were looking for a wider culture and anxious to ch the older literatures of Europe, e from the classics that had always l foremost place in the libraries of all ivated New Englanders. Longfellow his passionate love of languages and study, drank deep of all that France, many, Spain and Italy had to offer, his countrymen were the gainers in wider vision, the sympathy with the uty and romantic past of Europe that eared in his works as a result of his abroad.

Longfellow in his own person was well ed to be the most typical and popular American poets. To describe his per- al appearance would be superfluous. ery American child can recognize the t's face were it set among a hundred traits on a printed page—the face with gentle, kindly expression, firm mouth, ng nose and thoughtful eyes, sur- nded with its halo of snow-white hair. was descended from a long line of ritan New England ancestors on both paternal and the distaff sides. The t Longfellow in this country was Wil- m, of Byfield, Mass., an Englishman, who settled in the colony in the second half of the seventeenth century. The future poet was born in Portland, Me., in a large square house, of late colonial type. Portland regards the structure as one of its most precious possessions. The old room, partly paneled about the fireplace, with the desk that stood there in the poet's boyhood, and on which he doubtless penned some of his more youthful effusions, is still pointed out to visitors. It was in this room that he wrote "The Rainy Day." Longfellow's father and mother were people of culture, Mrs. Longfellow being especially fond of poetry. It may be, according to the law of heredity, that the poet received from her some spark of the divine fire. But be that as it may, he early began to write verses, the first being published when he was but thirteen years old in one of the Portland papers. In 1822 he entered the freshman class at Bowdoin College. One of his college mates was a young man who was destined to stand in after years as one of the greatest masters of English prose, Nathaniel Hawthorne. It is not known that any particular warm friendship sprang up between the two, or that they were more than acquaintances. While in college, Longfellow found time to still dream out and write a number of poems, and at the same time make his mark in his college studies. He was one of the chief orators on his graduation day. His subject was "Our Native Writers," an almost prophetic subject for one who was within a few years to rank among the best known of them. He was an omnivorous reader. The first book that really satisfied him, he said, was Washington Irving's Sketch Book.

When Longfellow left college it was with the understanding that he should return after some time spent in European travel, and take the first chair of modern languages at Bowdoin College. After a few successful years at his Alma Mater, he was called to Harvard College, and he gladly accepted this opportunity for wider usefulness, with its enlarged opportunities for social intercourse and further study. He was the first Harvard professor to use the prefix "Mr." in addressing the students. His kindliness made him very popular among the students, and once, during a student outbreak, they listened to him after all the other members of the faculty had been compelled to retire in confusion. "We will listen to Mr. Longfellow," they said, "he is the only one that treats us as if we were gentlemen."

Craigie house, in which Longfellow roomed when he first came to Harvard to succeed Professor Ticknor as professor of modern languages, and which later became his permanent home, is, in addition to being one of out greatest literary shrines, one of the most beautiful and historic homes in America. It stands well back from Brattle Street, on the way from Harvard Square to Mount Auburn. The wall in front near the sidewalk is built of old colonial brick that was baked when George the Third was king. There is a wide and velvety lawn, between which and the terraces is an ornamental white railing. The house is painted pale yellow.

Washington occupied the house as his headquarters when he came to Cambridge to take command of the American army in 1775. With the centenary celebration there has come a renewed interest in the places made famous by his poems and the people, real or imaginary, whom he has immortalized. Most of his finest poems are based on fact or legend. The characters in "the courtship of Miles Standish" were all living men and women in the Plymouth Colony; the doughty captain of the poem corresponds well with the captain of authentic history. Hiawatha, according to numerous Indian legends, was one of the greatest of the red men before the white men came. He was said to have been of miraculous birth, and he was sent to teach them the arts of peace. He is called by different names among various tribes, Hiawatha, Chiabo, Manaboza and others. Of him the Iroquois had many legends.

Longfellow has given us one of the most beautiful pictures of the romantic land of "Evangeline in Acadia," yet he never visited the spot. His accurate knowledge of the geography of the place was derived from the accounts of returned travelers. Although Sudbury was but twenty miles distant from his Cambridge home, he did not see Red Horse Tavern until he had written the "Tales of the Wayside Inn," supposed to have been told by the gay company that met there. The Wayside Inn was not built for the accommodation of the wayfarer, but as the country seat of an English family that settled in Sudbury over two centuries ago. Becoming reduced in fortune, they turned their large house into an inn, and a sign bearing a large red horse was swung before it.

The Wayside Inn at Sudbury

The old inn stands to-day as strong as when its great oaken timbers were laid one on another centuries ago. The old walls and roof have but added mellow tones; the great doors still open for the traveler, who comes out from Boston to refresh himself with the landlord's cheer, and to muse upon the goodly company that once gathered here when

Making Vice Familiar

IT would be a very serious thing to suggest a press censorship in this Republic. Freedom of opinion, printed and spoken, and the free circulation of legitimate news, are rights not to be lightly interfered with. We greatly doubt, however, whether any considerable portion of the press would assert that the widespread publicity given to the proceedings at a sensational murder trial, such as that now in progress in New York, is in any sense a desirable thing, or serves any good purpose.

Most of the newspapers recognize the pernicious influence of this class of news, to the extent of pruning, or wholly omitting, the worst passages. But, even at the best, it is ghastly stuff to set before the general reader. Its effect upon the minds of the young is bad beyond question; it breeds a familiarity with vice which cannot fail to make a deep impresion on those who are of a susceptible age.

It would be an unqualified blessing if the judges who preside at such trials were to clear the court-room, at certain stages of the evidence, of all except jury, counsel and necessary attaches. This, at least, would be a sign to the outside world chat the morbid crowds which those trials always attract, were no longer to be indulged and must look elsewhere than to a court of justice for sensational entertainment.

Fear of the Sun-Spots.

SOME alarm has been expressed in the press and in private letters about the effect on the earth of the huge sun-spots which have appeared unexpectedly during the past few weeks. A few writers have gone so far as to predict that the phenomenon may be the precursor of the world's destruction. Such predictions are by no means uncommon when anything unusual occurs in the heavens or on the earth. The appearance of a comet, the occurrence of a conjunction of the greater planets, an earthquake or a volcanic eruption, always give rise to such apprehensions, but the effect is ephemeral. When the world has lived through the ordeal and men find that the sun rises and sets as it has done from the beginning, they are ashamed of their fears and revert to their former ways. We doubt if there is a case on record of a conversion having occurred through fear of the world's approaching destruction.

It is difficult to understand in what way the spots on the sun can affect the earth. Astronomers tell us that they are the result of violent convulsions or cyclones on the sun, or perhaps volcanic eruptions, which cause rents in the photosphere, the luminous envelope which surrounds the sun, but they do not diminish the sun's power. It has been thought by some scientists that electrical disturbances on the earth do result from the sun-spots, but other scientists aver that such storms occurring at those periods are merely coincidences. They are not even agreed whether the sun itself is really the gaseous mass it is supposed to be, or whether it is a vast globe as solid as our own. The theories of one age are rejected by another and it remains with the future to discover by the spectroscope and other means what the great luminary really is, and the character of the influence it exerts on the earth and the other members of its family of planets.

The Christian, however, should never be under any apprehension of approaching terrestrial disaster. We know from the word of God that eventually destruction will come, and the heavens will be dissolved and the elements melt with fervent heat, but the promise is sure that there will be a new heaven and a new earth in which righteousness will dwell. God will take care of his people and will provide for them a refuge from the storm, whenever it may occur. To be fearful and apprehensive implies distrust of him. Only those who do not know him have reason for alarm. They may learn from the calmness with which the believer faces any danger that confronts him, whether from the heavens above or the earth beneath, the blessedness of that faith which supports him, and may seek it for themselves.

Speed Madness

AFTER some terrible accident by sea or land, caused by the desire of some one to "get there" in record time, people remark sagely that it will teach them to go slower next time, and nervous travelers comfort themselves with that idea whenever they take a train soon after a catastrophe. As a matter of fact, however, it is the one lesson that the twentieth century will not learn. Only a few weeks ago, a train was wrecked, causing great loss of life, because it was being sent over the rails and around curves at a rate that would mean disaster nine times out of ten. The engineer took the tenth chance and, like so many other gamblers with fate, found that he had lost.

Speed madness permeates most of the acts of our everyday existence. It affects the man who loses his life by attempting to jump on the passing train. The next train would have done just as well, but he took the risk rather than be left behind. Most of the accidents that occur in our city streets come from the mania people have to rush across in front of trucks and trolleys, rather than from the carelessness of the drivers and motormen. It is speed madness that prompts a man to live beyond his income, in order to make more of a show than his neighbor; that causes a woman to wear more expensive gowns than she can afford. They both wish to be at the "head of the procession," to pass others on the road. This speed madness in ways of living leads down a steep road with disaster waiting at the bottom, but the "runners" keep it up.

People would be, in reality, a thousand times happier if they would let any one who wished pass them in the struggle for the non-essentials of life. The great things, the real things of life, are not attained in a moment by a grand rush; yet, despite this fact, people have risked life, reputation, everything, since the days when one charioteer would try to take off the wheel of his rival's car as they swept around in dizzy circles on the course of the Circus Maximus.

The Morality of "High Finance"

ONE of the strongest arguments that could possibly be urged in support of the President's contention, that the general government, and not the State, must ultimately regulate corporations, is furnished in the remarkable statements lately made before the Interstate Commerce Commission in New York.

Leading railroad magnates, with amazing frankness, have let in a flood of light upon the startling methods employed in "high finance," and have shown how a few men, skilled in the great game of corporation exploitation, could manipulate the affairs of a railroad in such a manner that the road would shortly be left penniless, while they would be richer by many millions of dollars, taken under the various pretexts of syndicate profits, dividends and commissions.

These revelations are not made by men who are nobodies in the business world. They are the admissions, or rather the confessions, of some of the principal actors in the greatest financial movements of recent years. They are the statements of men whose genius for money-making has challenged the wonder and admiration of those who believe riches to be the true goal of life and the source of happiness. Now that the leaders of this sort of "high finance" have lifted the lid, the people can judge for themselves of the moral quality and value of success that is achieved by such methods.

There are great fortunes that have been won by honorable effort and which, both in the winning and the using, reflect credit upon their possessors. But the millions that are won in "high finance," by methods such as those explained before the Interstate Commission, are the gambler's prize. Such victories spell ruin to thousands. Their amassing is brought about by a species of lawlessness which overrides all statutes passed for the public good; which creates commercial confusion by unsettling values, unduly depressing or inflating securities, and shaking the foundations of honorable business and commercial confidence, upon which the material welfare of a community largely rests. Whether this be the course pursued by a corporation, a syndicate, or an individual, it should be made legally impossible by regulative legislation. As its effects transcend State boundaries, it can only be dealt with by Federal authority.

It is not at all improbable that the investigation just concluded, and the results of which will be duly reported at Washington, will be the precursor of a much more searching and thorough inquiry. If any permanent benefit is to result to the country from this work, it must be exhaustive and absolutely impartial, conducted in no spirit of vindictive persecution of individuals or corporations, but with the sole desire to remedy present evils that work injustice to communities and the whole cour

This is less a financial question than a great n problem, affecting our welfare at home and our nati reputation abroad. It may and frequently does a thousands who have a right to the protection of s guards that will effectually prevent all such contine juggling with corporate properties as was lately testi to in New York.

Russia's Answer

IN response to urgent suggestions from a number readers of this journal, that the famine now prev ing in Russia was so serious as to call for a pract expression of sympathy from this nation, the proprie of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some time ago cabled to Emperor inquiring as to actual conditions, and whet foreign aid would be acceptable.

We are glad to be able to lay before our readers the following telegram from Baron Rosen, the Russ Ambassador in Washington, the imperial assurance t the Russian Government is confident of its ability cope with the famine independent of outside aid:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1907

"DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bi House, New York.

"In reply to the cablegram you addressed to I Majesty the Emperor, proposing to appeal to t American people in favor of the victims of the famine Russia, I am instructed by the Minister of Forei Affairs to say that the Imperial Government, althou certain of being able to relieve the distress with th own means and without recourse to assistance fr abroad, cannot but be sincerely grateful for any propo tending to the relief of the afflicted Provinces. ROSEN

This is gratifying and shows that Russia is not on able but willing to relieve the burden of suffering amo her people by means of her own resources. Had it be otherwise, our people would have esteemed it both a du and a privilege to render all the assistance in their powe and this journal would have gladly opened its c umns for relief contributions. Fortunately this no proves, for the time being at least, to be unnecessar in view of the assurance quoted above. It has be stated lately that the Russian Government is to flo a loan of $35,000,000 expressly for famine relie the money to be expended largely in public work which will give employment to multitudes of t sufferers, and thus relieve the immediate distress. T Empress Dowager, too, has been conducting a noble an far-reaching humanitarian work in the famine district Besides this, appropriations are regularly made for reli purposes by the provincial governments.

With these various agencies at work, we trust soon t hear of an improved condition of affairs in the afflicte provinces.

Royalties in Nigeria

OME idea of the varied races over which Great Britain rules is gained from the picture on this page, which is reproduced from a photograph taken tly at Lagos, in Western Africa, by a correspondent he Sphere. A grand agricultural show was being at Lagos, and it attracted the chiefs of the tribes in Nigeria, who came with their attendants in solemn to see the specimens of the products of that part of earth. Incidentally, they were not averse to dis- ing their royal robes and the regalia of their office, g in this not unlike their royal brethren in Europe, get themselves up in their own gorgeous attire on monial occasions. It was a quaint gathering, the or chiefs wearing their massive crowns and their y embroidered robes; their attendants in sparse e, bearing the umbrellas, the symbols of power, out which no monarch would feel himself properly pped for a state ceremony.

He shall judge among the nations and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, neither shall they learn war any more (Isaiah 2 : 4).

Nigerian Chiefs and their Attendants Assembled at Lagos

Three Blank Years

A man has lately returned to Stamford, Conn., who has been missing for three years and was believed to be dead. He was in the employ of a firm in that city and was highly esteemed and trusted. He was sent to attend to some business in the neighborhood of Boston, Mass., and left apparently in the full possession of his faculties and in good spirits. He promised to write his wife on his arrival at his destination, but the expected letter did not come. Becoming alarmed and learning from his employers that there was no cause for his disappearance, she tried to trace him. It was found that he had gone on board a Fall River boat, but after that the trail was lost. His luggage was found on the boat, but no one had seen him land and his luggage had not been claimed. It was supposed he must have accidentally fallen overboard and been drowned. His wife after some time abandoned hope and had a memorial tablet placed in the church he had attended. She obtained employment, which took her to Europe. A few days ago her husband came back to Stamford alive and well. The intervening time, he said, was a complete blank to him. He recollected being on the Fall River boat, but nothing afterward, until early last month he found himself one of a gang of lumbermen cutting timber in British Columbia. How he came there and where he had been besides, he has no idea. He did not wait to make inquiry, but hurried home immediately. How he could have lived those three years without retaining his identity or his consciousness, is a mystery which psychologists cannot explain. He must have been demented to some extent and so irresponsible. The same excuse cannot, however, be made for those who, like the prodigal, come to themselves in the far country after a period of moral and spiritual wandering. They are foolish to the verge of insanity, but never irresponsible.

When he came to himself he said . . . I will arise and go to my father and will say unto him, Father I have sinned (Luke 15: 17, 18).

Engineers' Eyesight

An interesting dispute has arisen between a Western Railroad and its engineers on a question of eyesight. The men contend that when a man's sight is below normal, when he is slightly near-sighted, but when his sight can be brought to normal by the aid of glasses, he should be regarded as a first-class man. It is pointed out that the near-sighted man has frequently better eyes than the far-sighted man, and that they become far-sighted when he uses the proper kind of glasses. The company, on the other hand, contend that there is an objection to the use of glasses at all. They point out that there come times when the cab is suddenly filled with steam and that if such a condition came at a crisis and the engineer had to remove his glasses to wipe them before he could see, he might in the interval pass a signal and an accident occur. But the most interesting subject discussed by physicians in connection with the qualifications of engineers, was that classified as mental vision. The doctors seemed to think that a defect in mental vision was more likely to lead to disaster than any other. "Every one is familiar," said one of the doctors, "with the possibility of looking at a thing without seeing it. The physical eye sees it, but through some mental preoccupation, the visual brain takes no account of it." An engineer who was liable to such a temporary defect, the doctor thought, was unfit for his duty. The public will agree with him. There is no place in which a fit of abstraction may cause so much mischief as in the cab of a locomotive. Many lives may be lost through it and when there is the same habit in church, or under preaching anywhere, it may lead, as Isaiah said, to the loss of the soul.

Hear ye indeed but understand not, and see ye indeed but perceive not (Isaiah 6 : 9).

Hidden Treasure

A laborer on an estate at Bayonne, N. J., made an astonishing discovery a few days ago. His own home was recently destroyed by fire, but a gentleman who had purchased a historic mansion in the city permitted him to live in it for a time as caretaker. In getting the estate in order, he removed a dilapidated woodshed, which was an eyesore on the place. Digging up its foundations he unearthed a rotten chest, a foot square, which contained about two hundred coins bearing the imprints of the Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, French, English and American Governments. The oldest, a Portuguese piece, bore the date 1761, and the newest, an American penny, was dated 1860. A New York numismatist, to whom he took them, says they must be of an aggregate value of three thousand dollars. It is thought they must have belonged to the family who formerly occupied the mansion, and have been buried in fear of thieves or of civil troubles. The family is now extinct, so the treasure will probably be the property of the finder. He is in a position to understand now what our Lord meant when he described the man who found that joy which is better than all material treasures.

The which when a man hath found, he hideth and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath and buyeth that field (Matthew 13 : 44).

A Frost Bell

A gentleman talking recently with a florist in Philadelphia was surprised one evening by the sharp tinkling of a bell. "That is my frost bell," said the florist, and he hurried off to his greenhouses. "The fires had sunk," the florist explained on his return. "The watchman had fallen asleep. But for my frost bell I should have lost hundreds of dollars. That bell is a very valuable arrangement to me," he continued. "An electrical contrivance is connected with a thermometer, and when the mercury falls to a certain point a bell rings a warning in my house or office. Many a crop of winter fruit and flowers has been saved in the last year or two by the clever little frost bell." That is because the owner heeds the warning and acts promptly to save his property. The bell itself could do nothing, any more than do the warnings uttered by ministers and Christian friends to the man who is in danger of losing his soul. If he was as alert and as prompt in his infinitely greater peril as the florist is in his smaller peril, his soul might be saved.

They hear thy words but they do them not (Ezekiel 33 : 32).

THE WOES OF DRUNKENNESS

International Sunday School Lesson for March 24
*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

"GOSPEL temperance" has commonly been understood to mean city mission work for recovery of drunkards, in which the pledge has been supplemented by prayer. But it goes further than this, as will be seen from a careful study of Isaiah, from whose "good tidings to the poor" (Isa. 61) the word Gospel, meaning the same, comes to us through the sermon of Jesus at Nazareth (Luke 4: 16 ff.), which is at once the Gospel of Moses, Isaiah and Christ. The foundation of the Gospel is the jubilee year of Moses (Lev. 25: 8 ff.), when, it was ordained, the social wrongs the poor and weak had suffered from rulers and masters and from those physically or mentally stronger should be righted. If a family had lost its land, or a man or woman had been sold into slavery for debt or other cause, in the jubilee year the lost land or liberty was restored. In a rude age it was an attempt to right social wrongs once in fifty years, that some families might not be increasingly poor and others increasingly rich forever. Isaiah proclaimed that when Christ had come not only into the world, but into the hearts of men to such an extent that Christian convictions should grow into Christian institutions, every "year of our Lord" would be such a jubilee year of social justice. Jesus of Nazareth read the words of Isaiah and said that through him that great promise of social regeneration should be fulfilled. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," that is the seed of the Gospel. But behold the full-grown tree is a Christianized city, a Christianized nation, a Christianized world, with blind asylums, prison reform, emancipation from every slavery and the righting of all social wrongs.

"He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor; he hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

To Save the City

What does that mean? That's what it means. Those most opposed to rationalism are most prone to rationalize this promise of a Christian community into a mere allegory of a blind heart enlightened, a captive soul set free from a figurative bondage to sin. It means that God can save not only the sinner but the city; that he can not only save the drunkard, but can also save the city from making drunkards through the license system that Isaiah condemns in his scathing indictment of those who "justify the wicked for a reward."

Isaiah was called by the church fathers evangelista, that is the evangelist, and evangel is but another word for Gospel. There is no better picture of Calvary and its meaning for us than in Isaiah 53: "He was wounded for our transgressions; by his stripes we are healed." But Isaiah's Gospel includes "Temperance and Moral Reform." He dealt with the big four evils together, intemperance, impurity, Sabbath-breaking and gambling, as four fingers of one malign hand that was choking the life out of both Israel and Judah. The pledge and prayer and personal effort and prohibition are the four fingers of a Christian hand to unloose that awful grip. Isaiah would have us use both preaching and law in a comprehensive campaign for "Temperance and Moral Reform."

The Drunkard's Crown

We shall need to begin back at the opening of the chapter to understand the verses selected for the lesson. The wreath of the reveler was the first link in Israel's chain of captivity. "Woe unto the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim and to the fading flower of his glorious beauty." Isaiah here calls the northern kingdom of Israel "Ephraim" after the name of its chief tribe. Samaria, the capital city of Israel, was built on the summit of a verdant, isolated, cone-shaped hill, where the marble palaces, that glistened in the sun, and seemed from a distance like the crown of silvery olive leaves with which its revelers were crowned at their feasts. Because its people were so given to wine, this "glorious beauty" was to become a lost crown, "a faded flower."

This promise of retribution has been fulfilled, for the hilltop is a ruin, whose broken marble pillars are an eloquent warning against the vices that blight nations and individuals alike. The word Sychar (John 4: 5) is supposed to come from skikkora, meaning drunkards, a monument of the shame described in the text. That it was real drunkenness, not a poetic allegory, the testimony of Amos shows (Amos 4: 1). "Look," says Isaiah to Judah, "to the ruin which intemperance is bringing to our sister state, and behold the same symptoms of approaching national death here in Judah also."

Deadly Internal Peril

Samaria and Judah were never conquered except when corrupted. The bottles on the inside were the battering rams they had most to fear. Seldom has even a small nation been conquered when robust in virtue. Since no nation ever died of free trade or free silver, but many have died of free love—that is, of immorality in its many forms—we of the rank and file should demand of political leaders that moral questions should be recognized as the chief questions in politics, even from the standpoint of national self preservation.

Gradual Degradation

The figure of a "crown" lost through drink, a laurel wreath blighted by dissipation, has a personal as well as a national significance, and recalls many a king, like young Belshazzar, whose doom came as he drank, and many a genius like Poe and Burns, whose glorious beauty was a fading flower because the blight of appetite was upon his laurels.

"Overcome with wine." The original word means one smitten, beaten, knocked down with wine as with a hammer, laid prostrate, unable to rise. It is the fashion to lay such deadly blows of drink mostly to whiskey and the other distilled liquors, but it is wine that carries the bludgeon in this text and often in real life to-day, when wine not only does its own mischief, but also leads its victim on to the thrall of the spirituous liquors. For example, in France, where the people drink on the average more wine than any other people, and the purest wine, for they make it themselves, the wine does not lessen the consumption of the stronger drinks, as is shown by a British Parliament Report, for the people drink more distilled liquor per capita than those of any other land, and much of it the worst kind, absinthe, to which their doctors and statesmen alike attribute, more than to anything else except impurity, which is largely prompted by drink, the fact that in France alone of all the civilized nations the birth rate has fallen below the death rate. The commission appointed by the German Emperor to investigate the drinking habits of his subjects, reported in 1904, the increase in the consumption of intoxicating liquors amounted in cost to $125,000,000 a year. The Emperor is quoted as saying: "This tremendous guzzling must be stopped somehow."

Abstinence the Remedy

"Overcome by wine!" That has been written of many who started in life as confidently as the bright boys and girls in our Sunday Schools. Shall it be written of any to whom this lesson comes with timely warning? It cannot be true of any person whose practice is abstinence. "Overcome of wine!" Shall it be written of you? Shall it be written of our country? Shall we not rather ourselves "overcome" this personal and national foe by total abstinence and prohibition, the only weapons with which it has been overcome anywhere? In this matter the Orient has been wiser than the Occident. Ancient India and Arabia were greatly cursed by drunkenness, but the religious and political leaders did not make the deadly blunder made by Europe and America for ages, of relying upon "moderation" and "license" as cures for this curse. The leaders in church and state in India and Arabia said, in the name of religion and government: "Stop the habit; stop the traffic." And the result is seven hundred millions of Hindus, Buddhists and Mohammedans free from even the hereditary taint of alcohol (save a few who have been corrupted by white men), refuting utterly the shallow sophistry of the indulgent and the lazy, that "all men have an inherent appetite for drink that will be gratified in some way, and so it is useless to fight against it."

Increasing Intemperance

"Behold the Lord hath a mighty and strong one; . . . . as a tempest of mighty waters overflowing." This is the prophet's description of the Assyrian army, which was pouring, like a resistless, destroying flood, swept on by a tempest of hail, down upon the kingdom of Israel, to cast down its crown—a flood which God would not stay because Israel's sins called for judgment. This description is not too strong for the curse of drink, which as a rising flood is pouring through all lands, increasing in every country in the world at the dawn of the twentieth Christian century. As in Israel and Judah in the prosperous time of our story, so throughout the world to-day, save the Congo, where those who break every other law, enforce prohibition because of its commercial value, knowing if the negro workmen get they will bring in less rubber—a prin applicable to all workmen everywh increasing intemperance is a dread quence of "prosperity." The "fat va and the "overcoming of wine" ever go together.

"The crown of pride shall be tro under foot." Here, again, the rev crown is pictured not alone as faded as trampled under foot. How literal that is beautiful in life is trampled u foot by drink! Even the orange blos of a happy bridal are soon trampled a drunken husband—alas, with incre frequency in these days by a drunken Love is turned to loathing. The beau boy becomes a bloated tramp, the be ful girl a drunkard's haggard wife. us stop this treading of the beautiful u foot, and instead tread down the evil tom and stamp out the evil traffic. L put with Isaiah's "Woe to the crow pride," Solomon's "Who hath woe?" Habakkuk's "Woe unto him that gi his neighbor drink." We do that whe directly or indirectly authorize anothe do it.

The Way to Restoration

Captivity to alcohol in Judah prece and preparing the captivity in Assy "In that day shall the Lord of Hosts for a crown of glory unto the residu his people." Here the prophet turn Judah, which is to be the "residue" w presently Israel is carried capt But even in Judah he seems single out in this verse the few t are loyal, before turning to many whose intemperance bring ruin to the nation. In c trast with the reveler's crown verse sets the crown of glory t God gives, in his own favor blessing, to those who keep wise and powerful laws, revea in Scripture and nature "for good always." If there were world but this it would never to break a law of God, as every does who uses a poison as a b erage.

Israel's captivity was perpet as we recall in speaking sadly the "lost tribes," while Judah pented and was restored. So many among those who o entered the captivity of appet are lost, while a few only restored, mostly those who ha learned in their despair that

The Lion of Judah can break every cha
And give us the victory again and aga

But these restored captives the very ones to tell the boys a girls with most intensity, that "p vention is better than cure;" th it is easier to prevent than repent. Why should any one who lo his fellows or even himself touch a thi that is not a necessity of life, that m grow to be an inward chain for himself, to some one who will be led to drink by example? No Christian should have a part in keeping up a custom which on t whole will do more harm than goo Merely to please myself I have no right endanger both myself and others.

Ignoring Warning

"They also have erred through wine. Having pointed the sin and punishment the neighboring kingdom, Isaiah, as faithful preacher and teacher, plainly tel the rulers of Judah that the same sins a to be found at home, and will bring lik retribution sooner or later. "Israel e slaved to drink, will soon be captive Assyria," he says in substance, "and will you if you do not reform." Th warning was in vain. Judah continued t drink, and indulge the other sins to whic it leads, especially in a luxurious time, an in a hundred years the nation fell.

The greatest error of those who have t do with wine is the error which the Frenc scientists are exposing in the bill-poste campaign against "alcoholism," whic means the diseased condition of the tipple who may never have been drunk in his life but whose bodily cells are all poisoned b even such a daily indulgence as ignoran people call "moderation," and suppose t be harmless.

"THE MISSION OF THE FLOWERS"

Work of the National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild

'ERAL years ago, a group of New fork women associated themselves ogether with the avowed object of ing brightness into the lives of the and to bring them in touch with world of nature." They had come eve that not poverty, not sickness, en want, were productive of so much (and misery's twin-sister, sin), as adly monotony of the lives of the poor and that lack of which is the inevitable de- on of those who are reared well in the slums. Acting these premises, the associa- f women resolved to reach earts of the "submerged t" in their poor homes, as as in the institutions wher- sick or sorry, they might journing. "The gift of s," they said, "can never rize: it conveys a silent ge of sympathy, and often the way to mutual under- ng and further opportunities ipfulness."

idea took shape rapidly, on working branches of the al guild were organized in York, Washington, Phila- a, Albany, Cincinnati and Colum- These branches are known as the outing centres, while the small towns illages within a hundred miles of either plant, cultivate and finally pluck the masses of fragrant blossoms, which are then sent forth upon their silent mission of "peace and good-will." Friends of the enterprise have multiplied; the great express companies of the country have generously supplied the Guild with a franked label, which proves an open sesame to every railroad, thus dispensing with the usual express charges upon the multitude of baskets and boxes of nosegays which are sped on their way to the cities by the village branches.

Figures are dull reading, but they tell the story of the National Flower Guild as nothing else can do. Last summer, the New York City branch distributed over 15,000 bunches of flowers each week during the ten-week heated term to the hospitals, rescue missions, children's institutions and the homes of the poor, making a grand total of nearly 200,000 nosegays given and 400,000 eyes gladdened in New York City alone. This beautiful work was made possible by the faithful industry of the country branches, whose great baskets, piled high with the blooms of wood and dell as well as garden, came regularly to the eager workers in the city. They found no task of distribution too heavy which brought a smile to the face of a child, a memory of youth to a tired mother, or a moment of forgetfulness to the racked sufferers who filled the long hospital wards.

Naturally the question is often asked, "What do they do through the long winter when there are no gardens, no wild flowers?" The Guild answers, "Where there's a will there's a way;" and they keep closely in touch with the gilded "four hundred," who often expend thousands of dollars upon the floral decorations of a single ball or the "coming-out" party of the debutante daughter. These people gladly give the huge masses of roses and other flowers when they have performed their function, and the alert representative of the city branch, wherever it may be, is on hand bright and early next morning to select her posies. In New York last winter, the boys of the Settlement clubs helped in the work of distribution, carrying 34,515 bunches of beautiful and fragrant flowers to ninety-one institutions.

There are stories to tell which would fill a book. Stories of the Jewish girls of the ghetto who went out to the suburbs, spending every blissful moment of their leisure in the little garden patches which were assigned them, and raising 5,000 bunches of sweet garden favorites for the institutions of the lower East Side. Stories of the 800 window boxes placed in tenement homes, each with its "three geraniums, two English ivies and a wandering Jew." What lessons they taught of nature and of nature's God!

No part of the entire plan is more commendable than its double mission, which "blesseth him that gives and him that takes." There are women in New England villages whom summer finds with trim gardens overrun with sweet peas and monthly pinks and June roses; there are women in comfortable farm homes of the West, where marigolds and asters, "bachelor's buttons" and "sweet william" run riot in their dear yards; there are classes of bright girls in the village Sunday School. These are all ready and glad to "do something for the tenement children, or the poor, sick sufferers in hospital or prison," but they have not known how to go about it. Write to Miss Fairfield, National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and she will tell just what to do and how to do it. She will send seeds to those who feel unable to provide them, and can only give their labor to the cause. She will welcome all correspondence from friends of the work which may tend toward enlarging the borders of the Guild, increasing its field of usefulness and establishing centres both for contribution and distribution in sections of the country where none now exist.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

By Margaret E. Sangster

A Call for Freedom

"POSITIVELY," said the elderly friend, shaking her head with decision, "it is Melissa's duty to stay at home with her mother. At least, she should stay at home for two or three years. Her mother is lonely, and needs a daughter's company."

"But why might not Mellisa's mother go and stay with her in town? Mellisa's work is there, and she cannot easily leave it. In the competition of the hour, to resign a position is usually to lose a foothold. Somebody else will fill the vacancy if Melissa drops out, and when she is at liberty again there will be no niche awaiting her. Has not the daughter a right to be considered and to live her own life as well as the mother?"

"What you say is very true, but one may not transplant old trees. Mrs. ——— has lived in this little hamlet forty years. She has a roomy and cheery house, with sunlight on every side. She has her old neighbors and her church, her garden and her many interests. Shut her up in the narrow confines of a city compartment, among indifferent strangers, with her daughter and her daughter's friends away all day at their work, and she would droop and pine. Melissa should drop her profession and come home."

Discussions like this are very often heard in these days, when the college-bred daughter, prepared for some department in the world's work, finds that to practice her art or use her talents in a bread-winning occupation, she must leave her early home. She finds work that she enjoys, she makes a home for herself on the co-operative plan, with two or three congenial friends, workers as she is, and occasionally, at holiday and vacation times, she flies up country for a visit.

If her mother were ill, or worn out with age and care, if the home were crushed under the millstone of poverty, the daughter would cheerfully respond to the call of duty. How joyfully she would help her mother close the house, if mother would but remove to town. But it is hard to transplant old trees.

Nobody cast a shadow of reproach on Melissa's married sisters. They, too, have left home and their mother and are in homes of their own. It is regarded as perfectly legitimate for a girl to marry and live her life as wife and mother in her own household, and this second household is as the flower of the first. But as yet, many good people are doubtful and inclined to be critical when a girl, unmarried and making her own way independently, pitches her tent in another place, boards, or keeps house, or earns her living, while her mother remains daughterless at home.

The question cannot be disposed of by wholesale. Each case stands by itself. As a rule, duty reveals itself clearly to those who honestly seek to know it. When we really lay selfish considerations aside and ask God's guidance, he gives it to us. The great trouble for most of us lies in our clinging to our own way. Whoever with single-heartedness desires God's way, will be led, step by step, to the peace and blessedness of the heart that abides in the will of God.

Mothers and daughters are bound together by very close and tender ties. And yet, once childhood is over, a daughter, grown to woman's estate, ought not to be kept in pupilage. There are dominant mothers, who do not dream that their habit of authority fetters their grown-up children, and that their personality hinders development or arrests it on the part of their juniors. There are daughters, not a few, who, with the very best intentions, cramp their mothers, interfere with their liberty, and so surround them with delicate attentions and timid hoverings of love, that they force them over the border-line of middle age into the land of clouds and shadows, which old age is to those who reach it too soon.

On one phase of this subject it does no harm to dwell. Every woman who has work to do in the great world should have the background that suits her, if it can be procured. Hundreds of young women are at work with brains or fingers in this busy age of this busy world. Everybody concedes that they are right in doing the work they choose, provided they do it well. Why not concede to them the right of choice as to the place where they may prefer to live?

A young girl felt herself called of God to be a foreign missionary. She was accepted by a Board of the Church, her field was selected, and she sailed away. "Were there no duties for Jeanie at home," cried the censors, who disapproved, "no children here for her to teach, no souls to be shown the way of life? She has left her mother to grope on in solitude." But the mother asked no pity. "In my girlhood," she said, "I longed to carry the Gospel to the heathen. God did not accept my service there. Now, I am happy and honored in sending my child to take up the work I love." When we see duty, let us do it. Never mind what anyone may say.

IN THE MEADOW — By Camille Bullanger

In this pretty French pastoral the artist has told the old, sweet story of love and toil. The youth is resting after a morning's work; the maiden, bound on a domestic errand, pauses to chat with him, and over them both is the peace and beauty of the fields, the restful charm of Mother Earth. They meet now for a moment. At eventide they will meet again for a longer talk under the stars.

A Curious Bit of History

In one of his interestsing letters, the late Lafacadio Hearn quotes to a friend a curious and interesting bit of history about musical instruments, telling how Rome gathered them from every corner where her men had fought, and how the sweetness of music succeeded the horrid clamor of war in that old city by the Tiber. Mr. Hearn translated the fragment from a medæval manuscript. Here it is:

"The Romans, at the termination of their conquests, had brought to this country and adopted nearly all the musical instruments they had discovered among the peoples they had conquered. Thus, Greece furnished Rome with nearly all the soft instruments of the family of flutes and of lyres; Germany and the provinces of the north, inhabited by warlike races, taught their conquerors to acquire a taste for terrible instruments of the family of trumpets and drums; Asia, and in particular Judea, which had greatly multiplied the number of metallic instruments for use in ceremonies of religion, naturalized among the Romans' clashing instruments of the family of bells and tam-tams: Egypt introduced the sistrum into Italy, together with the worship of Isis; and no sooner had Byzantium invented the first wind organs, than the religion of Christ adopted them, that she might consecrate them exclusively to the solemnities of her worship, west and east."

Rich Women and Benevolen

NO one who has observed the liberal benefa of Mrs. Russell Sage in the past few month have failed to note the wisdom and discretio which she administers her wealth. It is a pleasing elty in gifts to educational institutions to bestow without some hampering condition. For example, a struggling college receives a provisional gift w time limit, and the pressing necessity of raising equal to the gift, or else losing it altogether, many i ests suffer and much anxiety is felt while the tediou toilsome work of getting a great many small su balance the large one goes anxiously on. Mrs. Sag liberally enriching her beloved Emma Willard S and the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Troy enormously added to the power of these places of l ing. She has made it possible for them to do wi delay a great deal more for their fortunate students could have been done had she sent them a provis gift. In all that Mrs. Sage is doing for the educatio young people in this land and for the Christian Ass tion work that she holds in honor, she shows hers woman of large heart and brain, with a strong gra whatever situation she considers.

Rich women are by no means exceptional in t country. While there may not be those whom it is rig to name conspicuously as in the cases just mentione there are east and west a host of women who stand b hind our charities, who work strenuously in boards a committees, and whose almsgiving is a matter of pray and consecration. They do not give of their abundan in a spirit of patronage or condescension, and it is th delight to help their sister women and to forward eve good cause that makes an appeal to their hearts a minds.

A conservative estimate puts the population at 600,000, of whom fifteen per cent. are eating solid food, fifty per cent. gruel or cereals and the remainder a stew of leaves, grass and kindred rubbish. Fifty per cent. of the people are suffering acute starvation and the distress is increasing daily."

Writing from one of the great famine camps, a correspondent of the North China Herald says that some of those who die of starvation are so emaciated that the ribs literally protrude through the skin, which is cracked, and the body is practically fleshless. Of the multitudes congregated in these camps, a very large proportion have been either compelled or persuaded to return to the villages whence they came, and there the final tragedy must be worked out. Those who remain are housed in mat huts, closely packed together. The government dole of thirty cash (2c.) per diem is distributed by officials, who are continually passing in and through the crowds with wheel-barrows laden with small copper coins. As soon as the distribution is made the people swarm out to the grain market, where the rice, millet, corn and other foodstuffs supplied by the Shanghai Relief Committee are sold at the lowest possible figure.

Every speck of grain is watched eagerly with hungry, wolfish eyes lest it spill on the ground and be lost.

once, but one by one they broke down, and when the last one went our chances were slim enough, for the seas were mountain high, and it was coming on night, so it seemed that before long it would be a toss up whether we'd go down with the J. M. or in the boats.

"'Stand by the ship, lads,' called the cap'n, so we stuck to her, and with the life-lines rigged around us we tackled the hand pumps for all we were worth. Right here, mates, with the music of the brakes clanking in your ears, that girl comes into my yarn again in a haze of glory, as they say, for, as the song says, a daring, resolute heart, that little woman stands alone with Grace Darling and no mistake; for, besides going down into the wet galley and making coffee to brace us up when we were faint from steady pumping, whenever one of us rested a bit she herself worked at the brakes, and besides that she sung songs to cheer us on; didn't she, Griff?" Jim called to his old shipmate.

"She did, chummie," was the warm response, "and some of them stands by me yet. More'n that, but for them I'd not be here to-night, but up in the north end of old Boston, maybe, or maybe in the Hanover Street Station sleeping it off. You see, mates, the girl got me to swear off too. But say, Jim, let's get in the song verse. Tom'll help us. All together—now come!"

Aye, altogether they did "come," just as the billows come tumbling in and breaking in thunder tones along a rock-bound shore:

Now there's been a lot of praying
Since the days of auld lang'syne,
But I warrant, Lillie Hartwell,
There was ne'er a prayer like thine;
"Thou hast heard us, dearest Father,
And be pleased to hear again,
Guide us, and help us help ourselves,
For Jesus' sake, a—men!"
And she sang the sweetest songlettes,
That just filled our hearts with cheer,
And with trusting and believing,
Till there wasn't room for fear!
And we drank the steaming coffee,
And we took another hump,
And we kept on steady pumping,
Pump—pump—pump!

Even Skipper Osgood had joined in the thunder tones, and as they died away, his face all aglow, he shouted, "All hands up once more; and as we drink the steaming coffee, because of her influence and the real good she did, let it be to the health of that girl, wheresoever she be to-night!"

"That's the toast for old blood!" shouted Griff. "Wheresoever she may be to-night, God bless her!" There was no doubting his earnest tones, it was contagious, and then, as the last empty mug thundered down upon the mess-table, Jim continued: "All here know that the very worst minute is just before the turn comes, so, mates, it doesn't pay to give up hope. I learned that on board the Marston. One by one, the mates caved in at the brakes, clean played out, so much so they just dropped where thy'd been standing, trusting to the life-lines, you know, and by-and-by there was only the girl and myself at the brakes. She worked with a will, too, I tell you, and with her back to windward, kept her strokes in time with her singing.

"She had one favorite, and as Griff here says, it still stands by us. It was a pilot song; you've all heard it, no doubt, at the Seaman's Bethel. I had lots of times, but it never sounded so fine or so much to the point as when that girl sung it! Well, as I was saying, we two alone were at the pump; Cap'n Hartwell at the wheel, and holding her before it, us going like a bird, everybody else played clean out, and the brakes to my blistered hands getting like redhot irons, so much so I was just letting go when I suddenly noticed the sou'easter had died out, and wasn't any more'n a cat's paw, and away to the east was daybreak, and ahead on the lee side was land!

"'Judson,' said the girl, 'isn't this grand! You and I may be saving all their lives.' You see it was others, not self, with that girl.

"'Isn't that grand?' said I, pointing over the port bow; and you never saw a happier lass in all this world! There were fourteen of us, and most of them had gone and huddled together on the forecastle head; but when I shouted, 'Land ho!' things changed lively. Griff here took the wheel; the old man the quarterdeck, and with new life in them the rest jumped at the brakes to try to keep the old tub afloat long enough to beach her, and we did beach her not a minute too soon, I calculate."

"But that girl!" broke in Griffin. "Will any of us ever forget her, do you think? Never, I say, for she did a mighty lot of good that one trip. Judson here and me and only two of that crew, you mind, mates, but wheresoever may be any of the others to-night there you will find a total abstainer, and mind you, all this happened 'way back in the middle nineties, and ever since for all of us it's been fair sailing with a light breeze, smooth sea and a fair haven. What more could a sailor fellow ask, eh, mates?"

Skipper Judson sprang to his feet, and swinging his long arms furiously, called earnestly: "All hands up; that's right, mates. Now we'll have that third verse, then the last one strong and hard; let everybody sing. Come now—one—two—three; down—right—left—up—begin!"

With that leaking bark a-drifting
Helpless on those mount'nous seas,
You'd expect to find that lassie
Praying, tearful, on her knees;
But altho' she knew the danger,
Yet she didn't know a fear,
And she kept right on a-telling
Of the Pilot, ever near.
And when wind and wave subsided
At the break of morning light,
Sure enough we saw a haven—
Aye, that littie gal was right!
And we drank the steaming coffee,
And we took another hump,
And we kept on steady pumping,
Pump—pump—pump!

You might search the whole world over,
Rake it with a fine tooth comb,
You ne'er could find a gladder lot
Of tars on getting home!
But our hearts and lives are better,
And the reason know ye shall,
'Twas the faith, the prayers and singing
Of that brave and noble gal.
And tho' years are swiftly passing,
Still we never have forgot
How she made and served us coffee
From the galley's biggest pot;
How we drank the steaming coffee,
How we took another hump,
How we kept on steady pumping,
Pump—pump—pump!

When quiet was restored the story-teller asked, in a dream-like voice: "Have any of you happened to see the Times of last Monday?"

There being no response, Ed Osgood voiced the expectancy by asking, "What was in it, Jim? Anything about the girl?"

For reply long Jim drew a paper from an inner pocket, and passing it to his host, said pleasantly, as he pointed to a marked paragraph, "Read that to the mates, Ed."

The skipper got under the light, studied the page a moment, and then read aloud:

"Married in Boston, 26th inst., by Rev. John S Higgens, Captain James Judson, of Gloucester, to Miss Lillian Lee Hartwell, daughter of Captain Thad. Hartwell, a former well-known Boston sailing master."

"Hooroo, fellows!" shouted Ed Osgood, joyously. "Hip-hip-hooroo!" Again pandemonium reigned, yet above this joyful uproar John Griffin's voice rang out clear and strong:

"Mug up! Mug up, all hands—and—we'll quaff this one to the long life, health and happiness of Jud's wife, the bravest little woman that ever trod a deck!"

AMBASSADOR OF FAMINE

Shishkoff Comes Here to tell the Story of Russia's Suffering

NICHOLAS A. SHISHKOFF, liberal, belonging to the hereditary nobility of Russia, and one ers of relief work in all the famines that have come to his untry, is now in America, striv- aid for the famine-stricken Southeastern and Central Eu- ssia. Mr. Shishkoff comes as citizen, but he is backed by credentials from the United Famine Relief Committee.

ussian Woman's Appeal

llowing letter from St. Peters- s a glimpse of the terrible con- affairs in Russia at the present

Mr. Editor: Few, if any, have done more to seal the brotherhood of nations than America. My countrymen have good cause to think of yours as 'friends in need—friends indeed,' and I, remembering the prompt, generous and kindly aid we received so gratefully from the Americans in the year 1892, appeal now—in our sore trouble—to their sympathy for our suffering.

"Millions of men, women, children and babies are dying to-day in our famine-stricken districts. The winter is a very severe one this year and in their dark, cold hovels our unfortunate peasants and their families are trying—not always successfully—to keep soul and body together. Whole villages are down with typhus, low fever and scurvy. Little children, with limbs swollen and distorted and blood-stained gums (the result of scurvy from insufficient and improper food), are dying before their patient mothers' eyes.

"Help them, American mothers; help your suffering sisters, you Christian women of America!

"Dear Mr. Editor, could not THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and, may be, some kindhearted men and women, too, get up a contribution in aid of the Russian peasants in the famine-stricken districts? If every American gave but half a cent, thousands upon thousands would be saved from hunger, misery, disease and a terrible death.

"I speak as one praying for her dear ones' lives.

"Some months ago a small circle of friends of mine, rich in nothing but true pity, organized a society in aid of the famine-stricken districts, the idea and working of which cannot fail to appeal to the sympathies of democratic America. It is called 'The Copeck Union,' and its members are bound to try and collect a few copecks from each lodging (flat) of the house he or she lives in. In this way we have been able—God be thanked—to succor many thousands of our unfortunate peasants; but, alas! what are thousands where whole millions are dying?

"Help us. We need help sorely.

"May God awaken love and pity for our poor countrymen and countrywomen in the hearts of all and each of your people! "(Signed) MARY WEISSBERG, "Vice-President of 'The Copeck Union.'"

AS TO FLAVOR

Found Her Favorite Again.

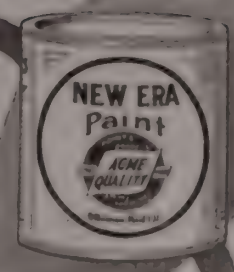
A bright young lady of the Buckeye State tells how she came to be acutely sensitive as to the taste of coffee:

"My health had been very poor for several years," she says, "I loved coffee and drank it for breakfast, but only learned by accident, as it were, that it was the cause of the constant, dreadful headaches from which I suffered every day, and of the nervousness that drove sleep from my pillow and so deranged my stomach that everything I ate gave me acute pain.

"My condition finally got so serious that I was advised by my doctor to go to a hospital. I went to one of the largest in Detroit. There they gave me what I supposed was coffee, and I thought it was the best I ever drank, but I have since learned it was Postum. I gained rapidly and came home in four weeks.

"Somehow the coffee we used at home didn't taste right when I got back. I tried various kinds, but none tasted as good as that I drank in the hospital, and all brought back the dreadful headaches and the 'sick-all-over' feeling. At last one day I got a package of Postum Food Coffee, and the first taste of it I took I said, 'that's the good coffee we had in the hospital!' I have drunk it ever since, 3 times a day, and eat Grape-Nuts for my breakfast. I have no more headaches, and feel better than I have for years. Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason."

The Answer to All Paint Questions



To most people paint is more or less of a mystery and the buying and applying of it largely a matter of chance.

To simplify all paint problems the company operating the largest paint and varnish plant in the world has originated the system of "Acme Quality"—a mark that plainly and instantly designates the very best paints, varnishes, stains and enamels possible to produce.

The "Acme Quality" kind includes Everything That Goes on with a Brush—making it easy for anyone, anywhere, to secure with absolute certainty the Perfect Paint for Every Purpose, by simply looking for this

A Great Paint Book FREE

As a further help to every paint user a text-book has been prepared by practical painters on "The Selection and Use of Paints and Finishes." This book takes up in turn every kind of painting, varnishing, staining and enameling. Its explanations and directions have been worked out by men who really know and are willing that others should also know.

It is the only book of its kind ever published. Valuable to the painter, the housewife, the property owner, to everyone. Free on Request.

In buying, no matter for what use you want paint, varnish or enamel, always insist on the "Acme Quality" kind.

Music Lessons Free

IN YOUR OWN HOME

A wonderful offer to every lover of music, whether a beginner or an advanced player.

Ninety-six lessons (or a less number if you desire) for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Banjo, Cornet or Mandolin will be given free to make our home study courses for these instruments known in your locality. You will get one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Write at once. It will mean much to you to get our free booklet. It will place you under no obligation whatever to us if you never write again. You and your friends should know of this work. Hundreds of our pupils write: "Wish I had known of your school before." "Have learned more in one term in my home with your weekly lessons than in three terms with private teachers, and at a great deal less expense." "Everything is so thorough and complete." "The lessons are marvels of simplicity, and my 11-year-old boy has not had the least trouble to learn." One minister writes: "As each succeeding lesson comes I am more and more fully persuaded I made no mistake in becoming your pupil."

We have been established seven years—have hundreds of pupils from eight years of age to seventy. Don't say you cannot learn music till you send for our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent by return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7B, 19 Union Square, New York City.

properly arrested as a public defaulter. The case was tried before a competent judge and jury. That tax-collector was acquitted, on the legal technicality that the law of the country did not specifically state that the tax-collector was required to pay that money into the treasury in gold. Legally, that recreant tax-collector was an honest man, but morally he was a thief and a swindler. So the Pharisees, by legal technicalities, circumvented the spirit of the Hebrew laws. They climbed over the laws. They crawled through the loopholes of the laws. They broke the laws of God just the same as some astute citizens are breaking the laws of their country to-day.

Making the Talmud

When the Pharisaical order began to grow, the Rabinical leaders did not think the Bible statements of what God wanted his people to do were strict enough and full enough and explicit enough in their teachings. So these Pharisaical leaders, or rabbis, year after year, century after century, began to form a companion to the Bible, which was not so much commentaries of the Bible as extensions of the Bible. They filled up their pages with commandments which God was supposed to have forgotten to tell Moses and Joshua and Jeremiah and David and Ezekiel. Thus this Talmud is nothing more or less than the traditions or the oral sayings of the old Pharisaical rabbis. It told the Jews what kind of clothes they were to wear on the Sabbath Day and how they were to cut their finger nails.

This is the truth about the Talmud. It is filled with trivialities and with the greatest amount of unmitigated nonsense which was ever compacted between the covers of any book. So with our Bible to-day. The learned theologians have been at work. They have covered the leaves with a mass of traditions. They have evolved out of its pages a conglomerate mass of meanings which a ten-year-old child ought to have sense enough to see are not there. And instead of our opening the leaves of our sacred Bible and reading the simple parables of Jesus Christ and interpreting them as they ought to be interpreted, we are hedging our sectarian churches around with the sayings of theologians that Christ would at once repudiate if he were upon earth.

The Cardinal and Essential Doctrines taught in the Bible are two. The one, man is a sinner. The other, Christ is a Saviour. Let us beware of trying to hedge in our sectarian churches by a great mass of traditional creeds which should have been burned up long ago in the fires of the Dark Ages of sectarian strife.

Now, like a carpenter driving his nail into a board and clinching it upon the other side, we would clinch the applications of this sermon. There are two truths here which we want you to carry home. The one is positive, the other is negative. The first is this: We should adopt the Bible as our only infallible rule of faith and practice. When you try to live that Bible, will you practice its spirit and not simply cling to the letter of the law? Will you do this no matter what problems of life you have to face? For instance, when a man lies about you and misrepresents you and says all manner of evil against you falsely, will you try to win that man to Jesus Christ by the law of love and not by the law of hate? Will you show forgiveness to those who have done you a personal injury?

But there is a negative side to this subject as well as a positive. We must not disobey any of the commands God has given. We must not suppose that the gifts we make to Christ's cause or our regular attendance at church or our Bible reading or our prayers will cover over and atone for lying, stealing and cheating. Sins of the social world, sins of business life and sins of the home must be repented of and renounced. The Pharisees were so particular about their beliefs, that they used to have the law written on a very small form and compressed it into a small box, called a phylactery, and tied this box as a plaster upon their foreheads and wore it as they went around the street that every body could see it. So there are many church members who make a great parade of their orthodoxy and their Christian beliefs. But they are not honest in business and they are not true to God in their home relations, and they neglect their duties to God and devote themselves to pleasure. When you confront them with the question, "Is that right?" they answer, "Other church members do it, why should not I?" Are you resolutely willing to toe the mark of Christian integrity, no matter what other church members may do or say?

Faults of Conduct

Tell me honestly, are you serving God aright when you go to those progressive euchre parties? Are you serving him aright when you overreach a man in a business deal? Are you serving him aright when you let the theatre party and the dance-hall crowd out the prayer-meeting. Are you serving him aright when you have wine upon your table? There is no excuse to-day to say, "Some ministers and church elders do those things." The question for you to decide is, "Is it right for me to do them?" God does not judge us by what the other Christians do. God judges us by what we do ourselves. "Every man must give account of himself to God."

"Well," you say, "if I cannot follow men and I must follow the Bible, tell me in a few words how I can best learn what the Bible wants me to do. I cannot read all its books in a night." Of course not. Just take the Four Gospels for a guide. Take the central figure of the Bible for your model. Paul was a Pharisee of the Pharisees. He said it. But Paul as a Pharisee had to renounce many things before he became Paul the triumphant apostle. Take Christ as your guide. Follow him. Do what he would have you do. If you are in doubt about any act just say to yourself, "What would Jesus do in my place?" If you take Christ as your model and keep studying him and keep clinging to him, there is no doubt but that you will come out all right. Oh, sinner, worried and anxious in the struggle of life, wilt thou take this sure and infallible guide for thy earthly life and for thy celestial companionship?

Spiritual Treasures

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH: Your premiums are always worth having; that is an accepted fact, known wherever THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is read. The Calendar is a marvel of beauty that can hardly be surpassed; but I wish to speak particularly of the three little books which make up the "Devotional Library." Each one of them, all of them, should stay close by the Christian's Bible and be read in conjunction with it. The little volume of "Precious Promises"—what a treasure to have and to hold! All ready, taken bodily from the source of all comfort, placed in order to be used in every emergency of need. Old as the little book is it is new to me, and will be my delight during the few years that are left to me. The words I have just written will apply to the other two books. You have given me help and comfort, for which I shall never cease to thank you.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been my daily companion for years; I can do without any other publication, but not without that.

Then I close my mouth and take in great, satisfying breaths of this good air, and I never have a cold. There is no need that anybody should ever have one."

One lady starves her colds. She eats absolutely nothing from the time that a cold comes on until it is quite banished, which, she says, is never more than three days. This is a drastic method, but it certainly works with many people.

Kate Upson Clark

The old proverb, "Feed a cold and starve a fever," this lady remarks, was originally, "If you feed a cold, you will have a fever to starve." This interpretation has historical warrant.

One doctor, a homeopath, who relies mainly in all his practice upon what his allopathic brethren scornfully call "dilutions," says that quinine is the great germ-killer. Since a cold is a germ disease, he prescribes boldly for its cure (in the face of almost solid opposition on the part of his professional brethren) quinine in small doses. He says that there is less reaction to quinine than to any other stimulant; but it is a dangerous drug for all that, and many cases of deafness can be traced to its use.

The "water cure" used to be the most popular remedy of all. "Some like it hot and some like it cold." You may be "packed" with it on the outside, or you may take it internally. It is generally safe to drink two or more quarts of pretty warm or fairly cold water during the twenty-four hours, provided it is done at a proper remove from one's meal times.

In the wildest flight of the novelist, he never makes his heroine fascinate the hero when she has a cold. Never appear in society with one if you wish to be popular. As Miss Austen and Miss Burney are always putting it, one cannot be "in spirits" when one has a cold. And remember always that almost anything is better for it than drugs. Medicine is sometimes necessary, but it has probably killed more than it has ever cured.

THE WHOLE FAMILY

Mother Finds a Food for Grown-ups and Children as Well.

Food that can be eaten with relish and benefit by the children as well as the older members of the family, makes a pleasant household commodity.

Such a food is Grape-Nuts. It not only agrees with and builds up children, but older persons who, from bad habits of eating, have become dyspeptics.

A Phila. lady, after being benefited herself, persuaded her husband to try Grape-Nuts for stomach trouble. She writes:

"About eight years ago I had a severe attack of congestion of stomach and bowels. From that time on, I had to be very careful about eating, as nearly every kind of food then known to me, seemed to cause pain.

"Four years ago I commenced to use Grape-Nuts. I grew stronger and better and from that time I seldom have been without it; have gained in health and strength and am now heavier than I ever was.

"My husband was also in a bad condition—his stomach became so weak that he could eat hardly anything with comfort. I got him to try Grape-Nuts and he soon found his stomach trouble had disappeared.

"My girl and boy, 3 and 9 years old do not want anything else for breakfast but Grape-Nuts and more healthy children cannot be found." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

"I'll Send and Pay the Freight on a Basket Washing Machine to any point East of the Mississippi for $3.50."

MAYOR TUNNINGTON.

I believe the "Basket Washing Machine" is the best and cheapest machine in the world to-day, and I am honest in that statement. The reason I believe it, is because there is not another machine made that will do a washing and do it good in so short a time.

Yes, I'm Mayor of Fremont, Ohio.

Am Mayor now; and it is because I'm Mayor that I have taken up this work.

There's no one in a position to feel the pulse of a community as well as that community's chief executive. He hears of the reverses in life, the hardships, the disappointments; he is supposed to be counselor, adviser and able to suggest a remedy for all evils.

Well, I believe that by placing the "Basket Washing Machine" upon the market at $3.50—a machine that will wash as well as any machine made—I've lightened the burdens of more people than by any other method I might pursue. That was my idea in making the Basket Washer. This is an age of reform, square deal, glad hand; uplifting of humanity. We're here to help each other, give each other a fair chance. I am doing it. I know I am doing that every day, for I am daily sending washing machines to every part of the country and paying the freight myself.

You understand, don't you, why this appeals to me? You must see why I know the urgent, pressing need for a high grade machine at the lowest possible cost. I see it every day. I saw it until I made up my mind that such a machine should be offered to every one, and I shall do that to the limit of my ability.

I don't ask you to keep the Washer if you are not satisfied with it. Send it back at my expense. But I don't believe you will send it. There has never been one returned.

After you have discovered for yourself, by actual experience, that a tub of clothes can be washed in six minutes and less, and be washed clean by either you or your little girl, you are pretty certain to keep the Basket Washer. Then, there is the price, $3.50—cheaper than any other good Washer was ever before offered. And I'll go further: I'll guarantee it for five years, and it'll do a washing every day for that length of time.

WRITE TO ME TO-DAY ABOUT IT; OR, BETTER STILL, ORDER ONE. It is so simple that only a small circular is necessary to describe it fully.

MAYOR TUNNINGTON, Box "F," Fremont, Ohio.

Resurrection*

WHEN men emerge from barbarism and begin to think, the possibility of there being a life after death inevitably becomes a subject of earnest consideration. Man sees his father and mother and his friends die and shrinks from the thought that their existence is ended. Even the Indian, before he knew anything of the white man's speculations, worked out for himself a theory of happy hunting-grounds beyond the grave, in which his revived being would find satisfaction. The idea found expression in ancient Egypt by the care taken of the dead form, by which bodies have been preserved to our day, five thousand years later. They believed that the dead would be reanimated. In every nation the idea has existed of a life after death, in the Egyptian or some other form. Among the Hindus the idea was not of the cast-off body being reanimated, but of the soul of man being born anew in some child or animal. That idea has survived to the present day and is still held by some of the modern philosophers.

With others the idea was of the soul living apart from the body in a spiritual, disembodied condition. The author of the book of Job refers to this theory when he says (19: 26, R. V.), "Without my flesh shall I see God.' The Psalmist who wrote Psalm 49, seems to have had the same idea when he wrote (verse 15), "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." Isaiah seems to have expected a physical resurrection, when he wrote (26: 19), "Thy dead men shall live together, with my dead body shall they arise." Ezekiel also appears to have held that opinion. His thirty-seventh chapter is a vivid picture of it. Daniel agrees. He says (12: 2), "Many who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake."

Paul accepts none of these theories. His idea is contained in I. Cor. 15, and, broadly, is that God will give a new body differing in many respects from the former body. In verses 38, 42, 43 and 44, he defines these differences. As to the other details, about which inquiries might be made, he brushes them aside by calling the inquirer "a fool" (verse 36). But he contends that our resurrection is patterned on that of Christ, and if we closely examine what that was, we find that his was a transformed body, not a new one; for it bore the marks of the nails and the spear. Besides this, the former body had disappeared and the grave was empty, which would scarcely have been the case if the body of his resurrection had been entirely new.

So, as to the details, we are still in the dark, but we can wait for those, having the glad assurance that "when he appeareth we shall be like him," and that until then, though our bodies rot in the grave or be devoured by beasts or by the flames, our souls will be safe with him in glory.

Human Models†

OUR great poet told us long ago that "Lives of great men all remind us, we may make our lives sublime," and there have been some men, not esteemed great by the world, whose lives teach the same lesson. It would be very unwise to limit our models to Bible characters. The men whose names are mentioned there, did not exhaust the list of nobility and heroism. Some of them were very imperfect and some so bad that their story serves as a warning instead of a model. There have been many statesmen in secular history better than Solomon or Ahithophel; many soldiers better than Samson or Joab; many preachers better than Jonah or Elisha. Leaving out of consideration Him whose life surpassed all others in the world, the model of all ages, we find few who were free from reproach. They were, for the greater part, imperfect men, of like passions and frailties as our own.

It would be difficult, if not impossible, to name any man, of any period, Jesus alone excepted, whose life and character in their entirety would serve as a model for every one. There are men of great courage who might stand as a model for the timid, but such men have defects of character which we would not wish any man to imitate. It comes to this, therefore, that we can point to qualities, of which certain men have been an example, and bid a man strive to attain those qualities, keeping in mind the examples, but further we dare not go. If from all the celebrated men of history we could make up a composite character, taking the courage of one, the humility of another, the magnanimity of a third, the generosity of a fourth, we might construct of the many a perfect whole. But the whole would show the patchwork effect and would inevitably be marred by the defects with which the excellences are entwined. Saintly men there have been in every land; men whose names are a precious treasure to their countrymen; these we may bid men admire and imitate, but of none can we say as we say of Jesus, he was in all things an example worthy of imitation.

The Birth of an Island

WE always think of "mother earth" as one of the most solid and permanent of creations, unless we happen to live near San Francisco or Kingston, Jamaica; but, as a matter of fact, she is constantly changing. Only a few weeks ago, there rose out of the sea, near the coast of Burma, an island 400 yards long and 200 yards wide; at its highest part it was 20 feet above high water mark.

A detachment from the Royal Indian Survey was sent out to investigate this latest addition to the British Empire and chart it, so that vessels who had gone over clear water on one voyage would not find themselves stuck in the new island on their return. The landing party found the island still warm, in some places hot; at the depth of three feet the mud registered 148 degrees Fahrenheit. In the centre of the island was a crater exuding mud in a heavy stream. The party raised a large flag on a high pole as a warning to passing vessels. How long the island will remain above water is uncertain. It may be permanent, or some convulsion may send it back below water. The appearance and disappearance of islands is not an unheard-of phenomenon in the Pacific, one having been thrown up within the last year. It is a rather unusual happening off the Burmese coast, however.

I could sell every ounce of the seeds, through regular seed dealers if I wished. Yes, and I could get good prices for them, too—but I would give them to the readers of my magazine.

This wonderful floral novelty will be the sensation of 1907. Flower lovers everywhere admire it; striking in appearance, so surprisingly unusual, so splendidly beautiful.

The Mexican Fire Plant is an ornamental annual of remarkably rapid growth. It is no trouble to cul and one does not need to be an expert flower grower to bring it to perfect bloom. It will grow in a po box, or in the yard. A single Mexican Fire Plant is sufficient to beautify a lawn, for it adds a glorious color to a field of green: no flower garden is too elaborate not to be enhanced by one of these plants, times called a "Burning Bush."

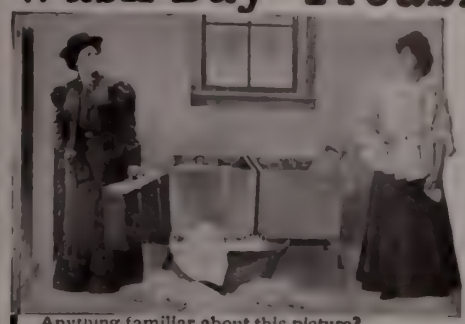
Esau had his grandfather's holy respect for the of God, nor did he regard the opinion s own parents, and in aggravation of self-seeking, he married two of the ghters of Canaan.

lf-seeking must bring trouble into a ly, as it brings trouble into a soul, trouble most of all into the Church of st. "Isaac loved Esau because he did of his venison" (Gen. 25:28), and thus elfish ends a godly father encouraged godly son in his fleshly life. Isaac d his eldest son Esau, and sent him ake some venison "that," said he, soul may bless thee before I die." a painful history which follows in that ly, the family of the faithful upon h at that time; the mother determined ustrate the purpose of the father, the her to supplant the brother.

ebekah, having overheard her husband king thus to Esau, did not openly and estly remind him of God's Word to nor did she even go to the Lord who spoken to her; but she devised un- teous means to attain her object, and the responsibility of leading her son an act of unbelief towards God, and eception towards his father. A mother resorts to plans and projects in any rgency which arises, instead of trust- confiding everything to him who keth all things work together for d to them that love him," is only fos- g unbelief in her children. Rebekah anded obedience of her son, and it is nge that Jacob's objection did not ke her and open her eyes to her sin folly. "Behold," he said, "Esau, brother, is a hairy man, and I am a oth man: my father peradventure will me, and I shall seem to him as a ceiver, and I shall bring a curse upon " In Jacob's words we perceive no of committing the sin itself; his only cern was lest he be found out. She was at a loss for expedients to meet every culty as it arose. She clothed her son sau's raiment, and "put the skins of the s of the goats upon his hands, and upon smooth of his neck": and she sent her to deceive his father.

Wash-Day Troubles Ended by a "Self-Working" Washer



Anything familiar about this picture?
Pleasant sight—isn't it?
Cook going on "short notice"—housemaid refusing to stay "another minute," or, perhaps it's "the wash-lady," getting out in a hurry and leaving part of the clothes in the tub and the rest on the floor.
Do you find it hard to keep good servants because of the troubles of wash-day?
Do you have to put your washing out, or have a washwoman in, because your girl will not do such work?
Do you have to keep a girl for no other reason than that you are not strong enough to do your own washings?
Do you depend on laundries?
If so, glance at the picture on the right, where the turning of a water faucet is the hardest work connected with the week's washing.
The "1900 Self-Working Washer" does all the drudgery.
Water pressure, or an ordinary electric light current (alternating or direct), will work this washer and do a big week's washing at a cost of 2 to 4 cents for the work.
All that is necessary to start the work is to turn a water faucet or an electric light key. Then you do nothing more.

Send no Money. Use It a Month FREE We Pay the Freight

And, as soon as a tubful of clothes is washed, a twist of your fingers switches power to the wringer to wring the clothes out.
You don't have to tend this washer.
It doesn't need anything but mere watching.
It works itself.
No rubbing—no drudgery—no work for you.
Only a twist of your fingers to start or stop the washer, or switch the power to the wringer.
All the rest is done by the water, or the electricity and the "Self-Working Washer."
And the "Self-Working Washer" saves its cost over, and over, and over again in washwomen's wages, lowered laundry bills and lessened wear and tear on all your washables.
The "Self-Working Washer" is as great an innovation to washing as automobiles are to locomotion—making mechanical power do the work human or anima force had to do before.
For the "1900 Self-Working Washer" will wash the finest linens, lawns and laces and get them spotlessly clean, without breaking a thread.
There is nothing about this washer that can wear out your clothes, nor tear them; rip seams nor fray edges; pull off buttons nor break them
And the "1900 Self-Working Washer" will wash bed blankets, comfortables, carpets, rugs and get them as clean as clean can be.
To prove this, use a "1900 Self-Working Washer" one full month FREE.
We will send one to any responsible party and prepay all freight. Send us no money.
You can use it for four weeks' washings, and then, if you don't find it all we claim—if you don't see how it will save its own cost—save wear and tear on all your house linen and washable clothes—save time and trouble and servant worries—just return the washer at my expense and the matter will be closed.
The trial costs you not a penny.
We make this offer because we know the "1900 Self-Working Washer" will do all we say—and save all we say. And, if you keep the washer, you can, if you wish, pay for it out of what it saves for you. Pay us by the week or by the month (suit yourself) until the washer is paid for. Write for our catalog today. Your request will bring you our illustrated washer book by return mail. Let a "1900 Self-Working Washer" solve your Wash-Day Troubles—keep your servants contented—save your laundry bills—and save your clothes. Address, 1900 Washer Company, 3039 Henry St., Binghamton, N. I Am the Paint Man

O. L. Chase
St. Louis, Mo.

2 Full Gallons Free to Try—6 Months Time to Pay

I Guarantee Freight Charges.

I AM the paint man. I have a new way of manufacturing and selling paints. It's unique—it's better. It revolutionized the paint business of this country last year.
Before my plan was invented paint was sold in two ways — either ready-mixed or the ingredients were bought and mixed by the painter. Ready-mixed paint settles on the shelves, forming a sediment at the bottom of the can. The chemical action in ready-mixed paint, when standing in oil, eats the life out of the oil. The oil is the very life of all paints.
Paint made by the painter cannot be properly made on account of lack of the heavy mixing machine.
My paint is unlike any other paint in the world.
It is ready to use, but not ready-mixed.
My paint is made to order after each order is received, packed in hermetically sealed cans with the very day it is made stamped on each can by my factory inspector.
I ship my thick pigment, which is double strength, freshly ground, in separate cans, and in another can, I ship the pure, old process Linseed Oil—the kind you used to buy years ago. Any child can stir them together.
I sell my paint direct from my factory to user you pay no dealer or middleman profits.

My $100.00 Cash Guarantee

I guarantee, under $100 Cash Forfeit, that the paint I am offering you does not contain water, benzine, whiting, or barytes—and that my Oilo is pure, old-fashioned linseed oil and contains absolutely no foreign substance whatever.

I guarantee the freight on six gallons or over.
My paint is so good that I make this wonderfully fair test offer:
When you receive your shipment of paint, you can use two full gallons—that will cover 600 square feet of wall—two coats.
If, after you have used that much of my paint, you are not perfectly satisfied with it in every detail, you can return the remainder of your order and the two gallons will not cost you one penny.
No other paint manufacturer ever made such a liberal offer.
It is because I manufacture the finest paint, put up in the best way, that I can make this offer.
I go even further. I sell all of my paint on six months' time, if desired.
This gives you an opportunity to paint your buildings when they need it, and pay for the paint at your convenience.
Back of my paint stands my Eight-Year officially signed, iron-clad Guarantee.
For further particulars regarding my plan of selling, and complete color card of all colors, send a postal to O. L. Chase, St. Louis, Mo. I will send my paint book—the most complete book of its kind ever published—absolutely free. Also my instruction book entitled "This Little Book Tells How to Paint" and copy of my 8-year guarantee.

Crooked Spines Made Straight

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We let you use it 30 days, and then, if unsatisfactory, return it and get your money back. Write for our new book, giving full information and references.

You Cannot Tell Her Age

What is it that makes a woman's appearance an index to her age?

Her complexion ---- wrinkles — angles — a double chin.

If she will keep her skin clear and rosy, smooth out the wrinkles, round out the angles, and take away the double chin with Pompeian Massage Cream, no one can tell her age by her looks.

POMPEIAN

will do all that; first, by taking out of the pores the dirt that mere soap and water does not touch, and by increasing the supply of blood, making the skin healthy; second, by nourishing the tissues and developing the facial muscles, making flesh firm and plastic. Pompeian Massage Cream does more for the parts on which it is used than exercise and a Turkish bath can do for the rest of the body. It is Nature's greatest complexion assistant.

For Men—

Pompeian Massage Cream will smooth out "the furrows of care," take away the tense, drawn set of the muscles that makes the furrows, soften the skin, cleanse the pores, flex the muscles, and make the flesh firm and plastic, the skin smooth, ruddy and athletic-looking. Thousands of men use Pompeian Massage Cream simply as a matter of cleanliness--to get rid of the pore-dirt that washing cannot remove. Others use it to take away after-shaving soreness.

It gradually strengthens the skin and enables a man to shave frequently without ill-effect.

After a day of dusty travel or sport, nothing cleanses and refreshes like a massage with Pompeian Massage Cream.

Any good barber can give a Pompeian Massage if you ask for it. Don't simply say, "I want a massage," but say, "I want a Pompeian Massage---be sure you use Pompeian Cream."

Substitutes for the genuine Pompeian Massage Cream are unsafe --- often very harmful. Look for the trade-mark on the bottle when getting a massage at your barber's or when buying at a druggist's for home use. Do not accept an imitation of Pompeian.

Free Sample to Test

Simply mail us a postal card request and we will send you a large sample, together with our illustrated book on Facial Massage, an invaluable guide for the proper care of the skin.

We prefer you to buy of your dealer whenever possible, but do not accept a substitute for Pompeian under any circumstances. If your dealer does not keep it, we will send a 50c. or $1.00 jar of the cream postpaid anywhere on receipt of price.

Questions and Answers

NOTICE

FROM this date, our undertaking to answer by mail, letters in which ten cents are enclosed for reply, is withdrawn. Letters asking for information of general interest will be answered in The Mail-Bag as speedily as possible. In some cases where, in our judgment, good may result from a personal answer, we will reply by mail. We cannot answer inquiries of the nature of conundrums nor those written for the purpose of argument.

Mrs. G. C. T., Northkeys, Md. Can you tell me where Lot's wife came from, or who were her parents?

Josephus, in book 1, chap. 6, of his Antiquities, speaks of Lot, Abram and Nahor, and in a single sentence says, "Now these married their nieces." This may be presumed to include Lot, but this is not certain. Nothing relative to Lot's wife's parentage appears in Scripture.

Mrs. H. O., Tryonville, Pa. Is moral weakness a sin?

It is sin when one gives way to it and indulges it and pleads it as an excuse. By earnest prayer and seeking strength from God, we are enabled to resist temptation.

A. D. J., Laconia, N. H. When did the Prince of Wales, now Edward the VII., first visit the United States?

He came in 1860, entering United States territory at Detroit, from Canada, on September 21. It was his only visit. The present Prince of Wales, formerly the Duke of York, recently visited Canada, but did not come to the United States. For answer to second query sent, we refer you to the State Librarian, Concord, N. H.

M. B. G., Hancock, Md. Where are John Wesley and his brother Charles buried?

John Wesley was buried in the burial ground of City Road Chapel, London, and Charles in Marylebone Churchyard.

Inquirer, Dunham, Quebec. What are the names and distances from our sun of the farthest fixed stars from that luminary-? How are the distances of the fixed stars and other heavenly bodies from our earth determined, as any base line measured on our earth is so short that its length is inappreciable compared with such distances? Can any of the nebulæ be seen by the naked eye? If so, where should we look for them and how will they appear? What are the forms or shapes of the nebulæ? Have they any motions? If so, what are they? What are the sizes of the nebulæ? As far as known, how many nebulæ are there? In what constellations do they occur? What is a meteoroid? How can a planet be distinguished by the naked eye from a fixed star? How can the different planets be recognized or dintinguished from one another by the naked eye?

To answer all these questions intelligently would exhaust a column of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The number of known nebulæ amount to many thousands. Most of them are the faintest objects seen by our mammoth telescopes, or depicted by the photographic lens. They are of all shapes and sizes, from a straight hair line to a large mass of luminosity, several being visible to the naked eye. Some are resolvable into stars, while most of them appear as luminous gas of all shapes and sizes. One of the easiest to see is the one in Andromeda, about the shape and size of a pumpkin seed. Some are double, like the one in Hercules, others are perfect rings, of which shape there is one in the Lyre. Some have a bright point in their centre and others are as shapeless as the clouds. Some of the brighter ones have been resolved into stars, while with others the powers of our mammoth telescopes, spectroscopes and photographic camera with long exposure fail. That mighty gulf stream of stars called the Milky Way is a luminous band circling across the sky, which consists of more than 100,000,000 stars, all self-shining stars like our sun. No motion has ever been detected in any nebulæ. The best way to tell the stars from the planets is by their twinkling. Planets do not twinkle.

Western Reader, Denver, Colo. What is the meaning of "Nova Zembla?"

"The New Land."

Miss Margaret S., Sarnia, N. Dak. Certainly, ministers of the Gospel are entitled to proper financial support at the hands of their congregation, like any other workers. We know there are people who, to escape their just burdens, are ready to quote Scripture; but a text is often a two-edged sword. In the primitive days of the Christian Church—the apostolic age—it is true, there was no special provision for the maintenance of the clergy, such as was known in Levitical times, but the duty of properly supporting our religious teachers is clearly implied in the New Testament. (See Matt. 10:10; I. Cor. 9:14.)

L. E. S., Lynn, Mass. Is it right for W. C. T. U. members to purchase of dealers who sell cream and puddings flavored with liquors?

No. If they know it and do it wilfully they are violating their temperance pledge.

R. J. B., Swanton, O. What are the effects of novels on the reader—injurious or beneficial?

Good, if the novel be good; and bad, if it be otherwise. There are many kinds of fiction; some distinctly helpful and elevating, some pleasantly entertaining, some (and this is a pretty large class) simply "time wasters," while a fourth class includes all the miscellaneous rubbish imaginable, much of it positively pernicious and unfit to be read by either old or young.

E. B. M., Marshalltown, Ia. For what reason is Madame Guyon defined as a mystic? What are the merits of her Commentaries on the Holy Scriptures?

Chantal, and practised their penances and mortifications; she was the friend of Lacombe, the "Barnabite mystic," and she had frequent dreams and visions. All her writings showed her to be a mystic and enthusiast, and she claimed that they were written under inspiration. She wrongly held that the soul can be purified only by inward and outward suffering; yet, despite all her errors and her too vivid imagination, there was so much that was spiritually pure and noble and elevating in her character and writings, that she has won and retained the love and admiration of the Christian world.

An Alaskan Mail Team at the White House

A SHORT time ago the Washingtonians strolling on Pennsylvania Avenue saw an Alaskan dog team trotting rapidly toward the White House. Seated in front was the driver, who had guided his strange steeds over hills and valleys and over the hundreds of rivers that lie between the vally of the Yukon and the Nation's capital. The dogs seemed not a bit worn by the long journey they had taken. The people of Washington are used to the unusual, but in this case they paused to watch the dog team out of sight. The driver was Eli Smith, the Alaskan mail carrier, and the team was the same that takes him on his regular route among the mining towns. He was most cordially received by the President, who examined the dog team with great interest. The picture shows the driver being directed to the President's office by the head usher.

RACHEL'S HOUSEHOLD IMAGES

By PROF. EDGAR J. BANKS

achel had stolen the images that were her father's, . . . and p them in the camel's furniture and sat upon them. And Laban atched all the tent and found them not.

IN the black goat-hair tent pitched on the barren Mesopotamian desert, the one piece of furniture, apart from a few pots and a blanket, is the camel saddle. Sometimes studded with silver and ered with gaudily-tasseled blankets, it serves as a ch upon which the secluded Arab wife spends her days re- ing. At night it is her pillow. Te hollow beneath the saddle is the hiding-place for the little ojects which she would conceal fm the eyes of her husband or t wives of the neighbors. Such a ole does the camel saddle of t Arab tent play to-day, just as it id nearly four thousand years ag, when Rachel concealed be- th it the household gods of her fher.

What were these images or Household gods which Rachel ole? The ruins of the Babylo- n cities, which flourished not f from the time of Jacob and Rachel, have been uncovered by t excavator. They are Bismya, Nppur and Telloh, all in Central Babylonia. From the ruins of t houses of the people of these c es have been taken small statu- es of clay. Few of them were p fect; many were in fragments, a l of others only the head or the body remained. At f t the excavator, puzzled at their appearance, asked i hey were the toys of the children; but in time, when h discovered some which had been unusually well formed, or had been broken and were carefully mended, he concluded that they were the household gods of the people.

Such they are now known to be. They were images precisely like those which Rachel stole from her father and concealed beneath the camel's saddle in her tent.

The Meeting of Jacob and Rachel

These images were of clay, carefully molded and formed by hand. Some were flat, in the form of a relief; others were shaped like a doll. Some were representations of the female deities; others were of the male. The well-formed faces of some were covered with a long beard, but they were the exception. There was one type of the household images of Rachel's time more common than all the others. These images were generally six inches tall, and clothed in a long, loose clay gown reaching to the feet. Upon the head was a turban-like dress, concealing the hair. The nose, enormously exaggerated, covered the greater part of the face, and terminated in a sharp point. Mouth and chin were scarcely visible. The statue was frequently represented as holding an object which suggests a serpent. Such were the "household gods" which the people before Abraham's time in Babylonia worshiped.

The gods of Babylonia were supposed to be great, invisible, spiritual deities, each ruling over a certain city. To represent them, the Babylonians carved from stone large images, which they erected in the secret inner enclosures of the temples. The statues then became the physical bodies of the gods; in them the spirits were supposed to dwell. They also molded small images of clay to represent the larger stone images and kept them in their houses. In these small images also the people believed the spirit of their god lived. In the walls of some of the private houses at Bismya, we found little niches where the images had once stood conveniently, so that at all times, day and night, the members of the family might worship them.

It is thus that we may now understand the form and character of the household images of Laban which Rachel stole. The gods of Laban had undoubtedly stood in the little niche of the wall in her father's house all her life long. Perhaps she had heaped minute sacrifices upon the little altar, and, like the rest of her people, she probably believed that those images were real gods. Whenever sickness came, she feared that the cause was her neglect of the images. When health and prosperity came, it seemed to her that the spirit of the gods hiding in the images had brought the blessings. When Jacob took her from home across the desert, could she leave the old images behind? She believed as her father and mother had always believed; not yet had she learned the religion of her husband's people—the worship of Jehovah.

Christian's Place

TEXT: EZEKIEL 36:33

"In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities"

"IN the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities!" That will be a great day, will it not?—that day when God will have cleansed us from all our iniquities, when we shall be holy, when we shall be saints. It seems a long way off to many of us; a dim, uncertain, all but improbable day in the misty distance; an almost impossible day. Will it ever come?—this day when God will have cleansed us from all our iniquities. God seems to have no doubt about it. He speaks of it with confidence. He undertakes to make it a present reality.

Sanctification Promised

The text is a promise of sanctification. Sanctification is the cleansing of the soul. It is having the heart purified. It is getting rid of the pollution of sin and of the stains of lust. It is having the mange of pride scoured out of your moral nature. It is getting one's sourness sweetened, his acidity and acerbity mollified, his ugliness transfigured. It is being made gentle and genuine and gracious and good and pure and holy.

It is a big undertaking. To cleanse even the best of us from all our iniquities is no easy task. Think of all that it involves. To make a saint one must do more than provide holy apparel. The process of sanctification is not a mere matter of vestments. It is not enough to make clean one's conduct. His character must be cleansed, his mind, his heart, his will, his imagination, his motives. It is no easy thing to manufacture a real saint. The counterfeit can be quickly and inexpensively produced, but the real saint is costly.

It requires God. If our moral and spiritual nature is to be purified, we must turn ourselves over to God for treatment. God is never in despair. No matter how stained and defiled the life may be, God can cleanse it. He can sanctify the worst. He sees the making of a saint in the worst of sinners. He says, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

> There is a fountain filled with blood
> Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
> And sinners plunged beneath that flood
> Lose all their guilty stains.

Some object to the old hymn because of its crude imagery, but I am willing to put up with the crude imagery for the sake of the great and glorious truth the old hymn sings. "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities!" Blessed day! Let us come to the fountain. Let us give ourselves into God's hands to be cleansed. Let us seek the help of him "who died to make us good." This is the sinner's first need; not to be happy, but to be clean; not to be perfect, but to be pure. Our first need is to be made presentable. What next?

Is Sanctification the Goal of Religion?

Is there nothing better than being good? Is there nothing beyond holiness? Has God finished when he has cleansed us from all our iniquities? Is sanctification the final act in the drama of spirituality? When one achieves sainthood, has he completed the curriculum of religion?

Many of us say "Yes"—if not audibly none the less actually. We have a notion that the chief end of religion is to make us good, to keep us from being bad, to keep us from doing bad things, to keep us from saying bad words, to keep us from going to bad places, to keep us from enjoying bad pleasures, to keep us from associating with bad people, to keep us from eating and drinking bad things, to keep us from having bad thoughts. If it can only make us good religion is a success. If it can cleanse us from all our iniquities, there is nothing further to consider.

Is this your view? If so, you must think that God sets a very high valuation on your piety; and, upon reflection, you must reach the conclusion that God has a poor sense of values. This notion that religion is concerned only or chiefly with getting people into a state of sanctified spirituality, is a very low and selfish estimate of the uses of religion. Indeed, there is no worse form of selfishness than spiritual egotism. It is the travesty and desecration of the best. It would reduce the activities of the Deity to a schedule and scheme for getting a few choice souls into an estate of immaculate purity, where they may be the envy of the universe, if not its despair. This is not Christianity. Christianity looks beyond the cleansing process. Goodness is merely an incident, There is something better than being good. There is something finer than getting into the gallery of the saints. On one occasion Paul said: "I could wish myself accursed for my brethren." He said, "There is something so high and fine and great that for the sake of it I am willing to forego personal redemption." Evidently he believed in a goal beyond sainthood. There is something better than the promise of sanctification. It is the purpose of sanctification.

Sanctification is preparation for what? The common answer is the sanctuary. I have been cleansed from all my iniquities, therefore I can now appear before the Lord in an acceptable manner. I can say my prayers with some hope of returns; I can read my Bible with profit. I have been made holy, now I can climb to the heights of the Mount of Transfiguration and dwell on the plains of peace and breathe of the triumphant life of privilege and assurance. I am a holy man, therefore I may now enjoy quiet, rest and holy meditation and blissful contemplation and perfect peace. At any rate, since I have been sanctified, I must be careful not to be secularized. I must keep away from the wicked world. I must shun dirt of all kinds. I must not allow my white soul to be stained nor my sanctified garments to be defiled. I must lead the separated life. Does it not say, "Come ye out from among them and be ye separate from sinners?" I must come out. The Lord's seal is on me. I am one of his chosen people and I must not mingle with the multitude of them who have not the fear of the Lord before them.

Some go so far as to quarantine themselves against mankind. They are so solicitous not to be secularized that they imprison themselves from the wicked world. They seek holy retreats and pious solitudes. They take refuge in monasteries and convents and sanctified seclusions, where they may stay good and practice the holy life. But this is not the programme for the saint, outlined by the text, "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities, I will also cause you to dwell in the cities."

Instead of shunning it, the real saint seeks the secular. He is thrust into it. Sanctification is not so much preparation for the sanctuary as for the street. The city, in God's opinion, is a saner residence for a good man than a religious retreat. "I will also cause you to dwell in the cities." God seems to nullify himself. He seems to make void his own work. "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities." That is a great day. "I will also cause you to dwell in the cities." What a disappointment! What a wretched finale! The city is the very incarnation of the world-spirit. It is the embodiment of all that is bad. The city imperils the good. Recently I read a book on National Perils, and the caption of one of the chapters was "The City."

The Popular Estimate of the City is to regard it as a peril. It is the stronghold of sin. It is the place where all the harm is done. There iniquity is concocted and vice is at home. There temptation is impudent and incessant. The city is the place where the saint is destroyed and goodness laid low. It is the home of struggle and suffering, of poverty and want, of woe and sorrow.

Surely the soul of a saint will soon be choked to death in that atmosphere; the sanctified will soon become secularized. We are saying that the city is the last place for us if we want to be good. The very last place for the sanctified man is the street of sin. Let him flee temptation. Let him hark from the haunts of vice. Let him get to the country, into contact with nature, where the open fields and blue skies and singing birds and blooming flowers and all the other things shall whisper to him of God and help him to stay good. "In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities, flee the town." God says, "Seek the to Instead of the sanctuary and the communion table, points to the market place and the busy street. In of the open fields, he says the crowded city. In of a garden, he says a slum. Man is sanctified, that he may climb some Mount of Transfiguratio take an outing to the land of rest or cushion himse the blissful repose of some sequestered sanctuary, he is sanctified for the most secular place and the secular occupation.

The Place of Service

A genuine saint is a citizen. By a citizen, I n not merely a man who wakes up on election days hangs around a voting booth and talks politics. citizen is a member of the community. He is n hermit, but a fellow-man. He carries the problen the city in his heart. He plunges into the thick o activities. He loves its people. He does his bes fight the city's battles, and to protect its interests. gives his all to feed its hungers and nurse its sickne and solace its woes and comfort its sorrows. He w himself out in its service. This is the real citizen, this kind of citizen is the real saint.

The man of the street needs to be a God-clear man. He needs the sanctuary. He must live in first part of my text. He must not dare adventure city or appear upon the street until he has had his c tact with God. Before ever he takes up the duties the office, the shop, the factory, the school, the store, must linger at the altar. The reason the street slay is that we have neglected the altar. The reason city destroys us is that we have gone there uncleans with all the stain and weakness of the secular upon The man whose work is the most secular is the man all others who most needs an hour of worship and altar of prayer. He whose life is most worldly is whose need is most desperate for the sanctifying, clea ing and illuminating ministry of faith. But after G has cleansed him, let him not be afraid to live in t second part of the text, Let him seek the city.

The street needs the saint. It needs the man w looks beyond the skyscrapers and who hears above t din and tumult of trade, the call of the Eternal. Co merce needs the entry of men whose standard righteousness is from God. Politics needs the activit of men whose convictions are a part of their worshi Society needs the help of people whose pleasures are blessed ministry and whose prayer-life is not negativ by their play-life. Let us be done with the cant whi shouts "wolf" every time the church gets into the stree every time the saint becomes a man of the town a Christianity lays hold of real problems.

The City Needs the Saint

We have had enough of these tin soldier saints, the dim sanctum saints, these glass case saints, these sel centred saints, these mutual admiration saints, the private monopoly saints, who think God has nothing t do but to preserve them unto his heavenly kingdon Let us have a few plain, ordinary town saints; a fe secularized saints; an order of priests who are pries indeed; a generation of Christians who are not too hol to be useful.

Religion, instead of taking us out of the world, meant to take us into it. If Christ has cleansed m instead of running from temptation I must fight it; in stead of avoiding trouble, I must cure it; instead c shunning suffering, I must share it. I must plunge int the game of real life. This was Jesus' way, and w must follow him. He did not spend his time seekin religious retreats. He sanctified himself; but he di not say, "Now that I am sanctified I must get out of th world." His sanctification was his preparation fo serving humanity. It took him into the street at whos end stood a cross. This is what Paul meant when h said he was willing to sacrifice personal redemption t save his people. He was following in the footsteps o him who teaches that if any man will save his life, h must lose it.

A MAN OF MANY CHARITIES

OW a boy without capital and without friends may become a millionaire by sheer industry if he has the talent for trading, has been proved by the career of William Whiteley, who recently n London. His store was the wonder of the city. le during recent years an annual net profit of half ion dollars; yet only half a century ago its owner poor farmer's boy, who when he entered the city ut fifty dollars in his pocket. Through and h he was a merchant, a man who delighted in g money, that he might use it not for money's ake. To the last he worked hard even after he assed his seventieth birthday. He was known to ormously rich and he would give freely, but he not be cheated. To this characteristic his death lue. A young man demanded money from him hen it was refused shot the merchant down in his store and then, showing how disordered his mind ttempted suicide.

Whiteley's career was almost romantic. He was born brigg, an unpretentious village near Wakefield, in shire, on Sept. 22, 1831. After several of modest village schooling he went to on his father's farm. Before he ed the age of fifteen the boy had suft enterprise to begin farming on his account and, what is more surprising, ake a success of his venture. But the as not destined to remain on the farm ecurity. At sixteen he was apprenticed ry goods merchant in Wakefield. For years he toiled incessantly, acquiring ledge and chafing under the limitaof his employment. Then came the London Exhibition of 1851, when the whole of and turned its face towards the metropolis. Young leley, too, felt the spell and, snatching a brief ay, paid his first visit to the capital.

"f the Exhibition impressed me," wrote Mr. Whiteley page of autobiography, "London impressed me more, and I was so attracted to it that I there and made up my mind that as soon as my apprenticeterminated I would return and make my fortune." arried out the first part of his resolve by journeyo London the day after his indentures expired.

s earliest London engagement was in a now vanstore on Ludgate Hill, but he was not content to in long in one employment. He consistently, eyed in and out of the great dry-goods establishs which cluster around St. Paul's Cathedral, workand secretly cherishing his big designs.

last the critical day came. He determined to n business for himself. Taking his courage in both s, as the French aptly put it, he bade his employer -bye and set out to establish a business of his own. He had been strongly cautioned against the neighborhood known as Westbourne Grove, but it was there that he decided to settle. There was a store to let. He crossed to the opposite side of the street, and from three o'clock until five in the afternoon surveyed the number and class of passers by. He came to the conclusion that what was wanted was a "live" man.

Mr. Whiteley rented the store. There had been two previous tenants, both of whom had failed, but the "canny" Yorkshireman felt that this was not so much the fault of the store as of bad management. He put up his own fixtures and opened with a staff of two girls and an errand boy. It was Wednesday, March 11, 1863, that the doors were opened for business for the first time. He was rather late in opening, and before the shutters were all down a lady entered and asked for an article from the window. Apologising for not opening earlier, Mr. Whiteley explained that it was his first day. "Then I suppose I am your first customer?" said the lady. "You are, madam," replied the young storekeeper, and the lady then asked if she might offer up a prayer for the success of the business. It was a strange sight, and one too rarely seen, that of the well-dressed customer, the two shop-girls in black, the astonished errand boy and the proprietor all kneeling in devout appeal amid the box-laden shelving.

From this eventful morning Mr. Whiteley never looked back. Each succeeding spring he secured a new addition to his store, until at length there grew up that wonderful establishment which boasted that it could supply the public with every conceivable thing, "from an elephant to a needle." Years afterwards he said: "I believe that the results I achieved are due to the fact that I have never allowed the word 'can't' to have a place in my vocabulary.

He was a man of many maxims. Justifiably proud of his enormous store which, starting with a capital of $3,500, eventually reckoned its gross receipts at $5,000,000 a year, he delighted in telling people "how it was done." He attributed his success in the first place to downright hard work. In the early years of his enterprise he was always in the shop at seven in the morning and remained there until midnight. Even after he had lessened his responsibility by converting the firm into a company he continued to work long hours, permitting himself only twenty minutes for luncheon. Another inflexible rule was to observe Sunday. No matter how busy he was he would never work on the Lord's Day, nor permit any work to be done in his store. He was also a lifelong teetotaler and a non-smoker. Among the maxims he observed throughout his career—obvious ones, he was the first to admit, but useful none the less—were the following: "Watch the waste; trust in self-help; civility costs nothing; never disappoint a client; keep cool; don't lose your temper; add your conscience to your capital; fair trading means successful trading; it is better to be the victim than the culprit; always pay as you go; if you can't pay, don't go; don't despise trifles—the ocean is made out of drops of water; be discreet in your transactions; run no risk it is inconvenient to meet; it is not the largeness of your capital, but the smallness of your wants that will make you rich; never say die."

How closely Mr. Whiteley lived up to these rules his thousands of assistants can tell. Five times, owing to the mad freaks of incendiaries, his premises were destroyed by fire; the last outbreak, in 1902, cost him $1,250,000, but each time new premises arose on a larger scale than ever. When told once that his great store had been destroyed, Mr. Whiteley with a stoicism rare in highly-strung humanity simply said, "Build another."

He was a short, stoutly-built man, quick and active in his movements, with a big, ruddy face, clean-shaven, save for a pair of iron-grey side-whiskers. He had sharp-seeing grey eyes and a mobile, yet firm-set mouth. He spoke very rapidly, but distinctly.

Of his benefactions there has been no end. He has proved himself as openhanded in death as in life. More than twenty hospitals and charitable institutions received substantial legacies under his will. Nor were the poor forgotten. $25,000 is to be held in trust and the income is to be devoted to providing Christmas gifts for the needy. But the greatest of all his bequests is that of $5,000.000 for the foundation and endowment of the "Whiteley Homes for the Aged Poor." Here a haven of rest will be provided for those men and women who have gone under in the battle of life.

"CARMEN SYLVA'S" CITY OF THE BLIND

)R years the world has marveled at the many gifts and graces of Roua's Queen, better known by her pene of "Carmen Sylva." But even the e won by her accomplishments as an or, artist and musician, pales before which belongs to the success she is ining in the great task of building and blishing on a permanent footing a city the blind among her people.

f Roumania's barely six million popun, twenty thousand men, women and dren are blind. The sympathy of the en has been deeply stirred in behalf of afflicted people, for whom the light of never shines, who never know the joy eholding God's beautiful world, whose eeing eyes may never linger upon the of a friend; worst of all, whose lot always dependence, often pauperism, ause of their misfortune.

irst winning the King's support for cause, the Queen purchased a large t of land outside Bucharest and at once an to put her cherished plan into extion. Things do not move as rapidly the East as they do in America, but tra Luminosa (The Lighted Hearth) already, after eighteen months, be- e something far more tangible than dream city it at first appeared. It is e a city of all classes of people, differ- in taste, religion, conditions and even ionality, yet bound together by the one common tie of blindness. Always the home life is to be preserved, and this wonderful city is to be no less a city of homes than of churches, libraries, music-halls and training schools, where arts and crafts will be taught to those who have a special talent or gift. A market will be found for the products of the inhabitants, and through the seeing members of each family the more difficult tasks of the "City of the Blind" will be accomplished. "Carmen Sylva's" plan is so comprehensive, that she is setting the blind to work upon simple carpentering, bricklaying, digging, etc., in connection with the 200 buildings now in process of erection.

The Queen of Roumania and One of Her Blind Proteges

Mrs. Walker Fearn, an American who has recently spent some time in Europe, became a warm friend of the royal patroness of the blind, and spent several months with her in her summer palace in the Carpathian Mountains. Mrs. Fearn frequently visited the wonderful community for the blind, and became deeply interested in it. She has now returned to this country, and proposes to give a series of talks in the leading cities of the United States, with the view of giving inspiration to our local organizations for the blind. "Carmen Sylva" has given one of her beautiful coronation costumes to her American friend, that she may the more forcefully impress her audiences with her position as the Queen's ambassadress.

A Great Missionary Convention

AN absolutely unique Convention was held in Omaha Tuesday evening, Wednesday and Thursday, February 19th to 21st. It was a Foreign Mission Convention, to which the only delegates admitted were men. The Convention is accurately described by its somewhat lengthy formal title, "Inter-Synodical Foreign Mission Convention to Consider the Distinct Missionary Responsibility of the Men of the Presbyterian Church for the Unevangelized Heathen World." Under the direction of the Rev. Charles Edwin Bradt, D.D., Field Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions for the Central West, delegates to the number or 1,055 were registered from the fifteen Central States of the Union, comprising about one hundred presbyteries, and from the entire former Cumberland Presbyterian Church, to reach some definite conclusions as to the distinct responsibility of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., for the evangelization of the non-Christian world in the present generation.

Rev. Hunter Corbett, D.D.

Rev. S. A. Moffett, D.D. (Korea)

Prominent Men Present

Among the principal speakers were Rev. Hunter Corbett, D.D., for forty-three years missionary to China and present Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly; Rev. Ira Landrith, D.D., of Nashville, Tenn., last Moderator of the late Cumberland General Assembly; Robert E. Speer, Senior Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; Professor T. H. P. Sailer, Ph.D., Educational Secretary of the same Board; Rev. A. W. Halsey, D.D., and David McConaughy, other Secretaries of the same Board; Rev. George Alexander, D.D., Pastor of the Univerity Place Church, New York, and President of the Board; J. Campbell White, Field Secretary of the United Presbyterian Church and Secretary of the Laymen's Foreign Movement; Rev. S. A. Moffett, D.D., missionary to Korea; Rev. S. W. Jordan, D.D., missionary to Persia; Rev. J. Ashley Fitch, missionary to China; Rev. James B. Ayers, missionary to Japan; Rev. F. S. Hoskins, D.D., missionary to Syria; Rev. W. S. Cunningham and H. L. Weber, M.D., missionaries to Africa; J. A. Hall, M.D., missionary to the Philippine Islands; Rev. E. M. Wherry, D missionary to India, and many others.

The Spirit of the Convention

The real purpose of the Convention found its outline in Robert E. Speer's add Wednesday morning. He began by defining the nature of the responsibility of Church to non-Christian lands. He said that the primary responsibility of Church in this matter was not to carry Western civilization to these lands, no change social customs, nor to introduce new systems of education, nor ever make Christians of the people. The primary responsibility of the Church, the aim of the missionary propaganda, is "to take the Lord Jesus Christ, who is lif us, and offer him to every other soul in the world." He then went on to show inseparable from this chief aim of the missionary propaganda is the necessity organizing those who accept the Gospel of Christ into "self-supporting, self-gov ing and self-propagating churches." It also becomes our duty to "co-operate these native churches in evangelizing the people all about them," and also to "ca all those secondary Christian agencies, without which you cannot teach men w Christianity is."

Having developed the nature of our responsibility to the non-Christian la along the foregoing lines, he proceeded to show the precise extent of the respo bility of the Presbyterian Church in this work. He said:

"Our Church is responsible for 100,000,000 people for whom Jesus died whom God loves. Each of our 1,000,000 church members is responsible for 100 s and must give account of them in the day of judgment. We need a force of 2, men and 2,000 women, 3,100 more than we now have. We need $6,000,000 annual five times as much as we now have. We need $5.00 from each member at ho There are great problems involved which do not appear in this estimate. J example, there is a deficit of $100,000, for which we are responsible. It is a manifestly unjust to our 900 missionaries already on the field to send out 3,000 m before they have been suitably housed. And, further, the greater part of the w must be done by native workers on the field."

Work to be Accomplished

In order that, in accordance with its pre-announced purpose, the Conventi might come to definite conclusions and present practical working plans for t Church, a Convention Committee was appointed at the first session of the Conv tion. This Committee presented a set of recommendations at the last afterno session of the Convention, which embodied the main ideas suggested by Mr. Spee and other addresses. The first three of the recommendations follow:

"I. It is the judgment of the Inter-Synodical Foreign Mission Convention

Section II. Another Group of the Body of the Convention

Plans for World Evangelization

Section III. Another Party of Members of the Missionary Convention

...that the number of souls in non-Christian lands for which the Presbyterian ...h, U. S. A., is directly responsible in the work of evangelization in this ...ation is approximately 100,000,000 souls, being distributed as follows:

..., ...	2,500,000	Siam, Laos, etc., . .	5,000,000
...al America, . .	500,000	India, ...	18,000,000
... America, . . .	10,000,000	Persia, ...	5,000,000
... .	4,000,000	Turkey, ...	2,000,000
..., ...	6,000,000	Africa, ...	5,000,000
..., ...	40,000,000	Philippines, ...	2,000,000

...I. It is the judgment of the Convention that the force of Presbyterian American ...n missionaries, native pastors, Bible women and teachers, ought to be increased ... immediate future, until it reaches the number of one American foreign mis... and five trained native workers (or their equivalent) for each 25,000 unevan...ed people now in non-Christian lands providentially alloted to the Presbyterian ...h for evangelization. This would mean for the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., ...housand American missionaries, or about five times as many as we now have.

The Financial Need

...III. It is the judgment of the Inter-Synodical Foreign Mission Convention for ...hat it will cost not less than $6,000,000 a year to fully meet the great responsi... outlined above, and we therefore set ourselves resolutely to the work of bring...e foreign missionary offerings of our Church up to this mark."

...he fourth recomendation was a somewhat elaborate outline of a missionary ... to be followed by the churches at home. The fifth and last recommendation ...s follows:

While we recognize the ability of churches and individuals vary, it is the ...ment of this Convention that each of our churches should strive to attain an ...ge of five dollars per member for Foreign Missions (ten cents a week), and we ...y urge the Foreign Missionary Committees of our synods and presbyteries and ...ns to seek to secure that result, and pledge our own best efforts to raise that ...ge in our own churches."

A Scene of Enthusiasm

...he third recommendation occasioned the greatest discussion and aroused the ... enthusiasm. Before the vote on the recommendation was taken, a motion was ... and carried that after the discussion five minutes be spent in prayer, and then ...onvention vote on the recommendation by rising. After not less than a half ...s earnest consideration of the recommendation this was done, every member ... to his feet to not only adopt the recommendation, but also personally to ...e himself before Almighty God to do his own personal part toward raising the $6,000,000 annually called for by the recommendation. While the great Convention was still upon its feet, it spontaneously broke into the long-metre doxology.

Praise God from whom all blessings flow!

It certainly was a thrilling scene.

Perhaps the most touching moment of the whole Convention was at the last, when Missionary Corbett delivered his "Farewell Message to the Men of America." Dr. Corbett returns at once to China (this being the last great meeting in America in which he is to take part), where he has spent forty-three years in missionary service, to attend the great Missionary Centennial Convention, and complete his fifth decade of labor in that Empire, if God will. It was known that he does not expect to return to America, but that it is his wish to die in the land which he has done so much to reclaim from heathen darkness and superstition. This gave the closing scene a special tenderness. After Nolan R. Best, of Chicago, who presided, had presented Dr. Corbett, the old hero of the Cross delivered his message, which was short. He closed as follows:

E. M. Wherry, D.D. (India)

Dr. Corbett's Peroration

"May the ennobling and uplifting vision of the glory of Christ's spiritual kingdom, in which all people, nations and languages shall serve him, enlarge and enrich our souls and inspire every Christian to more Christlike living, earnest and ceaseless prayer, liberal giving and personal effort to hasten the time 'when the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever,' and 'at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.' Shall we not all hope and earnestly pray for God's richest blessing, not only to follow and abide with every member of this assembly, but that every church and community here represented shall share in a great revival that will sweep over the whole world and establish a universal brotherhood of Christian men. Farewell!"

The Convention was a great success. Influences were started and forces set in motion, the final results of which can only be known in the last great day. Surely it is not too much to say that the time when the Gospel shall have been preached to every creature has been brought materially nearer by this first of exclusively men's foreign mission conventions called to consider this greatest of all great themes.

War and Peace

AS the date for the opening of the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition draws near, protests by peace-lovers against what they denominate "the militarization of the Exposition" continue to multiply. A number of these protests have been addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In these the writers express the conviction that the original programme has been so changed that the Exposition promises to become little else than a gorgeous military and naval spectacle, a great glorification of the game of war by land and sea. They shudder at the announcements of the proposed reproduction of naval and military battles, at the museum of war relics and the contests of skill between the soldiers and sailors of different nations. To spread forth before our own people and our guests from other lands "a great living picture of war, with all of its enticing splendors," is not, they submit, the prime purpose of the Exposition at all.

While we share with those friends the love of peace, and would wish to see its principles inculcated everywhere, we do not share their apprehension as to Jamestown. There is not the slightest danger, we are assured by the Governors of the Exposition, that it will degenerate into a mere martial and naval show, or that the original purpose of the projectors will be set aside. We believe that it will fulfil all expectations as a presentation of our historical, territorial, educational and industrial progress. Our own people and those who may come from abroad will be interested and instructed in tracing, step by step, our national growth and in noting the splendid triumphs of American genius in those special lines of skill and art that make for human advancement.

There are in every country's history events that are incapable of representation except in a military or naval sense. At Jamestown, a few such events, being inseparable from the country's progress, will be fittingly reproduced. But while fully recognizing the splendid patriotic services of both army and navy, we cannot overlook the fact that the Exposition has not been arranged with the view of impressing Europe and Asia with our importance as a "world power" in any militant sense; but rather that we might show them what has been accomplished along the higher lines of peaceful achievement.

It is a significant coincidence that almost the same day which will witness the opening of the Jamestown Exposition will also usher in the second great International Peace Congress at the Hague. The "eternal fitness of things" would seem to suggest that a great international object-lesson on "the splendors of war," conducted by a nation ostensibly peaceful and which is, moreover, one of the signatories to the Hague Conference, would be a ghastly incongruity at such a time.

A Postal Savings System

ANOTHER Congress closes without a Postal Savings Bank law. A good bill had been introduced by Mr. Snapp, of Illinois, early in the session, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices.

A very general movement in favor of such a measure had been started in different parts of the country. It is recognized as clearly for the good of wage-earners, including not only day laborers, operatives, mechanics and clerks in cities, but miners and farmers who could be encouraged to save and form habits of economy and frugality. The Germans have been particularly active in advocating such a measure. Petitions have been circulated among the Turner Societies, which have a membership of nearly forty thousand. Older Germans have witnessed the success of postal banks in the Fatherland, and can see no good reason why they would not be as useful and successful here.

Two of our Postmasters-General have favored such a law. Postmaster-General James, who recommended it, had been long in the postal service and passed from the position of Postmaster of New York to a Cabinet position. Postmaster-General Wanamaker, a successful business man and a philanthropist, urged it as a measure expedient for the government and fraught with large benefits for the people.

Seven European countries have adopted such a system, namely: Great Britain, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, France, Italy and the Netherlands. In 1904 there were in the United Kingdom 9,673,717 depositors. In the United States there were the same year 1,157 Savings Banks and 7,305,443 depositors.

It is generally believed that the savings deposits of the United States would be greatly increased by the Postal Savings system. It would be a great convenience, especially for persons living in the smaller towns and in the country. The sense of safety would be another reason, and would be as cogent in the cities as elsewhere and perhaps more so.

The practical question arises: Why does Congress fail to pass such a bill? The matter has long been before the public. A vast majority of the people want it. Some of our ablest statesmen favor it. Is it possible that the bill is killed in committee by secret influences? Practical legislators have publicly stated that the banking interests and the express companies block the legislation in committee. It is evident our country will not have the benefit of such a system till the people wake up to its importance and let their national representatives, both in the House and Senate, know that they want it and are in earnest about it.

The Anti-Suicide Bureau

HEARTY welcome should be given to the new department that the Salvation Army has now added to its other spheres of usefulness. In establishing a bureau to give advice and sympathy to persons contemplating suicide, it has recognized an opportunity for service. The suicide is generally a discouraged person, one who thinks that everything is against him and that nothing is to be gained by living on and striving to overcome. In some cases the man is overwhelmed by a sudden calamity, and sees in his distracted condition no way of escaping misery that seems to him unbearable. Then comes the impulse to abscond, to get out of life, to avoid the evil by running from it.

If there is near him at that critical moment some wise friend, who can get him to pause, to do nothing rash, to take a calmer view of the situation, even though the pause be only for a few hours, the irretrievable step might not be taken at all. It often happens that the intending suicide has no such friend, or, if he has, that he shrinks from confiding in him. This is Gen. Booth's opportunity. Picked men and women, with tact and religious faith, are assigned to the duty of dealing with such cases. Any man or woman whose troubles are pressing on them so heavily that, like the poet's friend, they are asking, "Were it not better not to be," are invited to the Salvation Army's Headquarters in West Fourteenth Street, New York, where the men will find a sincere man and the women a sympathetic woman, who will consider the question with them and help them to a wise decision. Very often the mere confidence, the simply telling of the sad story, will give relief. It is an irreparable step that the suicide contemplates taking, and he will be none the worse for discussing it with a wise counselor. In providing such an one, the Salvation Army has done a kind and sympathetic thing, and we sincerely hope that the result will be a large reduction in the number of suicides.

Happiness a Duty

INSTEAD of looking upon happiness as something permitted as a favor, a sort of dessert at the daily meal, we should regard it as a positive duty. God never put his children into the world to be miserable.

Notwithstanding the fact that he sends trials and griefs for our discipline and for our advancement from one grade to another in the school of experience, he sends in far greater numbers joys and fruitions that form the staple of earthly existence. The bright days in our lives outnumber the dark ones; the happy years exceed the years of sorrow. We sit oftener in the house of feasting than in the house of mourning.

Whatever may be our inward vexations, or outward annoyances, the duty of looking happy, of wearing cheerful countenances, is laid upon us all. Nobody has the privilege of going about with a gloomy face. Nobody has a right to inflict his gloomy moods upon his companions. If things go wrong in business, it is a man's duty to do the best he can, to leave the issue with God and to carry home a pleasant smile and an even temper to greet his wife and children. If things go wrong in the home, it is a woman's duty to make the best of whatever comes, to anticipate better things tomorrow and to cheer her husband and children by her own bright aspect. As for children, God bless them! they are too near heaven to be wet blankets, and they are happy without making an effort, thus adding to the happiness of the world.

The Famine Crisis in China

IT is near at hand; indeed, at this very mome greatest struggle of the famine is being foug by the despairing multitudes, who are now retir their desolated homes, the concentration camps h been broken up by the authorities.

What is to become of these great hordes of n ble beings, whose number far exceeds the populat New York City? One of the Chinese vicero quoted as saying, with the callous indifference o ental officialism, that something like half a millior perish anyway, and that the relief workers s calmly accept the situation and devote their effo keeping the others alive!

This attitude is revolting to Christian civiliz which holds every life to be precious and worth s The noble-hearted men of the Civic and Missi Relief Committees are bending every energy to this terrible situation. They have appealed t whole world to help them in averting the threa catastrophe.

If you ever mean to help these hapless beings time for action is NOW. You can save one life at le no more. Whatsoever you decide, do quickly. kind deed, done in His name, will surely return in r plied blessing.

The Shah's Coronation

WITH due ceremony and superb magnificence, Mohammed Ali has been solemnly proclaimed Shah of Persia, and he has been invested with all the rights and privileges of his office. The ceremony began on Jan. 19, and lasted eight days. The augurs and soothsayers declared that the day appointed for beginning the ceremony was unpropitious, but the new Shah disregarded the omens, and peremptorily ordered that the ceremony take place as appointed. A great crowd of priests and nobles attended to witness the ceremony. The Shah was conducted to the Throne of State by two of the princes, who helped him to climb the elevation on which the throne is placed. The Grand Vizier placed the imperial crown of Persia on the Shah's head and a formal address pledging fealty to him was made. The Shah briefly acknowledged it, and then removing the crown and substituting a fez with a diamond aigrette, descended to the floor and mixed with the courtiers and foreign representatives, talking freely and receiving their congratulations. On the following day, the Shah held his first reception, called in Persia, a salaam, at which he received the generals and army officers, and inspected the colors and arms of the various regiments. The court elephant was there in all its glory of gold-embroidered trappings, and the court functionaries were in attendance in their robes. The Shah seated himself on his throne, a royal prince, bearing a shield glittering with jewels, on each side of him. At a sign from the Shah the regimental bands played the national anthem and a salute of a hundred guns was fired. The court poet then came forward and recited an original ode of praise. At the conclusion of the ceremony the Shah sent to the ladies of the court a gold coin each, the first that had been struck of the new coinage. These were the court festivities. The more serious business is the relation of the Shah to his Parliament. A constitution is a new thing in Persia, and does not appear to be working smoothly at present. It is recognized, however, that the Shah is an enlightened and a most resolute man, who may soon weary of granting concessions to the Parliament. At present he has shown himself conciliatory, but those who know him best say he must not be pressed too far. The people are no less determined than he that the rights belonging to them under the constitution shall not be infringed. Recently, when one of their demands was refused, they seized the arsenal at Tabriz, and held it until the Shah yielded. It may be hoped for the sake of the Shah and his people that he will follow the maxims of the Oriental king, whose wisdom he will need in ruling his kingdom.

The New Shah of Persia

Mercy and truth preserve the king; and his throne is upholden by mercy (Prov. 20: 28).

Extortion by Electricity

A new method of extorting money has been devised by one of the keepers of museums in the Bowery, New York. Among the popular machines in use is one for testing the muscles and developing the strength of the wrists. The machine usually works honestly, and in that neighborhood is highly appreciated. But it has in one case been put to a dishonest purpose. A visitor from the country complained to the police last week that he had lost all he had in his pocket by its means. A man whose acquaintance he had casually made on the street, guided him to the museum, and after showing him the curiosities, introduced him to the muscle-testing machine, which he was easily induced to experiment with. His new friend had already tried it and had made a poor showing. The farmer was sure he could do better, and laid hold of the handles. They were harmless at first, but when his friend moved a switch at the side they became electrified. He could not let go, and was held fast while his pockets were emptied of watch and money. Thus the agent that is doing us so much service, giving us light, delivering our messages, and furnishing us with power, is used in the service of wicked men for dishonest purposes. So it has always been. The thing that God gives us as a blessing may be perverted and become a curse.

Was then that which is good made death unto me (Rom. 7: 13).

Ancient Toys

A collection of ancient toys, dating from the earliest period of Greece and Rome, has been placed on exhibition in the British Museum. They are believed to be fully three thousand years old. The earliest Greek specimens comprise archaic dolls and toys, the latter including an earthenware rattle roughly oval. The skilled workers of Ephesus in a later age contribute dolls in alabaster and plaster with beautifully chased features. The dolls' house was evidently as popular in classic days as in the present, for there are a number of models for its furnishing in bronze or glazed earthenware, chairs, stands and kitchens. The circular disks or tokens, engraved with rams' heads, fowls, rats or flies, and formerly supposed to have been vouchers for seats at theatre or amphitheatre, are here in abundance. These are now classed as counters for games, and there are others in bone and crystal inscribed with Greek or Latin legends. Knucklebones go back likewise to remote antiquity; they are made of bronze or chalcedony; and clever artificers with a comic vein shaped them in such forms as that of a satyr or a dwarf, still preserving the old shape as far as practicable. It is strange to think that these toys should have survived, while the children who played with them grew old, died and turned to dust centuries ago. Man can make things that survive him, as he does deeds and says words that live and exert influence long after his body has perished. This would be an incomprehensible anomaly if we did not know that the perishing of the body is not the end of him.

God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me (Psalm 49: 15).

Dead Dogs in France

A dispute between a marble cutter and a cemetery board in the French capital has elicited some curious facts about interments. The cemetery is so prosperous and has become so aristocratic in its patronage, that the privilege of occupying a marble yard in the grounds has become valuable. The Board received an offer of a higher rental from a rival sculptor and attempted to eject the present occupant. He resisted, however, and the dispute was carried into court, and the entire subject was ventilated. It appeared that the graves in the cemetery were those of dogs, and there were four thousand of them. The lowest price for a single interment was one dollar, and the funeral expenses from seven dollars up. The choice lots ran as high as four hundred dollars. The majority of the patrons wanted monuments, too, and the sculptor on the premises was kept always busy. The epitaphs on the monuments were varied according to the taste of the bereaved. One of them reads: "Homage to a faithful heart," and another, a marble slab mounted on the rock, contains the following: "Neither name nor date: what matters it?" And again, "Beneath these stones reside the material remains of that which during its life was my joy and my consolation." They are mainly testimonies to the affection and fidelity of the departed. How different in their finality are they from the epitaphs we are justified in putting on the memorials to our departed Christian friends.

Ye sorrow not even as others who have no hope: for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, them also who sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him (I. Thess. 4: 13, 14).

A Moving Mountain

The village of Montemurro, in Italy, is in a state of panic in consequence of the discovery that the mountain, at the foot of which the village is built, is moving. It is accompanied by the disturbances and discomforts of the moving of a human residence. Large boulders have become dislodged and have rolled down the sides, and are prevented rolling into the valley only by being caught on one of the lower spurs of the mountain. Measurements showed that the whole mountain is slipping from its foundations, as if by some convulsion of the rocks beneath. After a week of fear the movement ceased, and the inhabitants of the valley, numbering about five thousand, regained composure. Some who had hurried away from their homes in fear, returned. No sooner were they settled than a new movement commenced. Trees at the foot of the mountain were uprooted, or broken off as if they had been cornstalks. The people fled in terror. Troops have been rushed to the scene to erect tents for the refugees who are now homeless, and to keep order. The mountains have stood in literature as a symbol for all that is permanent and unchanged. Such events as this must force us to abandon that symbol, but while all earthly things change, we still have the assurance that God is eternal and in him there is no change.

They shall perish, but thou remainest: thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail (Heb. 1: 11, 12).

A Judgment Canceled

A peculiar case was before a United States Circuit Court in New York last week. It appears that some months ago, the traffic manager of a certain railroad was charged with granting rebates contrary to law. After a long trial he was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of $6,000. Before the sentence took effect the man died, leaving the fine unpaid. An attempt was made to collect the fine from his estate. His widow, who was his executrix, declined to pay, and the question of her liability was submitted to the court. Judge Holt, in giving his decision, said that there were no satisfactory controlling authorities, and that the case must be decided on fundamental principles. The fundamental principle applying to the case, he continued, is that the object of criminal punishment is to punish the criminal and not his family. He therefore ordered the judgment abated. The case would have been simplified if the sentence had been one of imprisonment, which, of course, could not have been executed. Apparently the judge took the same view of a fine. The decision is a novel one in law, but it is a cardinal principle in Christianity. Neither the power of sin nor the ordinances of the law can touch a man who has died with Christ and is living in resurrection life.

Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ (Rom. 6: 11).

Foregleams of Calvary and Easter

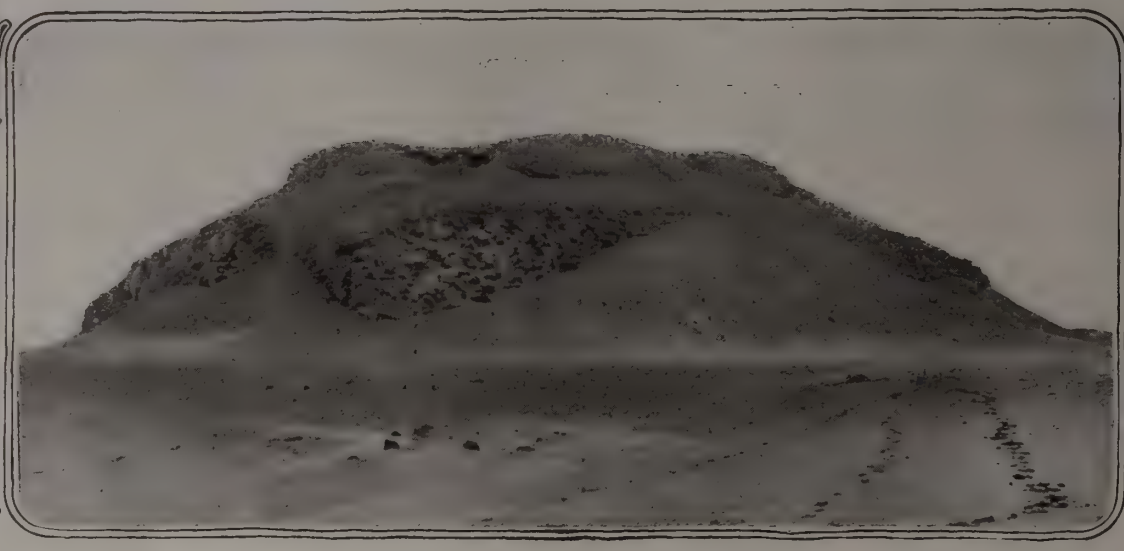
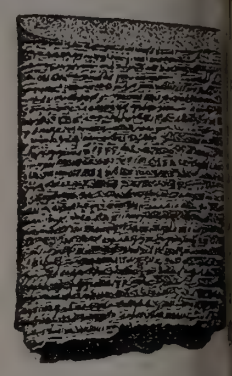
A Tell-el-Amarna Letter

One of a number written in the time of Abraham, and found in 1888 at Tell-el-Amarna in Upper Egypt. The characters are cuneiform and the material is a clay tablet, inscribed when it was soft, and afterwards baked.



Ur of the Chaldees, Abraham's Birthplace

The site of this ancient city has now been identified with Mugheir. It is a huge mound, covering a thousand yards long by eight hundred wide, enclosing a multitude of graves. The buildings were of sun-dried bricks, which have fallen into ruin.



A Creation Tablet

This tablet, found at Nineveh, c the Chaldean account of the cr The date is unknown, but the cha show that it must have been before the time of Joshua.

THIS review of the world's beginnings on Easter brings together Creation and the new creation, sin and redemption. We study to-day the dim patriarchal gospel of types and symbols in the interpreting noon of Christ's resurrection.

Oldest Statue in the World

A wooden statue of Sheik el Beled, a village chief. It was found at Sakkara, and is believed to be five thousand years old, which is earlier than Abraham.

I. Christ the Creator. The Apostles' Creed, to be truly Apostolic, must change a word and say: "I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, through Jesus Christ." "All things were made through him," says John twice over (1:3, 10). It is repeatedly declared in Hebrews also that it was "through him God made the worlds"(1:3). Paul, in Colossians, whose very theme is that Christ is King of the Cosmos, declares again and again that all "things were created through him and unto him, and with him all creation is filled, and by him all things hold together" (Col. 1:15-17). Christ's first claim upon us, therefore, is,"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth" (Eccl. 12:1). A Bishop said to a railway porter, who was carrying his bags:

"Do you go to church?"

"Well, no sir," came the frank answer, "I get every other Sunday off, but I can't say I ever do go to church. "Do you ever pray?" "No sir," said the man; "fact is, I'm not religious." "Tell me," proceeded the Bishop, "does it ever happen to you, in your experience as a porter, that the train comes rushing in, a man hurriedly opens the carriage door, hands you a bag and says: 'Take this and call a cab for me, and hurry!' And you, with the same good nature that prompted you to carry my luggage, do for him all he asks, and the man drives off without giving you a tip, or even saying, 'Thank you?' Does that ever happen?" "Why, yes sir, many a time," said the man. "And what do you think of that kind of passenger?" "Well, we think precious little of them. Suppose there always will be mean people in the world." "I once," continued the Bishop, "met a man to whom God had given powers of body and mind to improve his position, and yet, strange to say, although he knew all about God and Christ, although when he was younger he had been taught that all good things come from above, he had never once thanked God for his love and his gifts to him. Now tell me, what would you think of such a man?" "You have me there, sir," replied the man, looking up at the servant of God with frank confession.

II. The image of God—such was Christ; and man was made in the form in which God was to appear in thirty-three theophanic visits of the Old Testament, and after this preparatory series, in thirty-three years of human life. We may develop this image of God in ourselves, or deface it, as we choose. On the walls of an old temple was found this picture: A king forging for his crown a chain, and nearby a slave making of his chain a crown, and underneath was written: "Life is what one makes it, no matter of what it is made."

God's Image in Men

Let us recall also the familiar but very pertinent story of Michael Angelo, who suddenly sprang into a wayside gutter and enthusiastically rescued a muddy block of marble, declaring there was an angel in it. He brought the angel to view by his wonderful touches. So let us see the image of God in most degraded men and women, and bring it to view by Christlike redemptive work.

In February, 1907, the papers recorded that the "Congressional Limited," of the Pennsylvania Railroad, ran through Philadelphia without the usual stop, at terrific speed, because the engineer was dead at the throttle. His fireman discovered that something was wrong, and hastened to the cab in time to prevent serious results. A fitting picture that, of many a "fast young man" to-day, who is rushing to physical and moral wreck with a dead man at the throttle. The image of God, the real man in him, is dead, and only the animal lives. But the Easter message comes even to him: "Arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life."

III. The first sin and the first promise of a Saviour. The "first Gospel" is the promise made to fallen Adam and Eve on the very day of their fall: "The Seed o woman shall bruise the serpent's head, and it shall b his heel." Here is the germ of the Gospel, the pro of a Bruised Conqueror. And in the strange so for those times when a promised child was usually sp of as the "seed of his father," there is a hint o Virgin Mother in the words, "The seed of the wom

An Altar Profaned

IV. An altar profaned. Such was Cain's, and o the latest profanations of an altar is thus described newspaper item: "A successful card party was g by the Altar Society of the Chapel of the Blessed S ment last evening in the parochial residence, corner I ware Avenue and West Utica Street. Twelve attra prizes were offered. The entertainment was in char the officers of the society.

V. Noah's Holiday. I think the very first New Y Day of which we read is the New Year's Day Genesis 8:13. That was a happy day for Noah and the people in the ark—a happy day indeed for whole world. "It came to pass . . . in the first mo the first day of the month, the waters were dried up f off the earth." New Year's Day saw God's judgm pass away. The Flood was over! "Noah removed covering of the ark and looked, and behold, the fac the ground was dry." God now, as in those far-off d sees "the wickedness of man," that it is "great in earth." "All have sinned," and God's justice says will destroy all flesh" (Gen. 6:13). "The soul sinneth it shall die." We are all under sentenc death. But "look" and behold, the dark cloud God's wrath vanish and the deep waters of his just ju ment dry up. "Look unto Me," says One who actu bore the punishment for you—"Look unto Me and b saved."

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high.

VI. The Father of his Country. Such was Abrah and of like devout spirit was George Washington. writer in a New York pa gives an anecdote of Wash ton, which came to him dire from a relative who died 1854, and who was a chil the family which Washing was visiting at the time of incident narrated. On t morning of his departure White Plains, just before battle of Chatterton H General Washington, in presence of the members of family and others, offe prayer, during which he quo Joshua 22:22: "The Lord gods, he knoweth, and Isr he shall know: if it be rebellion, or if in transgress against the Lord, save us not t day." The folly of worship images cannot last much long but the foolish worship of st idols as Gold and Pleasure a Fame will call for such prot as that of Abraham for cen ries to come. The worship these things consists in sac ficing to them.

The most ancient pottery in the world. The articles were found in a tomb in Egypt, and are believed to be earlier than Moses.

N THE GREAT FAMINE CAMPS

Awful Scenes of Destitution and Suffering in China—Conditions Steadily Grow Worse—Rushing Relief Down the Grand Canal

INA'S widespread famine is now attracting the attention of the whole civilized world. a growing dread of ding calamity consequent on the failure of the Chinese Government's relief plans, and the breaking up ent concentration camps in which vast multitudes of famine refugees have rtered and fed till now. Present conditions are set forth in the following able dispatch to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from the editor of the leading Shanghai:

"SHANGHAI, March 7.

Day after day the missionaries have been saying: "If it es not rain;" for the rainy season is due. They dreaded the thought of wet for these homeless sufferers, with only a few rags to cover them and no fire these may be dried. Now, at this hour, these missionaries are doubtless not only of the acres upon acres of refugees in the camps—hundreds of ds of little children, boys and girls, men and women, and aged grandparents, shivering beneath the storm—

A Typical Refugee Shelter

This is the kind of home half a million famine sufferers have this winter are also recalling individual of especial distress. I am ng about that weazened old almost blind, whom I saw y all hunched up in her hut, o keep the wind from a little the ground behind her. She cture of complete despair, be- e power of artist to imagine int. Her little shack is in an position. Will the morning alive?

A hysteria seemed to possess her tried to pour out her story, of course we could not under- It took the united efforts of f us to disengage that hand, in hat we might hasten away from the assailing cries for help and the many other outstretched hands made bolder by our alms.

There is still haunting me the picture I saw last week at Nanking of a starving mother, who hugged to her bare bosom, within her ragged dress, a little child. The woman's only shelter from frost, wind and rain was a handful of reeds erected as a wind break. Above her to-night is only the streaming sky; and this rain must hours ago have penetrated her thin garment, so that the perishing babe, too, is wet and shivering. I can even yet hear its weak, wailing, uncomprehending cry.

The flour which has so promptly been forwarded from Shanghai by the energetic Relief Committee there, must travel slowly after being started up the Grand Canal into the area of destitution. Its speed is a burdened coolie's walk. The small boats containing succor for the famishing must be pulled by man power. When towpaths are wet and slippery, the boats are obliged to tie up, regardless of the urgency of the case. Therefore, all the thousands of bags of flour that are now nearing the starving must be at a standstill while this rain continues. Suchien, the famine's centre and our destination, is such a short distance away, as a railroad runs, but so very far, as the canal creeps.

Land transportation is in similar straits. The Committee of Missionaries at Tsingkiangpu received their eagerly awaited consignment of flour this week. When we left there it was being hurried out to the distributing stations in the country. We saw the lines of wheel-barrows trundling their loads of life-giving food toward the waiting villagers. But to-day not a barrow is turning a wheel. Even if it were possible to waterproof the flour in transit, the roads would not permit traffic. Even were not this last difficulty insuperable, men could scarcely be found to wheel the loads in wet weather; for the Chinese peasant has only one suit of clothes, and he has no fire at which to dry that suit when it gets wet. Being padded with cotton, the garments retain moisture for a long time. Experience has taught the Chinese to avoid the rain.

The lack of heat in the Chinese home is only one of countless points wherein the East differs from the West. Twice a day a slight fire is made, usually with brushwood, rushes or dried grass, to cook the family food. Along the canal bank yesterday, groups of women and children were sifting the very dust of the earth in order to collect particles of straw, dry grass and dry roots for use as fuel. A Chinese family's one cooking utensil is made of very thin iron, so that no fuel will be wasted in heating it; the fire is almost directly applied to the food. In this manner a skilful housewife is able to cook a meal with only a handful of reeds or brushwood. A house is never heated, except in the case of the very rich. On the coldest winter days the Chinese family may be seen sitting out of doors, in order to get warm!

It is this spirit of thrift that has enabled the people of the famine area of Central China to live thus far, although the pressure of want began to be severely felt in early autumn. The Chinese are past masters of the art of going hungry, or of subsisting on reduced rations. By pawning the meagre family possessions, by selling the farm implements and the live stock, by disposing of occasional heirlooms, by mortgaging the farm, and by borrowing, when borrowing was possible, 3,000,000 destitute peasants have crossed the autumn and the end of the year. Often the family dog and the family cat went early into the pot. Wherever possible, a store of dried sweet potato leaves, weeds and ground willow bark was early laid in. Hundreds of thousands of persons throughout the famine districts have been subsisting for weeks solely on such fare as this.

These same traits will enable the Chinese to find, somehow, somewhere, fuel with which to cook the relief flour when they finally secure it. They do not ask for butter or jam or meat, or even tea; just the plainest food possible to keep the vital spark burning satisfies the patient, long-suffering Chinese. But even these cannot live without some food. That is why the steady downpour of rain adds a further weight of woe to the suffering of these myraids of people who are crying piteously to the prosperous world for bread. WM. T. ELLIS.

AROUND THE HOME HEARTH

By Margaret E. Sangster

What Shall We Do With Mother?

THE question comes home with no little pathos when mother has grown old, and in widowhood and want is unable to maintain her own home and is wanted by none of her children in their homes. Let no one fancy that the problem raised by the situation is exceptional or easy of solution. After sixty most women who have managed their own affairs, done as they pleased in their own kitchens and been at the head of their households, have set ways that belong to them and cannot easily resign these ways for those of a married daughter or a son's wife. When a mother has sufficient means to enable her to go on living under her separate roof, she is wise to do so, notwithstanding her dread of solitude. There is usually a relative or friend who can join forces with her, but if not she is more comfortable alone in a small independence than she can be when tolerated in the family of a son or daughter.

Here is a case in point. A woman in the later sixties, in good health, with her hand still engaged in housework, church life and the W.C.T.U., is persuaded by her children to live with them in turn, giving up the shelter of her individual domicile. Her son-in-law presently rebels against her criticism of his habits and declares that life is not worth living under the surveillance of his mother-in-law. Her favorite daughter is embarrassed by the grandmother's interference with the children, who become undisciplined and disobedient because they have her on their side when their mother thinks reproof or punishment necessary. Another daughter likes to have mother in the home for a day or two, but openly affirms her reluctance to have the Eden of her married life invaded by a third person. The children one and all respect their mother and give her a certain measure of affection, but they do not desire her constant presence in their midst. They have young people, to whom grandma seems old-fashioned. They have no guest chamber. They have lost a portion of the deep-hearted love of kindred that once made the mother welcome, let her come when she would, to stay by any hearth.

Life in these days is divorced from sentiment, and it must be conceded that even a mother may be very trying and difficult to live with, when she is not disposed to yield an inch or modify her views in the least that she may please her juniors.

Sometimes a room is taken for the superfluous mother in an old ladies' home. Here it is hoped that she will find agreeable society, consisting of matrons of her own age, and that she will be comfortably taken care of as long as she lives. Yet when children are well-to-do there is, in the eyes of outsiders, a strange hardness in a provision for the mother that puts her in her declining years among the derelicts and driftwood tossed by fate on the barren coasts of wintry age. The inmates of old ladies' homes are often furnished with every possible material comfort, but they are very rarely ideally contented. They seem more isolated than if each of them were living by herself in some small place of greater independence.

What shall we do with mother? Might we not remember the years when she cradled our infancy, cared for our childhood, denied herself for our education, freely gave herself for our happiness? Might we not take to heart a thought that we, too, if we live long enough, shall be old and possibly a burden and perhaps hard to get on with, and it may be a perplexity to the children who cling about us now. What shall we do with mother?

Good Cooking

That cooking is taught in our schools and that little girls are learning how to bake and broil, to make puddings and bread and biscuits, is a very good thing. We used to fancy that mother's kitchen was the best cooking school to be found anywhere. Unfortunately we now have to admit that mothers do not universally understand the art of cooking, and that good food is often spoiled between the range and the table. A woman who knows what to buy in the markets and how to serve meats and vegetables so prepared as to retain their juices and furnish their best elements for the upbuilding of the body, is doing real service to her family and the nation.

Cooking is not a difficult art, but it requires brains and attention. To make a perfect loaf of bread is as fine an accomplishment as to play a sonata or paint a picture. Who can blame the man of the house if he grumbles when his habitual diet is muddy coffee, sour bread, burnt fish-balls and tough steak? There is no excuse for offering a hungry man or a growing child badly cooked food. Doubtless, there are men who are pleased with nothing, and with whom faultfinding is second nature. With these chronic grumblers, the housekeeper should have neither patience nor sympathy. But she should not give them an excuse for ill-temper on her own part.

Excellent books on cookery abound. If one has no experience of her own there are rules for her guidance and formulas that may be followed exactly. Good cooking means good health, good temper and plenty of sunshine and happiness in the everyday home.

Siberian Peasants in Obsk Digging for Gold on the Farm Lands

THE artist illustrates in the accompanying sketch a characteristic feature of mining in some parts of Siberia. Permission is readily granted to the peasants by the mine-owner to prospect and open up the ground. These peasant "tributors" may sink shafts wherever they like, subject to the condition that they do not go below water level, usually about sixty feet, and that all the precious quartz extracted must be treated at the mill of the ground-owner, and all gold extracted sold to him at a previously decided rate, giving a fair profit to the peasant, and an extraordinarily good one to the landlord. There being no charge made for the use of the mill, the field is developed practically for nothing, and the peasants themselves frequently make fortunes out of rich reefs which they have opened up. Even with the thermometer at twenty degrees below zero on the Obsk goldfield, where the sketch was made by a staff artist of the Illustrated London News, the intense cold does not stop the work of excavation.

Happy Thoughts Stitched In

IF with a mother's tender care,
Soft, dainty garments we prepare,
And all the needful comforts store,
Viewing and counting o'er and o'er,
Lest some small bit might lacking be,
When heavenly guest, so weak and wee,
Seeks restful place within our nest,
Where sacred mother-love so blest,
Awaits and craves the richest boon
Of queenly joys in ties triune.
Ah, how much more our Father's love,
Who plans our waiting place above,
Who orders with completest care
Gifts choicest, purest, sweetest, fair,
And the rich treasures of his skill
Prepares, our empty hands to fill;
More than a mother's love can be,
Is his divinest love for thee.

The Pepper Sandwich

If you are a sufferer from insomnia, if sleep flies y pillow, and you hear the clock strike one, two, th growing more and more wakeful between midnight dawn, try the virtue of a pepper sandwich. It is ea prepared before bedtime, and should stand on a pl within reach of the victim's hand. Cut a thin slice bread, from a previously buttered loaf. Sprinkle it w red pepper, divide it in two, and lay the buttered si together. Eat it slowly, and moisten the throat witl drink of cold water. The nourishment and stimulus this sandwich, in nine out of ten obstinate cases of insc nia, will induce refreshing sleep.

English branch of the Army started mpaign against self-murder the first of January. "Within five weeks," said the Commander of the Army, General Booth, in an interview given to a representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, "over five hundred wretched, hopeless people came to see if we could do anything for them. Many were saved body and soul. The Salvation Army was their last resort."

The Army, in order to get an accurate idea of the reasons that were driving so many people to self-destruction, began to classify their callers. They found that there were five classes of people.

"The Lonely—This class includes those who having lost friends or home ties had begun to feel that the whole world had no longer any charm for them, and whose only thought was to end their misery by getting out of the world as quickly as possible.

"The Sick and Incurable — This class included those hypochondriacs who thought they were in this condition, and who, unable to see anything but suffering and helplessness before them, had reached the point of self-destruction.

"The Unemployed and Those Financially Embarrassed—Composed mostly of people who through change in circumstances had become poorer and poorer, and suffering from poverty and want, too proud to beg, too honest to steal, had reached the conclusion that life for them was not worth living.

"Victims of Drink and Drugs—Those suffering from dipsomania and from the evil results of the drug habit, and who while suffering their excesses decided they were without hope in the world.

"Victims of Nervous Disorders—Composed of those suffering from neurasthenia and who were also bent on seeking release from their affliction by death"

Just at the time when the people of New York were watching with intense interest the operation of the Salvation Army's new department, General Booth, the originator of the anti-suicide movement in London, arrived in New York. He came to visit his daughter before taking a journey to Japan. Within a few hours after landing he had given several interviews to representatives of the press, and yet seemed fresh for the exertions of the remainder of the day. He said that after a few days in New York he would go on to Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa. In Ottawa he should be the guest of Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada. He would then go across the continent and take a steamer for Japan. In Japan the Army, though small, has by its work made a deep impression on the people. He will receive a semi-official reception, high officers of state offering to preside at the veteran Gospel campaigner's meetings.

America and Britain to Lead a Great Crusade

REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS recently lectured for two months in the leading cities of Great Britain, to enlist popular support for a movement for submitting to other civilized governments a treaty providing for co-operative action to protect uncivilized races against rum and opium, which are a menace to markets, morals, and for a proposal that the British Government join with ours in missions alike. Dr. Crafts now goes to Britain's Asiatic colonies to spend the remainder of the year in urging this crusade. Mrs. Crafts, who accompanies him, will speak as the Superintendent of the Sunday School Department of the World's W. C. T. U. They will first attend the World Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement in Tokio, April 1-7, and the Chinese Centennial, April 25 to May 7, and will afterward visit Australia and New Zealand.

As it has been necessary to circulate much literature, both at home and abroad, in the interest of the movement and for the proposed treaty, which is of great importance to all missionary societies, it is now proposed to raise a fund for the purpose of disseminating literature throughout the European countries. As rum is one of the greatest hindrances to the Gospel in the mission fields, it is believed that many will be glad to aid the International Reform Bureau and Dr. Crafts, its superintendent, in this effort to create international public opinion in support of the proposed universal treaty for the protection of native races. The Bureau's address is Washington, D. C.

Golden Milestone

On the 4th day of February, 1907, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Broomell celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage at their home, Rokeby, Chester County, Pa. The occasion was truly one of jubilee, and as the venerable pair, with beaming faces, received the congratulations of their many guests, the scene was beautiful and impressive. Five living children, twenty grandchildren and six great-grandchildren aided in making the day a "golden milestone" on the pathway of life. Mr. and Mrs. Broomell are members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD family, and as such we felicitate them upon their hale and happy age.

"Gladness of heart is the life of a man, and the joyfulness of a man prolongeth his days."

THE VIOLIN IN THE PAWNSHOP WINDOW

THE bottom had dropped out of things. Gasconi Trefoni had lost his job as a city employee. The meeting of the Socialist Club, of which he was a prominent member, had been raided by the police. Gasconi was drinking heavily to drown his trouble, and his wife and daughter were supporting the family, with help from the neighborhood visitor.

"I am afraid he is a hopeless case," reported the little woman who had the family in charge. "There's lots of good in him, too, if one could get hold of the right string. It's such a pity for the children. Carmella is almost a young lady. I have been opposed to the early marriages of these Italian girls, but I think the sooner she is betrothed to Emmanuel the better. Nicola is a beautiful violin player—full of promise. Think of the effect on him."

"Does the boy inherit his love of music from his father, I wonder?"

"It seems that his father was something of a marvel with a violin before he took to drink. It comes, no doubt, through generations of musical ancestors."

"That may be the very clue for reclaiming the father. If his religion is gone, appeal to his musical nature. Couldn't you coax him to bring the boy and play a duet in our next neighborhood concert?"

"I'll ask Mrs. Trefoni."

Mrs. Trefoni raised her big, hollow eyes in gratitude. "Eef Gasconi he only haf his feedle!" she exclaimed brokenly. "He not the same; he mees feedle so."

"But where is the violin, Mrs. Trefoni?"

"Een pawnshop."

Olansky's pawnshop window was a catch-all. Antonio Tocsi's carpenter tools were there—pawned for three dollars. Salvatore Fortuni's barber outfit was there. One window was full of mechanics' tools that should have been earning bread for little mouths. In front of the door hung Stephano Trosci's eleven dollar overcoat that he had pawned for two. He would redeem it for four when he got work and pawn it again for one. There was a lamp in Olansky's window that had been brought warm and smoking—the only light in the home from whence it came. In one corner of the window was a set of false teeth, and beside it was a tiny pair of shoes that had been taken from the feet of a babe in its coffin and pawned for ten cents to buy the father a drink. And beside these rested the violin with which Gasconi Trefoni used to delight the tenants of the slum block in which he lived.

"Why not let me get the violin and ask him to use it at our next concert? We could get another for Nicola, who plays so marvelously well for a lad."

"He teach Nicola. He mak' ver' proud of Nicola."

"He ought to be proud of the boy. Tell him I said so, when he is sober. Tell him if he can teach some of the other boys as he has taught Nicola, we will get him plenty of students, and he can earn money."

When Gasconi Trefoni came home that day he had not been drinking as heavily as usual. He was in a receptive mood. His pride was touched by the message about Nicola, and his hope aroused by the prospect of having his loved violin back and of using it.

"Sure, I go play," he said to the little woman. "Nicola, he play too, eef I got noder feedle."

"You will have to bring a steady hand, you know," she said. "If you do that, I know where I can borrow a fine Cremona for you from a friend."

"A Cr-r-r-ree-mona!" he exclaimed, almost beside himself with delight. That had been the one ambition of his earlier life, to go to Genoa or Florence and study under a master, so that he might some day be worthy to handle a Cremona. A new tide had set in on the sea of his life. He was ready to make a fight against his appetite.

"I shan't begrudge the use of the Cremona," said Miss Augusta Ainsworth, a wealthy Back Bay spinster. "It has been lying idle in the house for years. I once had a fancy that I should like to be a violinist, you know. If the boy proves to be the musical 'find' that you think him, I guess we can find a way to send him to Florence."

"You wouldn't think of spending so much money on an Italian rag-picker!" exclaimed one of her fashionable acquaintances.

"Why shouldn't I? Aren't we continually saying that the poorest boy in America may become President? And a tanner's son and a canal-driver did. The Italians once dominated the world in art. Why shouldn't there be musical geniuses among the ragpickers or fruit-sellers? Besides, I'm not expending as much on this little prodigy of a violinist as you lavish in a year on your poodle."

The last shot silenced the other's guns The plan worked out well, though there were times when Gasconi's thirst almost got the better of him. But in the end the passion for music, given a chance, triumphed over the passion for drink, and half a score of children enjoyed the lessons of the Italian teacher; and the violin in the pawnshop window had been the means of saving its master.

JOHN F. COWAN.

NEGRO PROGRESS*

OUR obligation to the negro race is very clear and imperative. His presence is a problem, but it is one that must be solved at any cost of labor and patience. It was not of his own volition that he came here, and it is not through his own fault that he is in his present condition. It was not to be expected that in the period of slavery he should seek an education or attempt to improve his mind. He was naturally indolent, content if he was well fed and well housed, and if any ambition did stir in his breast it was discouraged. For the greater part, he took the place of a child and was satisfied to be treated as a child. A few resisted and tried to rise, but the task was too difficult and his owners frowned upon it. Our government suddenly set him free, gave him the franchise and apparently expected that the act would transform him into a man, with a man's self-control and a man's discretion. The most ardent abolitionists must have had some apprehension of the results. No man, white or colored, can be endowed with manliness by legislation.

We have reason to be thankful that the experiment has turned out as well as it has. The negro might have set himself to revenge his wrongs. He might have said that being treated as an inferior he would act as an inferior and would indulge his passions and appetites. His sensual nature was strong; how could it be otherwise? His mental and spiritual nature had been sternly and rigorously repressed; the animal nature had grown without any counterbalancing checks. His sole restriction was fear; he had not been taught what principle meant. The excesses that might have occurred were fearful to imagine, but on the whole they were few and mild. He certainly deserves credit for his part in the experiment.

What is our duty now? Is he not entitled to all the help we can give him? Institutions established for his benefit exist all through the South and they are inundated with applications for help. At Mayesville, in South Carolina, where education, literary and industrial, is given, there are abundant evidences of the negro's desire to learn. The only difficulty is the lack of money. If that were supplied, the building would be full to overflowing. Bright, eager boys and girls are pleading for an education and would count a scholarship that would cover their board and tuition as a blessing from heaven. No gift would be so helpful or so Christlike.

IPSY SMITH IN BROOKLYN

N who have been telling us that the old Gospel is superseded, that it has lost its power, must find it difficult explain the effect of Gipsy Smith's g in Brooklyn, N. Y. Day after huge hall of the Young Men's n Association has been crowded in ernoon by immense throngs eager to him; and at night the audiences led Plymouth Church to overflow- ipsy Smith does not preach any ctrine, he has no new views with attract the people. His is the old presented in his own way, the truth sus Christ came into the world to ners. That truth has clearly all ttraction and men leave their busi- their pleasure to hear the presenta- it. Nor is it curiosity alone that em. Their responses to the preach- itations prove that still, as in the days of Gospel preaching, the Gos- he power of God unto salvation to believe.

he beginning of the services Dr. the pastor of Plymouth Church, "For months I have been in the touch, by visits and addresses and correspondence, with Gipsy missions in the great cities of this . The days and the nights would il for telling you the incidents that unfold into, oh, what dramas and s and romances under the stroke of r hand. For the first time in many all of the churches through sym- and most of them through their ntatives, are now entering upon a whose theme is the love of God, and need of man. The appeal is cience, to reason, to fidelity to the convictions. The atmosphere is nd justice, sweetness and light, the is the sense of responsibility to d his dear son.

ing these few days we will try to sacred chamber of silence and of For a little time we will turn from and thunder of mammon and listen the still, small voice of God. We cleanse the grime from our garments sharpen our dull faculties. When sion closes, we do not propose to even think how many people join a church. We only hope that men's and women's lives will be different, and that the current of character will flow sweeter and deeper toward the sea of God's love. We trust that the voice of conscience will speak more clearly. We hope that the note of duty will be a stronger note. We wish homes to be happier and we seek a higher standard for the market place and the street. We hope that men as patriots will vote for God and country, rather than for their selfish interests. Incidentally the new faith, the new happiness and conviction, will, without doubt, be manifest in public profession of the faith within, but what we earnestly and sincerely seek is the life of God in the soul of man. This new religious feeling and conviction is the great achievement we all aim at."

The desire is being fulfilled. No one who has not seen it can imagine the thrill that passes through the great audiences, under the words of this untutored master of eloquence. Appeal and argument follow close on one another and now and again there is a touch of pathos that causes strong men to wipe their eyes. One such was the anecdote Gipsy Smith told on Sunday, March 3, to a great audience in the Majestic Theatre. He said:

"A few months ago I was conducting a mission in Aberdeen, in the North of Scotland. One night as I worked my way through the crowd I felt a hand tugging at my coat. I thought it the plea of one who wanted to get in with me, and for a few seconds I paid no heed. But the tug became insistent. I stopped, and there beside me stood a little Scotch lassie, clad in rags, and in her uplifted hands was something wrapped in tissue paper, moist and grimy from the touch of her hand. 'What is it, my dear?' I asked. And she said, 'I want you to have my candy.'

'Why?' I asked. 'Oh, sir,' she said, 'we've got a new daddy! He's never been sober 'til Saturday. We've never known him to be sober. He was in your meeting on Saturday and it's so wonderful now.' And didn't I take her candy, and didn't I take her in my arms? Men, it was worth living a lifetime for that minute!"

RESURRECTION LIFE*

AL union with Christ is the way to liverance from the dominion of sin. figure after another that idea is ed through the epistles of the e Paul. It was the essence and of his teaching. To live by Christ, with him, to rise again with him, reign in glory with him, there was belief no other way to real Christian Complete identification, more close hat of husband and wife, with a rence of vitality as essential as that d in the grafted branch, was to be ul's union with Christ. Then the the imparted nature of God himself, flow in the body of the redeemed d he would be dead to sin but alive od. We know where Paul learned ctrine. In some way, either by the ure of the other apostles, or more ly by the direct revelation of the Spirit, he must have learned that e teaching which Christ uttered on e of his crucifixion, "I am the vine, the branches."

owing out this trend of thought, iews the whole sojourn of Christ in sh. He saw him despised, tempted, g until the crown and culmination life came in the supreme sacrifice he on the Cross. The sin-burdened oes with him through it all and dies im. Sin holds him as it sought, but to hold Christ to the very death. It m, and then its power ceases; there nore that it can do. But is that all? hrist's life is not yet finished. He gain, and the believer who has gone im in mystical identification to the rises with him in a new life. Sin as no power over him. It had done its most when he died with Christ; it has nothing to do with this new life.

This is the glorious truth that Paul sees in the Resurrection of Christ. It is not now the penalty of sin that he deals with—he fully discusses that elsewhere—but the emancipation of the believer, who rises delivered from sin's power. He has new life in his veins; he lives by the power of Jesus and sets sin at defiance as an enemy who has lost its power over him.

A Furry Playmate

LONG before winter's snowy mantle has been laid aside for the green robes of early spring, the squirrels of the city parks have exhausted the slender resources of their storehouses; they eagerly accept the proffered hospitality of the children, who delight in ministering to the wants of their furry playmates.

The "little folk in fur" who love the wild, free life of country, field and forest are not to be won from their hidden fastnesses by the most subtle allurements of nut or sweet. The most cautious approach wins but the twinkle of a bright eye, as it reconnoitres from the safe vantage-ground of some lofty, swaying branch or from behind a hummock of brown moss. But the squirrels of the great cities' pleasure grounds seem to belong to a different species. It is almost pathetic to see the tiny, gray-coated animals creeping closer and closer to the out-stretched hand which holds the coveted dainty; but the glancing eyes are ever on the alert, and a movement towards capture leaves the discomfited beholder with but the rear view of a bushy tail as it whisks toward the friendly protection of a near-by tree.

Springtime and the Garden

New Catalogues

TO say that flower or vegetable seeds are of the "Burpee quality," means that they are seeds that grow. From every section of the United States, from England, France, Germany, Denmark, Holland and Japan, wherever particular varieties are assured of their highest degree of excellence, a never-ceasing stream of purest seeds pour each year into the big Burpee warehouses in Philadelphia. But Mr. Burpee himself keeps under his own keen eyes his chief producing points—the famous Fordhook Farms, among the fertile hills of Pennsylvania, and Sunnybrook Farm, in New Jersey. Everything is tested, everything not up to the Burpee standard is discarded. Fordhook has no greater floral pride than its nasturtiums, and the purchaser of these seeds is sure of a mass of glowing color in his garden. Nature has surpassed herself in the two distinct new types of beans—the "Fordhook Bush Lima" and the "Burpee Improved," which are triumphs of recent experiment. Sweet corn, cauliflower and celery give promise, even in the seed, of glorious things to come. Send for a Prize Supplement (free) and compete for the Burpee premium at your county fair. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Burpee Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Nothing succeeds like success," and when one remembers that for thirty-three years John Lewis Childs has been sending out catalogues of "rare seeds, plants and bulbs," and that his seed-growing farms cover nearly one thousand acres, these facts constitute a fair guarantee of the height of success already assured. In addition to his two extensive farms on Long Island, a beautiful Floral Park in Southern California is a part of Mr. Childs' vast scheme for giving nature's best to his customers. The heliotrope and carnations, the calla lilies and amaryllis of that semi-tropical climate are a little more luxuriantly developed than they can become elsewhere. Burbank's winter rhubarb promises that wholesome dish in the best and juiciest condition; the "Everlasting" pumpkin agrees to stay firm and sound from harvest to harvest, and the "Wakefield" savoy cabbage is so crisp and curly that the appetite craves an old-fashioned "boiled dinner," in preference to terrapin or canvasback ducks. The plant food "Bonora" works wonders of growth and invigoration. John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, New York.

Vick's Garden and Floral Guide shows a wonderful increase in the number of varieties of flower and vegetable seeds since their first catalogue was issued, and, what is even more to the point, it promises a corresponding improvement in the quality of the stock offered. Every variety is carefully tested upon the broad acres of Vick's Seed Farm. In addition to the old favorites, the novelties for this year include a half dozen magnificent new asters, ranging from royal purple up through cardinal, carmine and sunset shades to purest white. The Hiawatha corn, the Ailsa Craig onion, Powell's Yellow Giant bean and the Carman seedling potato show as careful a consideration for the utilities as for the beauties of the summer season. A special catalogue of hardy perennials is a working scheme in itself. A premium on every dollar's worth of seeds is distinctly worth while. James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y.

"The Garden Beautiful" greets us from the front page cover of Peter Henderson's Seed Catalogue for 1907. Now that the time is at hand for those fortunate ones of earth who own lawns to begin to think about them, it is a good thing to know that the "Henderson" lawn grass seed will produce the most beautiful lawns in America in from four to six weeks' time. Nor are clover seed, red top and "Canada blue" a whit behind the lawn grass in productiveness. The "Ponderosa" tomato is depicted as a globe of luscious richness, fit to grace the table of a king. Beans—Longfellow bush, earliest Red Valentine, long Pod Wax and Leviathan pole Lima crowd each other as favorites. The best way to find out what to grow and how to grow it, is to send for the Farmer's Manual, which will be forwarded on application. Among the many rare flowers, in seed and root, which the Henderson Catalogue describes, the many varieties of cannas and chrysanthemums are particularly alluring. The Imperial Japanese collection of chrysanthemums are the finest types of breeding during centuries; six for $1.50. Peter Henderson & Co., 35 and 37 Cortlandt Street, New York City.

Asters, as large as American Beauty roses, and in twenty-five varieties, embracing every hue of the rainbow, 20 cents per packet, three for 50 cents. William Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa., makes this offer upon the first inside page of his 1907 Seed Catalogue, and then proceeds through 152 pages of illustrations and reading matter to show what can be done by old Mother Earth when she is aided by human ingenuity and industry. Nothing which the garden can yield is omitted from the Maule Seed Book. Of the vegetables, the "Always Ahead" collection, illustrated in colors on the back page cover, includes six of the earliest varieties of tomatoes, beets, cabbages, radishes, cucumbers and peppers—one packet of each, 50 cents, post-paid. A $1.00 plant order secures with it a choice rose, chrysanthemum or fuchsia free. William Henry Maule, Philadelphia, Pa.

"My Sweet Peas," compliments of Miss Emma V. White, 3010 Aldrich Avenue, South, Minneapolis, Minn. If the sweet peas shown on the covers of Miss White's Catalogue are photographs of those she grows, she will have difficulty in filling her orders this spring. Miss White's collection includes all the dear old-fashioned favorites, and she remembers the little ones in a "Children's Collection," price 10 cents. If you do not know what to select, send 50 cents for a "Prize Packet," and you will receive an admirable booklet free, entitled Culture of Flowers.

Miss C. H. Lippincott, 602 Tenth Street South, Minneapolis, Minn., has prepared a catalogue whose front page cover is a work of art. The dainty child, with sunny ringlets, does not need the blue forget-me-nots in which she is wreathed to assure herself of remembrance from those who behold her. Miss Lippincott's many patrons of the first fifteen years will be glad to learn that she has added a list of fine garden seeds to the flower seeds which have been her exclusive specialty. A full-sized package, each of fifteen varieties, make a truly "bargain collection" for 25 cents. Compete for the prize in the 1907 contest for the best yard grown from Lippincott seeds.

Plums, currants, apples, peaches and grapes tempt both eye and palate as illustrated upon the pages of Charles A. Green's Nursery Co. Fruit Book and Catalogue, Rochester, N. Y. Twentieth spring shipping season opens April 1. Green also carries a fine line of hardy snowball, lilac and deutzia bushes. Many prizes have been awarded to poultry breeders who own stock from the Green poultry pens.

L. L. May & Co., St. Paul, Minnesota, issue an attractive catalogue for the year 1907, covering their remarkable assortment of Northern Grown Seeds, Plants, Bulbs and Fruits. Grown in the "golden grain belt of the world," their productions are sturdy and may be depended upon. May's "extra cleaned grass and clover seed" have stood critical germination tests and are reliable. The wonderful Japanese Kuozu Vine is the most remarkable climbing vine of the age, something like wistaria, but larger and fuller clusters; it is extremely rapid and dense in growth.

Two grand new roses, "Richmond" and "Etoile de France" show their beautiful faces upon the 1907 catalogue of the George H. Mellen Co., Springfield, Ohio. These roses are exceedingly free-flowering and strong and rapid growth. The Mellen Co's Prize Collection of Hardy Phlox, flowering from early summer until late in the fall, have a range of color found in no other hardy plant. Eight varieties of one-year grapevines deserve special mention. The large assortment of tea roses grown at the Innisfallen Greenhouses are superb. Ask for the book, free, How to Make the Window Garden a Success.

D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., send out a Seed Annual, 1907, which announces many new specialties in this the fifty-second year of their existence as seedgrowers. As essentials to the production of good vegetables and beautiful flowers, they claim for their seeds a good soil, liberal manuring and thorough preparation; these given, the seeds will do the rest. The Ferry Catalogue is particularly useful to the amateur farmer, as it contains clear instructions upon how to build and manage hotbeds, as well as general directions for the cultivation of choice plants and market-garden specialties. The culture of celery in its perfection may be boldly undertaken by the greenhorn who follows Ferry's instructions. "Pride of the Market" peas are just ready for eating, as Ferry's "First and Best" vines have yielded their last meal. Medicinal and pot herbs are named in great variety, with conditions for growth clearly outlined. Dahlia and gladiolus bulbs are healthy and various. This catalogue names a number of excellent books upon gardening, notably two reliable text-books upon mushroom culture.

The American Church in Berlin

—Pastor I. F. Dickie, of the American Church in Berlin, writes that the church has experienced a year of great prosperity, and since the week of prayer a deep spiritual movement that has been very blessed in its results. "Neither storm nor cold," he writes, "can affect the audiences and the church is filled Sunday mornings and at the afternoon services. Usually some have to stand."

The Spots on the Sun

THE most gorgeous object on which the eye of man ever rested is the glorious sun. A star, like millions that cover the sky from pole to pole; yet, strange to say, we know almost as much about these stars as we do of our own. As to the cause of the sun's spots we are absolutely ignorant. They appear unexpectedly, are of various sizes, and on various parts of his disk both north and south of the equator, and seldom if ever at the equator and never north or south of latitude sixty degrees.

Some spots are of enormous size, of which the present spot is an example, though not a striking one, being visible through a smoked glass to the naked eye. A spot to be seen as a minute speck must be about 30,000 miles in diameter, but according to published accounts this particular spot must be some 120,000 miles in size. If, as seems probable, it is a hole through the sun's atmosphere, it would swallow up the earth as a nail-keg would a small apple.

Besides the spots, the entire surface of the sun is covered with the minutest telescopic spots, called "rice grains," in numbers beyond computation. No one knows what they are. Many suppose they appear periodically, once in about eleven years, but the evidence appears to be pretty weak.

The immense size of the sun cannot be appreciated except by Him who made it. In volume it exceeds the earth over 1,300,000 times, his diameter being 886,500 miles. If the eight planets and twenty-five moons and the 600 asteroids were all fused in one round globe, it would be a small one compared volume for volume with the sun.

The sun rotates on his axis the same as do the planets, his exact time being unknown, though it is about 25½ days. Gravity at its surface is 27½ times greater than on the earth, and in volume 109½ times, so that a man of ordinary height would, if transplanted to the sun, be 625 feet tall.

CALIFORNIA STUDENTS COMBINE

Over one-fourth of the men at the recent College Y.M.C.A. Conference at Pacific Grove, Cal., bound themselves together with a declared "purpose to become ministers of Jesus Christ," and to "aggressively promote the consideration of the ministry as a vocation for Christian young men." The movement thus formed received the name, "The Student Recruits for the Christian Ministry." G. C. H. McPheeters, of Stanford University, California, is Corresponding Secretary.

ON "THE ROAD"

And it's Really Lots of Fun.

An Ind. woman solved the food question with good sound reasoning. She says:

"For almost ten years I suffered from poor health, which was plainly the result of improper food.

"I was always drowsy, had headache, stomach trouble, was getting a sallow complexion—in short was simply miserable.

"Yet I did not realize the real cause of my trouble until recently. I have given Grape-Nuts and the exercises in the little book, "The Road to Wellville" (which I found in the pkg.), a thorough trial, and they have worked wonders for me.

"I noticed a change from the beginning. My headache disappeared and at the end of the first week my stomach did not trouble me so much.

"Now, in less than a month, my nerves are strong and I begin to have some ambition to do things. I have gained six pounds and feel full of life.

"Grape-Nuts food, with cream, makes a delicious dish and I never grow tired of it. I consider 'The Road to Wellville' one of the most valuable books ever printed, for I owe my present good health to it and Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. THE LARKIN CHURCH-AID PLAN
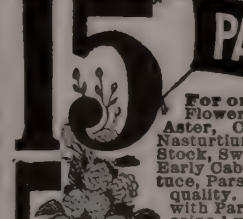
RAISED MONEY FOR THESE CHURCHES

Without extra expense to anyone—without donations. Endorsed everywhere by Pastors and congregations.

MEMBERS and friends co-operate to purchase, through a committee, their home needs of us—the manufacturers—thus saving for the church the middlemen's profits and expenses. ¶ The Larkin Church-Aid Plan can be used to raise a large sum quickly—The Christian Union Church of San Lorenzo, Cal., recently made $1,000 profit on a single order of Larkin Products. The Plan can also be established as a permanent source of income—a pastor writes: "Your Church-Aid Plan is permanently established and giving splendid results. We are already making $60 to $80 a month."

ONE-HALF TO THE CHURCH

To an interested Church Society (or individual) we will sell $20.00 worth of Larkin Products for $10.00. Of every dollar paid to the committee by the members and friends of the church for Larkin Laundry and Toilet Soaps, Toilet Articles, Coffee, Teas, Spices, Extracts, and more than one hundred and fifty home needs, fifty cents—one-half—goes to the committee for the church treasury. Those ordering through the committee pay no more for these pure Products than they now pay the retailer.



No expenses, no donations or contributions to be solicited. The plan is simple, practical, efficient, co-operative. Our special literature, etc., readily secures orders.

Nebraska's Woman Blacksmith

WOMAN has for so long been in the field as a wage-earner and a member of the various professions that were once supposed to be pre-empted by the sterner sex, that the sight of her in the arena of public life has long since ceased to be a novelty.

But it has remained for a little woman in College View, Neb., to open up one more avenue of lucrative employment to her sisters, which has hitherto been considered beyond the pale of even the most enterprising feminine pioneer who set forth to seek the living which the world owed her. To Mrs. Philip P. Wilcox belongs the odd fame of having shown that a slender little woman, weighing scarcely a hundred pounds, can become past-mistress in the art of the forge and the anvil. There was a time when her husband bore the title of "The Village Blacksmith;" but Longfellow's homely classic is hopelessly old-fashioned, for Mrs. Wilcox has proven to the satisfaction of the whole countryside, that the up-to-date requisites of a competent blacksmith do not demand "a mighty man . . . of large and sinewy hands." Mrs. Wilcox began to help her husband for pleasure, but finding her health much improved by the exercise, she carried on the entire work of the smithy, while Mr. Wilcox worked elsewhere for the summer. The little woman can shoe a horse as well as any blacksmith in the country, and the owner of many a mettlesome colt brings him to her to be shod, having learned of her peculiar ability to soothe the animals into submission.

Mrs. Wilcox at the Forge

This plucky exponent of a new trade for women holds a teacher's certificate, but she declares there is more money, more health, and more pleasure in blacksmithing, and she assures tired, overworked teachers that if they once tried it, they would never go back to the schoolroom again. She is bringing up her three daughters in the same way.

Answered Prayers

Devoted Reader, Ohio. "The comfort the Lord sends me in time of trouble, in answer to prayer, is 'sunshine to my soul.'"

E. H., Pennsylvania. "I have had such a direct answer to prayer, I feel I must tell it to others. When we pray earnestly for help, God always hears us."

L. B., North Carolina. "I know the Lord does hear and answer. For a long time I prayed for something no power on earth could bring to pass, and the Lord has granted my prayer."

Mrs. F. M., Minnesota. "I would like to join the 'prayer family' by saying the Saviour is very dear to me, and I am indeed grateful for the prayers he has answered for me. I will surely trust him all my days on earth."

E. D. G., Nebraska. "I have called upon the Lord in time of trouble and he has delivered me. His mercies every day are wonderful. 'Praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works unto the children of men.'"

A. A. C., Canada. "I write to say how God has heard and answered my prayer and helped me out of great trouble. I feel so thankful, I must express it by writing to the 'Answered Prayer' department. I hope this may help others to trust in God and believe in prayer."

I. S. E., Ohio. "The 'Answered Prayers' column has become of great help to me. God has often helped and upheld and given me strength for trials, and has recently wonderfully opened a way for help, for which I have been praying for months. He is faithful to his promises.

Mrs. E. M., Indiana. "In the hope that some doubting, despairing soul may feel fresh courage to take the Saviour at his word, when he says: 'Ask and it shall be given,' I feel constrained to add my testimony by saying that I know that God does hear and answer prayer."

M. S. W., Georgia. "I wish in the 'Answered Prayer' column to testify to God's goodness in having answered my prayers many times in the past; just now, especially, has he signally answered my prayer for a loved one who was a slave to drugs, and who has been rescued from this habit."

Mrs. C. A. C., Michigan. "I have tried to walk with God for more than sixty years, and he has answered so many prayers. For three long, weary months the clouds were so dark, I was afraid he would not answer, but he did in his own way, far better than my own plans. I pray that I may trust him more than ever, so that when my call shall come I may go home to live with the dear ones gone before."

L., Arizona. "I am very much interested in the 'Answered Prayers' column, but I do feel that the beautiful testimonies would contain more force and convincing power if our friends would enter more into particulars. My wife and I have been praying for years for the conversion of a son, and it has come. When ill, an estate of which I had charge became involved through depreciation of securities, and I prayed fervently that I might live until I had been enabled to fully liquidate it, and this mercy also was graciously vouchsafed to me. In face of such experiences, how can I doubt?"

R. H., Cape Girardeau. "I want to let the world know how gracious the Lord has been in answering my prayers. Many times has he heard my supplications and answered. I prayed and trusted him to relieve a great anxiety, and he did. May this testimony strengthen the faith of all who reads it."

Mrs. J. M. I., Michigan. "For nine long years I have prayed, with an aching heart, for the reconciliation of two friends who had become estranged through false witnesses. It was a long time to wait, but I knew the dear Lord had sustained me in great affliction, and I knew he would grant this prayer in his own good time. I thank God to-day that he has brought these two, so long separated, together once more."

Answers to prayer are also acknowledged from Reader, Virginia; Mrs. J. H. P., New York; Mrs. S. W., Iowa; Mrs. E. C. N., Minnesota; Subscriber, Ohio; C. T. D., California; Mrs. R. T., Oxford; K. C., Pennsylvania; F. E. T., Ontario; Mrs. L. J. T., Massachusetts; Ohio Friend; C. D., Pennsylvania; Mrs. L. H. S., Colorado; Kentucky Reader; Mrs. J. C., Texas; Reader, Indiana; Reader, New York; M. M. A., Illinois; B. M., Illinois; Mrs. A. H. B., New York; Constant Reader, New Jersey; L. M. Z., Florida; Mrs. W. E. H., Colorado.

FOOLED THE PREACHER

A Doctor's Brother Thought Postum was Coffee.

A wise doctor found out coffee was hurting him, so he quit drinking it.

He was so busy with his practice, however, that his wife had to write how he fooled his brother, a clergyman, one day at dinner. She says:

"Doctor found coffee was injuring him and decided to give Postum a trial, and we have used it now for four years with continued benefit. In fact, he is now free from the long train of ills that follow coffee-drinking.

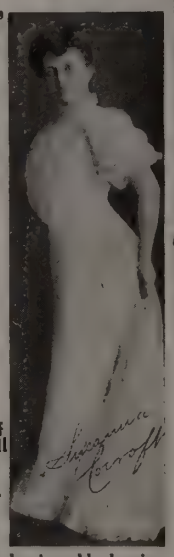
"To show how successful we are in making Postum properly, I will relate an incident. At a dinner we gave, Doctor suggested that we serve Postum instead of ordinary coffee.

"Doctor's brother, a Clergyman, supposed it was old-fashioned coffee, and remarked, as he called for his second cup, 'If you do preach against coffee I see you haven't forgotten how to make it.'"

This goes to show that well-made—fully boiled—Postum has much the flavor and richness of good coffee although it has an individuality all its own. A ten days' trial will prove that it has none of the poisonous effect of ordinary coffee but will correct the troubles caused by coffee. "There's a reason." Name furnished by Postum Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Are You Too Thin?

For only 15 minutes a day's practice in your own room upon special exercises that I will give you, you can be round, plump, wholesome, rested and attractive. Nature intended you to be—why should you not?



The following are extracts from the weekly reports of my pupils:

"Just think, Miss Cocroft, I have gained 25 pounds."

"Before I took up your work, I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I can digest tacks. I am so happy."

"Every exercise and movement has accomplished just what we wanted."

"My bust, neck and chest have filled out beautifully and I carry myself like another woman."

"You have done more for me than doctors have done in 20 years. My constipation is entirely relieved and my nerves are so rested."

I have built up thousands of women—why not you? You will be so much more attractive and so much better satisfied with yourself.

If I cannot help your particular case I will tell you so. My information and advice are entirely free. Send 10 cents for instructive booklet, with card for your dressing table showing correct lines of a woman's figure.

trong Drink a Curse

By Mrs. M. Baxter

E heart, according to the dictionary, is "the inner part of anything; the or vital part; the seat of the affec- and the passions; the seat of the un- nding and the will; the moral sense; courage; spirit; disposition of mind." mmorality and drunkenness rob man this, which makes him a man in con- with a beast. What is a man with- e inner part, "the inner man of the in that which is not corruptible?" 's a beast and worse; for a living ure which is destitute of this inner iousness, takes no high place in the al world; and such is the miserable kard.

man destitute of his "chief and vital "—that part which can know, under- , and respond to God, and which can , help, love, and serve his fellow- ures,—is a moral monster; and such miserable drunkard or opium slave. n without this vital part, is a man lead, a blighted creature; his affec- are paralyzed; he treads on wife and n to gratify his self-indulgence, the is without heart. And he is without erstanding. Again and again the physi- uffering which is caused by his self- dgence in strong drink, has told him the which intoxicating liquors have upon But the comparatively short time of ure is all he thinks of; he is without rstanding even of that which his ex- nce teaches him; he is befooled, blind- d, by the demon into whose charge evil has committed him, and he can- elp himself. He has sold his will and nderstanding to his greatest enemy for -lived pleasure—the miserable crea- is without heart.

knows how many may have passed out s world into a hopeless eternity with rt taken away by God's great enemy, n they did not resist that he might flee them! And they have chosen an un- ably terrible hereafter, a lot prepared, for them, but "for the devil and his s" (Matt. 25: 41). Drunkards and rers are often linked together in ture. And drunkenness, including ry to opium and other sedatives, im- lity, in all its terrible forms, and ualism, which is a mental drunken- make men heartless and cruel to- s their fellow-creatures, as they are ed towards God, in their rejection of disobedience to him.

the days of the prophet Isaiah, and of ekiah, king of Judah, Ephraim, which l for the ten tribes of Israel as distinct Judah, had attained an unenviable tation for drunkenness. Woe to the n of Judah, to the drunkards of raim. The state religion of Israel or raim was the worship of the golden s of Bethel and of Dan, instituted by roboam, son of Nebat, who made Is- to sin." Drunkenness and immorality he accompaniments of idolatry. When on made the golden calf, and God told es, who was on the mount, alone with about it. Moses went down to find people engaged in the horrible rites of morality and drunkenness which always nd an idol feast. It almost broke the t of Moses. On the one hand, the e of his God was compromised and dis- ored, and on the other his people had ly fallen, and these sins of immorality drunkenness among the people whom had elected to be his special treasure, burdened this man of God that he cried is agony of soul: "Now, Lord, if thou , forgive their sin, and if not, blot me, ay thee, out of thy book which thou written" (Exodus 32: 22).

nd drunkenness and immorality are the nce of selfishness. The drunkard, mad- ed by the thirst of hell, which Satan made to burn in his body, will leave e and children, or husband and children, ared for, without food or fire, bedding roper clothing, to indulge in the tem- ary satisfaction which the stupefaction intoxication brings with it. Oh, how y, "wine and new wine take away the rt"! The power to reason, the power effect, the power to have compassion, power to consider responsibility—all is e, drowned by the miserable drink, the rible, devilish self-indulgence, regard- of what others suffer. And truth, honor, honesty—all which raises a man—depart when the drink, or opium, or immorality lay hold of him; he has, like Ahab, sold "himself to the devil in the sight of the Lord" (1. Kings 21: 25).

Among the Workers

—The "Boy Evangelist," in a recent trip in Ontario and Western New York, dealt with over four hundred cases in "personal work."

Rev. Hugh Smith has been the leader in the union revival meetings held recently at the First Methodist Church, in Danville, Ill.

—The inclement weather did not diminish the attendance at the services conducted by Rev. Arthur J. Smith, evangelist, and Chester Harris, singer, in Wolfeboro, N. H.

—The People's Tabernacle in Denver has been crowded with interested hearers during the revival conducted by Rev. B. W. Huckabee. The large choir was in charge of J. H. Woodruff.

—Countess Adeline Schimmelmann, founder of the International Mission, and whose work among the sailors and fishermen of the Baltic is already known to Christian Herald readers, will visit this country in September next.

—Evangelist G. L. Barker and his singer, W. A. Andrews, conducted a three weeks' meeting at Matawan, N. J., with Rev. J. W. Moriss, pastor. The meetings were largely attended, and many made public profession of conversion.

—Evangelist John A. Davis and Singer F. A. Mills have been holding very successful meetings in Brooklyn, and numerous conversions are reported. Many lukewarm Christians have been transformed into earnest Christian workers.

—Rev. J. D. Belknap, the Congregational evangelist, of Syracuse, N. Y., has been making a Gospel tour of the towns in Nebraska. The State of Washington will be visited before he returns home. A large revival will be held in Spokane. The same interest was shown as in his previous meetings in the West.

—A great religious awakening has shaken Waterford; Rev. E. C. Farnell and Rev. Larcombe, of the M. E. and First Baptist churches, uniting, called Evangelist E. Thomas Liddell and wife to conduct the campaign, which opened January 13th and concluded January 30th. Over fifty men and women confessed Christ.

—Dr. C. R. Scoville and his corps of helpers have been aiding in a spiritual revival in Huntington, Ind. The meetings were held in the Central Christian Church. The results have been especially marked among the young people, one society of Christian Endeavor reporting over eight hundred at one meeting. Deloss Smith was the chief singer of the revival.

—Mr. W. R. Blackburn, Memphis, Tenn., writes: "Our revival has been carried on here with great results since November last. It has stirred Memphis from centre to circumference. Thousands have confessed Christ, and the work still goes on." The revival has been participated in by the different denominations, and there have been many added to the churches of Memphis.

—"Cottage revivals" have been held in Newark, N. J., by Rev. Davis W. Lusk, of the Sixth Presbyterian Church. After the completion of the series, a stirring revival was inaugurated in the church. The speakers were Major George A. Hilton, the Californian evangelist, and Rev. Bradford Williams, of Brooklyn. Grant Colfax Tullar lead the great chorus of two hundred local singers.

—The first service of the Children's Church of America was held in the Union Baptist Church, in Brooklyn, on February 24. All of the arrangements were made by the pastor, Rev. R. W. MacCullough, Ph.D. The entire service was under the direction of the young people. Some gave out the hymns; others, under eleven years of age, acted as ushers; a young girl gave out the notices; the prayers were by boys of grammar school age, and there were six short sermons by six young people of the Sunday School. The parents were greatly pleased and it is thought that the movement inaugurated by pastor MacCullough will be taken up by other churches.

Van Camp's PORK AND BEANS

BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

The Easy Meal and Its Famous Goodness

When you have Van Camp's Pork and Beans with Tomato Sauce for dinner, your work is easy and your menu of the kind that makes the mouth water in anticipation of the deliciousness in store. Don't worry about meal-time when you're busy, or tired, or out of sorts, or at a loss for something good to eat. For there on the pantry shelf are Van Camp's—rich, fine flavored, appetizing Van Camp's—all ready for you. And you know there's nothing that will so perfectly meet the demands of healthy appetites and particular tastes as Van Camp's.

Just think of the absolute ease with which Van Camp's are made ready for the table. You simply put the can, unopened, into boiling water—turn it over in about five minutes so the contents will be thoroughly heated—let it remain for another five minutes or so—lift it out—twist the can-opener—turn out on a platter—and that's all. There is your dinner, steaming hot, with the cheery, wholesome, spicy odor peculiar to Van Camp's already putting a keener edge on everybody's appetite.

Only ten minutes, or thereabouts, for the whole process—and the only labor is lifting the can and turning the can-opener. And the result—

A heaping dish of nutty-flavored, nutritious Van Camp beans, plump and whole and mealy—surrounded and covered with piquant Van Camp Tomato Sauce, made of vine-ripened tomatoes—surmounted with a succulent slice of young and tender, corn-fed, home-grown pork, imparting just enough richness. Van Camp's make a dish for the epicure, and are prepared so quickly and easily that they're ready before you know it.

It's a wise habit—keeping Van Camp's always on hand. Don't let your supply run low.

And remember, Van Camp's is the name.

Costa Rica's Prolific Banana Plantations, the Finest in the World

HERE is probably no lovelier or more fertile country on this continent than Costa Rica. Noble mountain ranges, wide savan- and beautifully wooded valleys lend h diversity to the scenery. On the Atlantic side, land is covered with great forests that were for- y inhabited by wild tribes, some of whose descend- are still to be found there in a semi-savage state. climate varies from tropical to temperate, and llers on the coast are subject to fever, though the er plateaus are salubrious. ortunately, the whole coun- s subject to frequent earth- kes.

There has been some talk of interven- by the United States and Mexico to avert the less sacrifice of human life, as those who are familiar the situation declare that there is no question at e which cannot be settled satisfactorily by arbitration.

Missionary Sobey gives this brief description of an evangelistic visit to the banana district near Port Limon:

"On a trolley we went twelve miles into the banana plantations. This is the largest centre of the banana industry. Under a mere shed we commenced singing, and soon drew in some forty-five men and women to our service. They attentively listened, and seemed deeply impressed under the Word. Tracts and copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (which they pass from one to the other) were given them.

Hauling Bananas on a Plantation near Port Limon

"Then we went two miles further on. Here, in a camp building, we met a goodly company. We had more singing; we used Sankey's hymns. The majority of the colored people, toilers on the banana farms, are good singers. They listened attentively to the Gospel, and some were graciously impressed. Then we proceeded two miles further on, and again our gathering-place was under the broad shade of the banana trees. Soon after we began to sing the people gathered, each person bringing a chair or box to sit upon. Many of them had their own hymn-books and Bibles. There were here over fifty, and the attention was marked. At the close of the service there was personal conversation, and many expressed thanks for the privilege. While we were telling the people of the terrible havoc wrought by earthquake and fire in Kingston, Jamaica, a man came running and shouting that a house was on fire. All of us at once rushed to the rescue, and soon put the fire out and saved the little house. Then, before we parted, standing with bucket and pan in hand, we heartily joined in a closing hymn and benediction.

"Going out thus, we can always make sure of a good congregation, which is more satisfactory to our mind than preaching in a beautiful building to a very few people. Some who hear us do take heed and turn to God, while others who have wandered into sin, return unto the Lord. So while we sow the seed we know the joy of harvest also. There is great need of more men to extend this pioneer work. One company has been kind, and has helped us by building several mission churches and supporting schoolmasters, who teach the children free."

Touching religious work on the Isthmus, which he frequently visits, Mr. Sobey writes:

"We need another missionary for the Canal Zone. We believe the Lord will send the right man and means to sustain him. It may be his will to send both through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In that narrow strip of land tens of thousands are located. The evil influences are such that many swiftly perish. To such the Word of God must be preached; but the laborers are few."

General Booth's World-Wide Crusade

WHOEVER originated the well-known adage, "Young men for action; old men for counsel," had no prophetic knowledge of the Commander-General of the Salvation Army, in whom action has no age limit. After seventy-eight years, full of marvelous action, General Booth has left England, en route for a Japanese crusade.

Stopping for a week in New York City, the General vigorously outlined the three great propositions which are at present filling his head and heart; and, despite the patriarchal form and snow-crowned head, the invincible fire in his eye inspires a conviction of the ultimate accomplishment of his purpose.

First, he is laying definite plans toward putting the poor of England upon "small holdings"—little homesteads, we in America would say—which, by following a wisely thought-out system, they may eventually own. The second plan—and it is built upon a solid foundation—is a colonization in Rhodesia, Africa, of the poor in all lands whom the long arm of the Salvation Army can reach and succor. The last plan is luminous in its comprehension of the needs of suffering, sorrowing humanity, and the machinery which may be set in motion for its uplift.

"We must have a University of Humanity," declares the General, "with branches in New York and London. It is not enough for us to be willing to give our service, but men and women must be equipped by regular courses of study to meet the needs of the poor and the miserable with the best possible methods." Perhaps no article in the Salvationist's creed is more strongly emphasized than that which admits of no separation between the sociological and the spiritual, and the basis of the curriculum in the new university will surely be instruction which leads to the Creator through the ministry of service to his creatures.

Escorted to the Canadian border, the General is now spending a month with his workers in Canada. From Ottawa to Toronto, on to Winnipeg and Vancouver, the dauntless old soldier of wellnigh four-score years vanquishes physical weariness with true soldierly courage, and has frequently preached a morning and evening sermon, lecturing in the afternoon upon the subj "The Secret of the Success of the Salvation Arm The Canadian Army prepared the way for their G eral's visitation, by personal invitations at every ho not only of the steady working classes, but of drunken and the vicious.

Gen. William Booth, Founder of the Salvation Army

Approaching the most notorious and abandoned c acter in a public-house, a Salvation lassie said: "C and hear the General—your friend, if you only knev He will tell you the truth, aye, and you need it, to judge by your face and these tatters. Man, never intended you to be like this." And such inv tions were effective and successful. The Gener forerunner was an expert.

From Canada, Gen. Booth sails for Japan. Major Y amura, a most intelligent Japanese gentleman, who become a convert to Christianity through the Army, who now is the editor of its Japanese publications, planned his Commander's three-months' campaign, will receive him with military ceremony. The worl the Army in Japan has reached a point in its devel ment which has won the attention of all classes, the Commander-General's visit at this juncture is garded as an important step in the movement. short sojourn in China, and the intrepid exponent the Gospel of Service returns to England, where alre arrangements are made for an extended motor t throughout the British isles. From town to villa from city to tiny hamlet, the General will sound "call to arms," as his motor speeds on its way.

But onward, upward, till the goal ye win, is the motto which the venerable head of the Salvat Army lives by. In the early fall, D.V., he will ret to our shores for a "strictly American campaign."

With the autumn, Gen. Booth assures us, we sh hear more of the University of Humanity and of progress this far-reaching project has made.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT GIPSY SMITH'S MEETINGS

DURING the past week Gipsy Smith has been preaching every evening in the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, and every afternoon in the large hall of the Y. M. C. A. Every day both meetings have been densely crowded, as those were the previous week in Plymouth Church, and large numbers have been turned away for lack of room. In the course of his sermons he related the following incidents:

A Missing Date

"Many real Christians are distressed because they do not know the date of their conversion. They know that they are converted because they have the signs in themselves, but they think a change so important as that of the new birth should have been so remarkable that it could not be overlooked. Now I was in that case about my physical birth. Gipsies do not keep any records, so I could not find out from them on what day I was born. My mother was dead, so I went to my father, but he could not help me. But at last I got from Somerset House, London [the Bureau of Vital Statistics], the exact date of my birth and I went to my father and I said, 'Now, father, I have got the year and date of the month. Was it at night, or in the daytime that I was born?' 'My boy,' he said, 'I can't tell you.' 'Well, but,' I said, 'you ought to know. You are my father.' 'I don't know,' he replied. 'Well,' I said, 'try to remember, because it concerns me and I want to know.' 'My boy,' said my father, 'you know you are born, don't you?' 'Yes,' said I. 'Well, let that do,' said my father."

The Language of the Kingdom

"Now some one may ask me what are the signs of having been born again. There are several. One of them is that of the tongue. I was preaching in one of our cities in England and at the close of one of the services a lady came up to me and said, 'Mr. Smith, there is an encampment of gipsies in one of our suburbs. May I beg you to see them?' I said, 'Yes.' And then and there I fixed the time. I said, 'We will go to-morrow.' She called for me and we started for the encampment. Andwhen we reached the field where the wagons and the tents were arranged I looked at them. At the first survey I knew there was not a gipsy on the ground—not one. There were wagons, tents, people, but no gipsies. I got out of the carriage and went among the tents and spoke in our own language, for the gipsy has a language of his own, to the people. They looked at me with a vacant stare and there was a woman, I picked her out and I went and spoke to her and she said, 'O, I am very sorry. I have only just joined them. I was not born a gipsy.' Listen! If she had been born there she would have known the language. She was only a 'joiner' and she didn't know the language. You see it?"

A Wife's Temper

"In a church I was working in, in Manchester, England, I frequently received requests for prayer for the conversion of husband, children and friends from one woman. She was a Christian, but she had one besetting sin, which handicapped her. She used to bring request after request: 'Please pray for my husband.' Well, we got him along, and when we got him nearly in, that woman would upset the whole thing. What do you think it was? It was one thing, and she did it well. It was her temper, and when she did let go—whew! Everybody in the house knew, and her husband used to say: "Well, Mary, if that is religion, I don't want it.' She knew she was wrong and she was sorry afterward, and would ask his forgiveness. He did forgive her, but all the same it hindered him. One day I made up my mind that when she brought another request I would talk with her and be very honest with her. She did come and I told her that the fault was hers, and that she must overcome her temper; that the Lord could give her grace to enable her to curb her temper. She took the matter to the Lord and committed it to him and he gave her the victory.

"The time for spring cleaning came around and she trusted the Lord. She had just got a new lamp hung up in the hall and a new carpet, and John came home carrying something on his shoulder. He did not know anything about the lamp; that was to be a surprise, and he came in swinging round and down came the lamp, and there was a clattering, a row and a breaking up of things, and he waited for another row. He expected it in the natural order of things. He waited and presently a quiet woman looked over the stairs and down at him and said, gently, 'Never mind, husband, it is all right; we can get another lamp,' and he looked up and said, 'Mary, what's the matter?' 'Oh, my dear,' she said, 'I have trusted Jesus to cure me of my temper.' 'Well,' said John, 'if he has cured you come right down and pray for me, for that's what I want. If there's enough in religion to cure your temper I want the same religion.' John was converted that day."

Sufficient Support

"I frequently get letters which show that the writers, generally unconsciously, have not confidence in God. This is strange, because every one who has ever tested it has found that God's assurance to Paul was not overstated: 'My grace is sufficient for thee.' I was staying some time ago in a beautiful valley among the Welsh mountains, where services were being held among the miners, when one of these letters came to me. When I had read it I laid it down and looked out of window at the smoky town, behind which rose a noble mountain towering up into the sky. The snow was falling and I watched it dancing before my window. I watched it until I thought I saw a little snowflake pause midway, and then I thought I heard it speak to that mighty mountain in front of me, and I thoug the little snowflake said to the mountai 'O mountain, I am only a little snowflak I want a place to rest. If I fall can y bear me?' And then I thought that th old mountain groaned out of its etern depths and said, 'Little snowflake, I ha my roots in God. Fall on me and se And then I penned my little parable my friend a hundred miles away a waited. And later a letter came in whi he said, 'Thank God! I am on t mountain, and the mountain bears.'"

The Sovereign Remedy

Preaching about the woman in Mark who touched Christ's garment and w healed, Gipsy Smith said: "A lady can to see me after one of my services a introduced herself as a seeking sinne She said: 'I have been seeking Christ f ten years.' 'Well,' I said, 'there is som thing wrong. It does not take a seekin sinner and a seeking Saviour ten years find one another. There is somethin wrong.' She replied: 'I have travele from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I ha been in every city of any size in the Unio and have heard the best preachers th America has raised and followed the be evangelists from city to city. I have neve missed attending revival meetings, wit the hope of finding what I want. I hav read books, but I have not been able t find what I want. I thought I woul have a talk with you.' I said: 'You ha made a mistake. Go straight to Jesu Don't seek another service, and neve read another book, never hear anothe sermon.'

"'Do you know,' inquired the lady 'what you are telling me?' 'Yes, sh that all off. We can only aggravate, w cannot help you. It is not us you want What you want is an interview with Jesus and you are looking for men and word and "isms." It is Christ you want woman, and five minutes interview wit the Son of God will end all your misery It is Jesus you want.'"

HESTER'S NEW HEART

An Easter Story by Margaret E. Sangster

HALF way up the hill she turned, set down her basket, and looked at the prospect that extended below h, the valley dotted with farms and the l e village with the forge, the school- h se and the church. Hester Raymond h known this view all her life. She had l ed it in childhood and in girlhood, and h cared for its beauty in her middle age a nuch as she had cared for anything l her in the world. She remembered w h sharp distinctness the spring day y rs ago when she had stopped caring w ether the world was beautiful, and had b un to look on neighbors with aversion a old acquaintances with indifference. A bolt had fallen out of the blue and c nged the landscape of her life, and s e then she had existed, but not lived.

Twenty-five years had passed since she h communed in the little church w h the white spire pointing heaven- w rd and making a centre in the pic- t e outspread before her eyes. One c not go to the communion table u ess one is at peace with one's fellow w rshipers.

In twenty-five years she had crossed r threshold in the village, nor taken p t in any festivity or social gathering. O hers went to weddings; she stayed a ay. Others attended funerals; she w s always absent. Others made n ghborly inquiries about the sick; s e never did. She simply remained, a er her parents' death, in her home n ar the top of the hill, occupied for n ne years in devotion to an elderly n ative, who was imbecile, and after h r decease continuing to abide alone a ong the trees and the birds, with h r cat and dog as her only compan- i s. She was a strong woman, and h r face, although time and hate to- g ther had graven it with hard lines, w s not unpleasing as she stood by her- s f taking deep breaths and surveying t e scene around and beneath her.

Something arrested her attention as s e gazed in a line a little to the West o the slope of the hill. Jacob Brew- s er's house stood there, and something u usual must have happened, for there w s a little group of people in the front y rd, and the old doctor's buggy had j st stopped. The doctor, notwith- s nding his seventy years, had keen e es and he saw Hester as he stepped f om the vehicle and walked up the p th to the front door. That the front d or should be open was in itself a pe- c liar circumstance, for the custom of t e countryside was to enter and leave h ost homes by the side or the back d or. Why Hester continued standing a d gazing she could hardly have ex- p ained. Had one asked her she c ould have said that the Jacob Brew- s ers were nothing to her and that t e did not care whether sorrow or joy, g od fortune or ill, was their portion. Y et deep in her subconsciousness she was a ware that she did feel the interest either o f a friend or an enemy in Jacob Brewster. H e had been the lover of her youth. In t e attic of her house, in a cedar chest, t ere lay the wedding finery, yellow with t me, that Hester had prepared in the far- o ff days when she was young and happy. S he remembered with what delight and p ide she had set the stitches in the bridal g own. Everything had been ready, the g uests invited, the table spread, the house t rimmed and garnished with flowers, and t he minister waiting for the ceremony, w hen the evil tidings came. There had b een the strange delay, then the whisper- i ng and wondering, then the letter brought by a boy on horseback, and delivered to Hester as the girl friends were putting flowers in her hair. Jacob Brewster, unfaithful to her, had married Mary Vernon in the next parish, that morning, and from that moment the love in Hester's soul had been a frozen stream.

The quarter of a century had passed, slow enough, swift enough, according to the emotions of those who were fulfilling their destiny on this earth, and year after year the spring had returned, weaving garments of beauty, setting free the icy brooks and bringing back the birds. Every year the Spring had chanted her witching song, "Rise up my love, my fair one, and come away; for, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the time of the singing of birds has come." To Hester that call had fallen on deaf ears. Somehow this spring it was a little different. She had thought more than usual about the flowers and the green leaves, the fragrance and the sweetness of Spring. To-day she thought the valley very beautiful, as the south wind stirred the willow branches by the river beneath the hill. It was almost Eastertide. Hester has never attended an Easter service in the twenty-five years. At other times she had sat in her old pew and seen across the aisle the Brewster's in theirs, but no word had ever been exchanged. The Brewster's had one child, a daughter of singular beauty. Occasionally Hester had glanced at her. It was not to be understood even by herself why she felt a sort of reluctant pride in the flowerlike loveliness of Mabel Brewster, but, although she disliked the rest of the world, she felt something like motherhood springing up like a living plant of goodness among evil weeds for this young girl.

She took up her basket and turned. As she did so a clear, flutelike whistle stopped her and she listened to hear in an instant a shout across the space dividing her from the Brewster's house. She set the basket down and looked across the field, to see that people were calling her, and the old doctor in the doorway was imperatively waving his hand. After a momentary hesitation, Hester obeyed the signal. She set her basket under a tree and walked with a rapid step in the direction of the Brewster home. When she reached the gate, the doctor met her. "Come in," he said. "Her mother is down with inflammatory rheumatism and cannot stir hand or foot. I am sending these neighbors away. I must have a nurse, nobody can do what I want as you can, Hester. You may save Mabel's life, and you can give her mother some relief." Hester looked at the doctor in amazement.

"When Hester reached the gate, the doctor met her"

"Is there no one else, Dr. Jessup?" she said.

"No one else," he answered firmly, "with a head and hands like yours. Yes, my child," he added, as if meeting an obstacle in her mind and turning it aside, "I remember, I know, but the past is past and hate cannot live forever. Whether you forgive or not, you cannot refuse what the Brewsters need at this crisis."

There were no trained nurses in that neighborhood at that time, and neighbors helped one another when sickness or calamity made assistance needful. Hester followed the doctor into the house. As she went through the large cheery kitchen she saw Jacob Brewster sitting by a table, his gray head buried in his clasped hands. He did not look up and she passed him by without speech, following the doctor upstairs. In the pretty south chamber was Mabel Brewster fighting for life in the clutch of pneumonia, and in the opposite room, as the doctor had said, was Mrs. Brewster, bound hand and foot with rheumatism. Dr. Jessup had no doubt of Hester's ability to cope with the situation. He had seen her nursing when her parents and her aged aunt had one by one been laid aside for long periods of suffering.

She took command at once. Sending the half-grown girl, who was Mrs. Brewster's maid-of-all-work, on an errand to her own home, she provided for its safety from fire, for the feeding of her cat and dog, and sent for some things for her own comfort. Mrs. Brewster was so ill that she could not protest against Hester's ministrations, and poor little Mabel, lying like a bruised lily, seemed a pawn on the chessboard, with Life and Death trying to possess her.

Hester never afterward knew how to tell the story of the week that followed, but at its end both patients were out of danger. During the week, she had sat at the table now and then with Jacob Brewster and had shared his vigils and relieved his anxiety, sometimes by a reassuring glance and sometimes by a word of cheer.

As she turned to leave the house, Mabel called her in a feeble voice, saying, "Don't go, or, if you must, come again." Hester bent to hear the next words. They were very few and very sweet. "I love you, Miss Hester. I love you." They made a glow in her heart, and the last of the ice that had been there so long suddenly melted; she stooped and kissed the girl's pure forehead.

At the door Jacob Brewster tried to utter his thanks, but he broke down and only a sob came from the heaving chest. Hester extended her hand and clasped his. The whole of the past in that handclasp was forgotten and forgiven.

Thrice blessed was the Easter Sunday, when with music triumphant and glorious, flowers white and fragrant, Christ's people gathered to praise him who is the Resurrection and the Life.

Hester Raymond entered the church that day in a mood of exaltation. Those who watched her observed in her face a light of love that transfigured and beautified it. She seemed years younger. The hard lines had vanished, a calm serenity invested her; she sang every hymn as if she meant the words and loved the Lord she praised, and she stayed when the bread and wine were passed and partook of the sacrament, as in other days. To her had been fulfilled the promise of the Lord that a new heart should be given her, and the new heart was a room wherein was a place for her Lord to dwell. Love had conquered hate as life forever conquers death.

The Empty Tomb

*A Sermon by Robert Stuart MacArthur, Preached in Calvary Baptist Church, New York

WITH garlands and hosannas we respond to the "All hail" of the risen and victorious Christ. We see him marching forth in triumph, with the keys of death and hades hanging from his girdle. Once more we chant the triumphant words of the Apostle Paul, in his great argument for Christ's resurrection: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

We can all sympathize with the practice of the Russian Church, whose members on Easter greet one another with the jubilant salutation, "The Lord is risen," and those addressed make the joyful response, "He is truly risen." The kiss of holy brotherhood seals this new bond of Christian faith and love. It is not surprising that, in the early history of the Church, many Christians and even pagans, on the night preceding Easter, bore into the churches waiving lights and there watched for the dawn of the resurrection morning. It is not surprising that cities were splendidly illuminated, and the vicinity of the churches was transfigured into a sea of fire. Neither is it surprising that many in the early Church expected that on Easter night Christ would come again, receiving his people unto himself, and then ascending his throne pass judgment on his foes.

We cannot actually accept the invitation of the angel and visit the place where the Lord lay. The hand of time, and the hands alike of superstition and infidelity have made it impossible for us to know with exactness the place of Christ's sepulchre. We can, however, in spirit visit that tomb to-day, and rejoice in the great lessons which it so emphatically teaches. As we stand beside this tomb, we are reminded that Jesus Christ was literally dead. No child of humanity was ever more truly dead than was Jesus Christ, the Lord of Life and the King of Glory. There is absolutely no room for doubt on this point.

We know that a Mosaic statute forbade that the corpses of criminals should remain unburied after sunset. As the day of Christ's crucifixion was nearing its close, permission was begged of Pilate to have the legs of the convicts broken, that thus their death should be hastened and their burial completed before sunset. Pilate granted this request. Soldiers, therefore, broke the legs of the robbers crucified with Jesus. When they came to him, however, they found that he was already dead. These soldiers were ignorant of the fact that a Scripture, 1500 years old, had said, "A bone of him shall not be broken."

"Very early in the morning they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun"

The speedy death of Christ caused great surprise to friends and foes alike. We recognize the influence of the sufferings which he had endured in hastening his death; but his death came more quickly than we could have expected, even after making due allowance for his sorrowful Passover, his sleepless night, his shameful arrest, the traitors's kiss, and the bloody sweat. It seems well-nigh certain that Dr. Stroud is entirely correct in his instructive treatise "On the Physical Cause of the Death of Christ." He maintains, by numerous and apparently conclusive arguments, that Christ's death was not due merely to his crucifixion, but that all its symptoms show that there was a literal rupture of the walls of the heart. In the strictest physiological, as well as in the deepest moral, sense Christ died of a broken heart. This conclusion is in harmony with ancient prophecy, as well as with modern medical science.

The soldiers, however, are determined to make assurance doubly sure; they, therefore, rudely thrust their great spear into his side, and forthwith there flowed blood and water. The beloved John years afterward said: "This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood." We thus have a striking fulfilment of the prophecy of Zechariah regarding the fountain that was opened to the house of David for sin and uncleanness. With the utmost literality, as well as with the tenderest spirituality, we can sing with Toplady:

Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee;
Let the water and the blood,
From thy riven side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure,
Cleanse me from its guilt and power.

We are thus absolutely certain that Jesus died; that his was not a case of syncope. Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, both of whom were members of the Sandedrin, assisted in removing his body from the cross and preparing it for burial. We can well imagine that woman's tender hand assisted in this sacred service. There is no bier on which the body may be borne, but the hands of love gently carry it to the new tomb awaiting its reception. In silence and sorrow it is laid on its clean, cold, rocky bed; the loving disciples reverently withdraw, and the great stone is rolled to the mouth of the sepulchre. Pilate furnished the guard, and these soldiers stretched a cord across the great stone and stamped the ends, where they were fastened, with the imperial seal. Was there ever so solemn a burial as this? There lies the Lord of Life and Glory, motionless, shrouded, entombed, while the Roman sentries, spear in hand, march to and fro before the tomb, preserving inviolate the seal of the mighty Cæsar.

Having accepted the invitation of the angel, and having come to the place where the Lord lay, we discover that the tomb is in a garden. This is a strange place in which to find a tomb; men do not usually adorn gardens with tombs. We are, however, distinctly informed that "in the place where he was crucified there was a garden, and in that garden a sepulchre." In that sepulchre the sacred body of the Holy Saviour was laid. We are silent with amazement as we reflect upon the environment of this tomb. There do not seem to have been other tombs in this garden; this tomb alone is observable. We have here a strange mingling of opposites: gardens stand for life, for beauty; but tombs for corruption, decay and death. Beautiful lessons, however, are taught by this commingling of apparent opposites. Every garden has its grave; this is true of the garden of the church, of the home, and of the heart. Every path in life, if pursued sufficiently long, leads us to a tomb. This is the sad side of life; this fact introduces the element of solemnity, and sometimes of tragedy, into every home and heart.

There is, however, another side to this sad thought: while it is true that in every garden there is a tomb, it is also true that around every tomb there may be a garden. This thought is inexpressibly sweet. The tomb of every true believer is in the garden of faith, of hope, of light, of love, of life. Around that tomb flowers of indescribable fragrance and unspeakable beauty bloom. Around that tomb birds of paradise sing their sweetest song, and angels of heaven sit, filling the tomb and the garden with the splendor of their presence, and making the garden of the tomb prophetic of the paradise of God. Upon the stone, rolled to the mouth of the sepulchre of every believer, we may engrave the triumphant words of the Apostle Paul, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." The grave is now beautiful, because in it once lay Jesus Christ. He has bed it of its terrors; he has sweetened it with the fumes of paradise; he has illumined it with the light heaven. Standing beside the grave, we can now r the voice from heaven saying, "Blessed are the d who die in the Lord." Christ's sepulchre was in human garden, and that sepulchre transformed that rden into God's Acre.

A Costly Tomb

It is observable, as we stand beside this tomb, that it s a beautiful and costly tomb. This fact greatly prises us, when we remember that Jesus said, with finite sadness, "The foxes have holes, and the birds the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not here to lay his head." How came it to pass that this useless, homeless, and often friendless man was buried a costly tomb? The question is full of interest, and answer abounds in instruction. Seven hundred ars before his death Isaiah, the evangelical prophet, retold that death and this burial. His words are ofoundly significant: "He made his grave with the icked and with the rich in his death." Nothing uld be more unlikely than that this ancient prophecy uld be fulfilled. Jesus died on the cross as a felon. t the time of his death, Judea was a Roman province. e would expect that the Roman criminal code would evail, and that his body would remain on the cross ntil it was consumed by ravenous creatures or wasted y decomposition. If this custom had prevailed, the dy of Jesus would never have received burial. Obrve how marvelously the ancient prophecy came to be lfilled. Moses ordained that the corpses of criminals ould be buried on the day of their execution; this Mosaic requirement the Roman Government permitted prevail in the case of Jesus.

It is to be observed, also, that the Jews in this special ase would naturally desire that the body of Jesus ould receive a shameful burial. But the day after the rucifixion was the Jewish Sabbath, and this particular abbath was the great Passover Sabbath, one of the ost sacred days of the Hebrew year. It thus came to ass that the Jews desired to hasten the ignominious urial before sunset, because at that hour their Sabbath egan. Christ's death did not take place until three o'clock in the afternoon; the time, therefore, was exremely limited before the hour of sunset. We see on what a minute pivot the fulfilment of prophecy, uttered undreds of years before, was delicately balanced. When the soldiers came to hasten the death of Jesus by breaking his legs, as we have already seen, they found that Jesus was even then dead. The further proof of his death was found by the thrust of the spear and the flowing forth of blood and water. Jesus is, therefore, actually dead.

A Rich Man's Mausoleum

Shall he not now be placed in a malefactor's grave? This result seemed almost inevitable. Doubtless, his enemies were even then preparing to take down his body and to bury it with the robbers with whom he had been crucified. This burial would have utterly contradicted the ancient prophecy of Isaiah. Then came the visit of Joseph and Nicodemus; then was granted their request by Pilate; then came the tender burial of Jesus by his loving friends, who placed him in Joseph's new and costly tomb. Suppose that Joseph had not made this request of Pilate; suppose that Pilate had not granted this request of Joseph; suppose that either the request or the consent of Pilate had been a few minutes later. The ancient prophecy would not then have been fulfilled, and Jesus would have been buried in the grave of a criminal.

How marvelous are these events in the ordering of God's providence! It thus came to pass that God's crucified and beloved Son, notwithstanding the designs of his foes, received most honorable burial. Indeed, his honors began the moment he died, the sacrifice for sin. If he is to be buried, costly spices shall enwrap him with his shroud; if he is to be buried, he shall be laid in the costly tomb of the honorable Joseph. When he bowed his head in death, he paid the last debt due to the justice of God, as the vicarious sacrifice for human guilt. Immediately his honors began, and continued until he lay in august repose in his superb tomb. He, who was the Rock of Ages, lay in the tomb of rock until he came forth in triumph in his resurrection. In the wonderful description given by the Apostle Paul, in the second chapter of Philippians, of the humiliation of Christ, we follow that humiliation from Christ's conscious equality with God, as it comes down step by step, until we see Christ obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. With that death, Christ's humiliation reached its lowest point. Immediately his glorious ascent began. We follow him upward, as God highly exalted him, until we see him enthroned, with the name that is above every name, and at that name all things in heaven and earth and under the earth bow in perfect submission. Fitting, then, was it that Christ's tomb should be beautiful, costly and honorable in the highest possible degree.

An Orderly Tomb

We observe that the grave clothes, with which Joseph and Nicodemus had swathed the body, were carefully wrapped up, and not lying in a disorderly heap. The napkin, which Mary herself may have helped to bind around the thorn-marked brow, was folded in a place by itself. Who folded these cerements of the tomb? Was this a work of love by the hands of angels? It is more likely that the hands of Jesus himself arranged these garments. Rising in glory and majesty, he would not leave the tomb in disorder. If the tomb had been rifled by his foes, the grave clothes would not have been carefully adjusted by them in their necessary haste. If his friends had carried away the body to be buried elsewhere, they would have required the grave clothes for that burial. It is certain that Christ slept until the appointed hour dawned, and then rose, in divine dignity and sublime majesty, and went forth as conqueror of death and the grave. He was never again to need the garments of the dead. With the utmost deliberation he left the tomb.

The effect of this orderly grave on the beloved John was most marked: "He saw, and believed." What did he believe? Simply that the tomb was empty? That fact was sufficiently obvious; it needed no additional certification. He believed that Jesus was risen from the dead. His nature, quieter and deeper than that of the Apostle Peter, the more readily laid hold of this sublime truth. While Peter, in his impulsiveness, was the first to enter the tomb, John, in his thoughtfulness, was the first to believe in the resurrection. He was really the first person in the whole world fully to believe in this glorious truth. His faith was stronger than that of Peter, and his loving nature enabled him to lay hold of this sublime truth with the utmost tenacity and simplicity of faith. We, too, may, with the Apostle John, behold this orderly tomb, and see and believe.

The Tomb Empty

It is especially to be emphasized that it is an empty tomb. We saw the Roman soldiers marching with their spears to and fro to preserve Cæsar's seal. The solemn hours pass; perhaps the morning is now dawning. Behold an angel of the Lord, with appearance like lightning and raiment white as snow, rolls away the stone and seats himself thereon. No mortal actually saw Christ in the act of rising; God performs his divinest things in silence and beyond the sight of men. Soon the women approach the tomb; they learn from the angels that Jesus is not there but is risen, and they hear the angelic invitation, "Come, see the place where the Lord lay." We have accepted that invitation; we have studied some of the characteristics of that tomb; now we are especially rejoiced to find that it is empty. We can say with Phillips Brooks:

> Tomb, thou shalt not hold Him longer;
> Death is strong, but Life is stronger;
> Stronger than the dark, the light;
> Stronger than the wrong, the right;
> Faith and Hope triumphant say
> Christ will rise on Easter Day.

In the empty grave of Jesus, the cornerstone of the Christian church is laid. The resurrection of Jesus, changing the figure, is the keystone of the arch of divine revelation. This empty grave gives us assurance that Christ's work of redemption was completed. Not alone on Pilate's cross, but in Joseph's tomb did that work receive its divine certification as to its completion and acceptance. When Jesus Christ came forth in triumph from the grave, angels, men and devils were taught that his work was finished, and that his triumph was complete. He had himself staked all on his resurrection. He had affirmed that he had power to lay down his life and to take it again. In the most solemn manner did his resurrection ratify that affirmation, and fulfil this prophecy. It gives uniqueness to the Christian religion. There are founders of other religions. Confucius, Zoroaster, Mohammed. These founders all died, but did ever one of them rise from the dead? Christianity stands alone in that respect among the religions of the race. The resurrection is the absolutely unique fact of Christianity; the resurrection is the majestic assurance of the reality of our Christian faith and hope. The resurrection involved the death, the death implied the life, and the life necessitated the birth. It thus comes to pass that Joseph's empty tomb is in unique harmony with Bethlehem's holy manger.

The Pledge of Life

The resurrection of Christ assures us that we now have a living Saviour; the permanently dead Saviour is unwelcome in art, and utterly undesirable and untruthful in religion. The Roman Church has erred in exalting the dead Christ at the expense of the living Christ. We desire no Pieta, no statue of the dead Christ, with the Virgin, or sorrowing woman, or angels. We prefer to hear the angels say, "He is not here, for he is risen." We need the atoning work of Christ's historic death; but we need, also, the sanctifying influence of Christ's risen and glorified life. We need more than a divine statue; we must have the inspiration of a risen, exalted and living Christ as Friend and Saviour. Ours is not the Church of the Entombment; ours is the Church of the Resurrection. Ours is not the Church alone of the Atoning Death; ours is also the Church of the Heavenly Life. To-day we hail the divine Man, who marches forth in exultant might, as the firstborn from the dead. To-day we utter no Miserere for an embalmed Galilean; but we sing a Te Deum for the risen, enthroned and crowned Immanuel.

We also have a personal interest in this glorious resurrection. We see that the Apostles made the resurrection one of the important themes of their preaching, the Apostle Paul declaring that "if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." The resurrection is the crowning miracle of Christianity to-day. If this event be true, then all other facts in Christ's life are credible, for no fact can be greater than his resurrection from the dead. In that resurrection, we have a prophecy of our own victory over death and the grave. Death has been the grim and inexorable tyrant, whom tears never softened and wealth never bribed.

Only two, of the many millions of humanity, in the olden time passed into the spirit world without tasting death. But in the case both of Enoch and Elijah, death was not really mastered, because they were withdrawn from the conflict before they grappled with this fierce foe. Christ alone entered the dreary prison-house of death's domain, and came forth in triumph, leading death captive in his train. When he arose on that first Easter morning, he bade adieu to the grave forevermore. Empty as was Joseph's tomb, so empty on some glad Easter morning shall be the tombs of the world. We cannot fully now ask with the Apostle Paul: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" But that victory, in all its blessed fulness, awaits us, when the great day of resurrection shall come. Then shall we be able to say, joining with the triumphal songs of saints and seraphs, angels and archangels: "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

TROY SWEPT BY A REVIVAL

"SHOWERS of blessing" have visited Troy, N. Y. during the three weeks' revival just closed. Dr. W. E. Biederwolf was leader of the movement, the success of which was wholly due under God to his untiring effort and unusual executive ability. Forty thousand of the eighty thousand population of Troy are engaged in the factories making collars and cuffs. The city was divided into four sections, where, simultaneously, the great movement was carried on. The central section was under the control of Dr. W. E. Biederwolf and his associates, Homer Rodeheaver, soloist, and Howard E. Taylor, personal work director; the northern section by Geo. G. Mayh, of Scranton, with Miss Ten Eyck as soloist; the north central section by James B. Ely, with Mr. A. B. McCrea as chorister and Miss Hildebrand as soloist. Thomas Needham had charge of the southern section. Some five or six thousand were daily brought under Gospel influence.

The First Baptist Church was opened to accommodate the overflow, and a very enthusiastic noonday "Good Cheer" meeting for busy people was daily held in Harmony Hall. This hall was opened for evening services also.

Bradford Williams was greatly blessed in his street and factory work. At one factory alone, Cluett & Peabody's, some 1,500 to 2,000 attended the noon meeting. A feature of the movement was the midnight parade from State Street Church to Proctor's Theatre, some 2,000 people, men and women, marching, and blending their voices in the "Glory Song."

Another feature was the children's parade of 2,000 or more little ones, led by Mr. Rodeheaver. The Troy band headed the procession, and after marching through the principal streets, gathered at the State Street Church, where Dr. Biederwolf made the address, the children uniting their voices in the songs of victory.

The Trojans were most responsive, spending much time in earnest petition and working zealously that the blessing might be justly claimed.

Rhodesian Lion, Killed by a Native

ON "THE CAPE TO CAIRO" RAILROAD

By REV. JOHN M. SPRINGER

ONCE more we are on the trail and have landed for the present at Broken Hill, which is as far as the famous "Cape to Cairo" line has been laid from the South, which is 2,014 miles north of Cape Town and 375 miles northeast of the Victoria Falls. It is expected that the construction will go ahead as soon as the rains are over, and the work of continuing the line will proceed without interruption until it reaches Kanshanshe, which is a part of the great Tanganyika Concession, lying in Rhodesia, but close to the border of the Congo Free State, where the greater part of the Concession is.

This Tanganyika Concession is a piece of ground of 60,000 square miles, and is said to be the richest in mineral deposits, especially copper, in the world. It has been predicted that inside of ten years it will have a city larger than Johannesburg and be the greatest mining center in the world. At present the mines there are only being developed on a small scale, just to see what there is, for there can be no big extension until the railway gets there and affords an outlet for the ore. Two railroads are now pushing towards it with all the haste that funds will allow. This one will likely be the first, as there is only about 400 miles between Broken Hill and Katanga Kambove, the headquarters of the Concession.

The railway from the West Coast running from Lobito Bay through Benguella has already reached Bihe, having climbed on to the plateau known as the Great Trans-African Divide. It is said that the railroad had to make an ascent of 5,000 feet in the first 200 miles. This leaves about 800 miles more to be completed on the Lobito Bay Railroad, before reaching the Tanganyika Concession. So it will, of necessity, be two years at least before these mines can have a proper outlet for the ore, and another year or two before they will be under full swing.

These may seem dry and uninteresting facts, but they mean much to the whole world and a great deal more to Africa. To the Church, they mean that the time has come for the disciples of Christ to unite in one mighty effort to do their duty and enter the doors which will be unlocked by the golden key. It means that many of the now wild tribes, who have steadfastly resisted the enslaving Portuguese and the tyrant Leopold, will find that English money will bring them safety and they will be leaving their kraals and going to these mining centres to work. Here they will readily add all our Occidental vices to their own, and in spite of the assurance that many of these white men give us of the beautiful character of the "raw native" before he is spoiled by the teaching of the missionary, he has vices enough of his own. These mining centres are most important fields for mission work, though naturally less satisfactory than station work.

The missionary who settles down on a station with a fair-sized community around him, is sure of building up a permanent school and church and, as it were, reaping his own harvest in due time. The missionary who does mine compound work has an ever-shifting congregation. He has his night school, where the untaught are instructed in the art of reading and writing, and an apt pupil will be ready to begin reading in the New Testament before six months are over. The awakening may come, the man may be converted and then away he goes and is lost to sight for years, and possibly the missionary never hears of him again. Many of the men are only at work for one month or so, while others will stay a year. Those who get to know a little English, or some dialect which the missionary knows, will be sure to write; but the great mass come and go, come and go, and it often seems to the missionary as if he were never making any headway. But hard as it is, I am not alone in the conviction that no other form of mission work exceeds it in importance.

In confirmation of this, the Rev. George Lowe, now agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society at Johannesburg, told me this incident: Many years ago, two natives went down, hundreds of miles from the Blawberg Mountains, to work at Port Elizabeth. They were there about two years, during which time they attended the Wesleyan night school, professed conversion, were baptized and received into church membership. When the time came for them to return to their families, they asked the missionary to send them a teacher and a missionary for their people. He told them that he could not send anyone at that time, but exhorted them to be faithful witnesses, to read their Bibles (Zulu Bibles, I believe) and to live so as to teach their own people the truth, as they had learned it, in Christ Jusus.

Twenty-five years passed by and at last Brother Lowe was sent up to those lonely and unexplored mountains. As he drew near one kraal, he saw the people making a great demonstration, and was rather uncertain for a time whether it meant peace or war. But on making inquiry of his interpreter, he learned that the excitement was caused by the people coming out in a procession to meet the teacher, led by these two men, who were now rejoicing in the answer to their prayers. For twenty-five years they had been praying and expecting the promised missionary, and now he had come. He said that he found these men had held regular services during all these years, had taught many of the children to read, and they had observed and kept the Sabbath. He found the people and the town exceptionally clean and the women neatly clothed. These two men had taken the choicest care of their Bibles; but one of them was worn to tatters, and the owner came up to him with it tied up in a piece of cloth and asked if he might have another. Not that he wanted to give that one up—O no! He did not wish to part with that dear companion of more than a quarter of a century; but it was so worn that he could not see so well to read it and he would like a new one. And yet some say that the native is entirely devoid of sentiment and affection.

It is needless to say that he got his new Bible, and in a larger print, better suited to the eyes which had grown old watching for the missionary, whom his faith never doubted would come.

There is another need for the compound work—that is, to help the men who come from districts already evangelized or reached by the missionary. Few white men are strong enough to resist the strong tide of sin which is to be found in most pioneer mining camps, and it is not to be expected that the half-civilized natives, whose knowledge of the Gospel is at best superficial, and whose Christianity, however genuine, is but in its infancy, will be able to live better than their white brothers. In most of the cases we have found here, there are almost no baptized natives nor many who can read and write. There are many, though, who have heard the Gospel preached long ago, but, as they say, "We have had no one to remind us and we have forgotten."

So we are here, but not to remain many months. We are on our way home and are going through Northwestern Rhodesia, north to the Tanganyika Concession and westward to Angola, on "a tour of observation." These are our instructions; but long before they came we had the divine "Go!" and we went forth like one of old, "not knowing whither he went." The bishop recognized the divine leading and confirmed it.

This whole move is largely on faith, and when we received the contribution of $51 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we praised God and took courage. It will go toward providing us with an interpreter and helper on the whole journey. We brought with us Benjamin, a Christian boy from old Umtali, who has been a great help to us so far, and will be increasingly so as we get farther inland, and perhaps among hostile tribes.

As I said, we expect to stay here until June or July, when the rains will be over and the flooded swamps at the north dried up. Then we hope to leave for the north and go from the Tanganyika Concession west to Malange, our most easterly inland mission station in Angola. From there we wish to go to St. Paul de Loanda and take ship for England. We have been in Africa now nearly six years, and in another year will be ready for our furlough. We hope to see the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor before next Christmas, if that be our Father's will.

Worked His Way Through

I WAS born in Rockingham County, near Madison, N. C., about thirty years ago. In early life I could not attend the public schools, as I was compelled to work to help support my mother and two younger sisters. When I was about fifteen I began taking lessons at night. This was my first start in books. After two years of night school, by rigid economy I was able to go to the public school for awhile. Circumstances, however, seemed against me, so I gave up school and went to work again. About September 10, 1897, I chanced to meet, at a store in our village, Prof. W. B. Crittenden, and was induced to enter the Slater Industrial School, at Winston-Salem, N. C.

"We are putting up a new building at the school," said the Professor, "and I will confer with President Atkins and see what can be done."

On September 20, 1897, I reached the Slater School. I was ordered to report to Mr. J. H. Michael, instructor in carpentry. He assigned me work on Lamson Hall, the building then in construction. I worked at the carpenter's trade until Christmas. At the close of the holidays I entered school, continuing through the months of January, February, and part of March. As the new hall was needed for commencement, I began to work again. During the summer of 1898 I remained in the employ of the school, doing whatever came to hand. In the fall I had sufficient money to my credit to enter the classes and remain until the close. During the vacation of 1899 I remained again at the school, working at my trade. In 1900, the school having contracted to build the new colored hospital, I was asked if I could build it. I said I would undertake it. This was in the fall of 1901. I had as helpers all the boys in the school who had taken carpentry, and we put up the building, finishing it in the spring of 1902. In the following fall I took up my studies again, graduating in 1904.

I cannot say too much for what Slater has done for me, from the time I entered her doors in 1897 until I left, 1904. I am still doing carpentry work, and am making a living out of it, being the senior member of the leading colored contracting and building firm of Winston-Salem, N. C.

JOHN N. SMITH, Class 1904.

The foregoing is one of many similar instances in which the Slater Industrial School, Winston-Salem, N.C., is helping poor colored students to get a trade and an education. It is one of the worthiest institutions of its kind in this country, and deserving of all encouragement and support. Any reader who is interested in its work can learn full details concerning it, by addressing J. P. Rawley, 57 Broadway, New York.

THE HEALTH OF OUR YOUNG GIRLS

By KATE UPSON CLARK

TWO well-known singing teachers have recently testified that their girl pupils are ailing most of the time. Lessons are skipped, progress is impeded, voices are injured by such indisposi-n, life is demoralized generally. One of these hers said that at least half of his pupils were under doctor's care all of the time.

And then I am blamed for not developing their es properly," he complained. "Sick girls cannot n to sing, even if they could keep up their lessons ularly."

young college girl has just brought to New York Easter season, the news that a large proportion of classmates are in either the hospital or their own ms under the care of physicians. There is no epi-ic in the institution. The girls are just "laid up" that ordinary ailment generally called grippe.

Of course they are sick," commented the girl, non-antly. "Girls are always sick. They can't stand strain of college life like boys. It isn't to be ex-ed."

emarks of that sort are common. It seems as ugh a large class of people took it for granted that nen are naturally invalids, which sounds almost as ey accused their Maker of having done his work ly.

But there is no doubt that our girls do not begin to e as much of health and strength as our boys do, as our boys would have if they would let tobacco ne. When the girls begin to adopt cigarettes also race will come to a quick end. As there is really logical reason why the girls should not smoke if the s are allowed to, the end may be nearer than we e dreamed (and that would be perhaps as good a position as could be made of any species which is, ough its own folly, diseased and is determined to ain so)!

But we are persuaded better things of humanity. erently we believe that the Creator meant girls and nen to be strong, bright, merry and useful, to possess lth and all the glories and blessings which go with it. n the first place, the singing teachers and the college probably took no account of the fact that most of the ailing maidens were wearing lingerie waists, coming down to breakfast in them on cold mornings; sitting in in them through draughty lectures, concerts, plays; their bare necks and shoulders showing through the dainty embroideries, and their sleeves short. If our boys had been arrayed as foolishly they, too, would have had "all kinds of grippe."

Perhaps boys and girls are equally subjected to the strain of late hours, indigestible food, wet feet and constant excitement. Quiet evenings at home are rare for either girls or boys over seventeen. Even in our colleges for girls there is a continual succession of class and society and general entertainments, which, coupled with their study, keep the nerves of the student in a steady quiver (a paradox, but true) from one week's end to another.

The girls, too, have almost or quite as much outdoor exercise as boys do in these days. In fact, the only sanitary condition in which boys have the advantage would seem to be in this matter of clothing. The costume of men is not entirely hygienic. It certainly is not artistic—but it is far and away more comfortable and more conducive to health than that of girls and women.

There is something so vulgar and degrading in the mere appearance of the present system of tight belts and girdles that, without regard to its unhealthfulness, one can hardly speak of it calmly. At a time of life when their whole system is unsettled, when they need every atom of room and every atom of strength, girls are forced into close-fitting waists stiffened with steel and whalebone. Their tender, undeveloped bodies are thus often bruised and displaced. At the very best they are greatly hampered in their daily work. One distinguished New York physician has said that her ante-rooms are sought every day by young girls of good family and high social position who are suffering from the most horrible displacements.

"What causes them?"

"This outrageous system of dress."

"How are we ever going to change it?"

"I don't see any way. The only thing I can think of is to have some society with standing and authority—if there is such a society—call a meeting and appoint a high committee of artists and doctors, who shall design a healthful and artistic and convenient costume. Even if women would not consent to wear it, surely it might somehow be introduced into our schools for girls. It should consist of a union suit of underclothing for the cooler months. Over that, if desired, a combination suit of waist and drawers might be worn. Then one or two skirts might be hung upon suspenders, or a skeleton waist-frame. Any number of pretty 'empire' patterns are available for the outside dress. A 'princesse' foundation, loose and comfortable, might be covered with any sort of material, draped upon it in any way that is becoming to the individual. Or little coats, eton jackets, or boleros, or whatever you choose to call them, can be made to go with any skirt, the latter depending upon the shoulders for support. A mother of ingenuity can certainly devise, even if obliged to conform to the present unfavorable fashions, a pretty costume for her girl which will give her full freedom of body. A slender girl should never have any trouble about it. For one inclined to stoutness the task is more difficult."

Thin shoes are responsible for many ailments of girlhood. Tight shoes for many more. A long-continued course of tight shoes is enough to give even a strong person nervous prostration. The heavy hat is another source of ill-health among girls. The craze for becoming "picture hats," some of them ridiculously large and cruelly heavy, must be modified if our girls are to keep well.

Given a generous and healthful diet, plenty of outdoor exercise, nine hours of quiet sleep in each twenty-four, pleasant occupation, and, perhaps most important of all, loose and comfortable clothing, and our girls would be able to bear, without illness, all of the noble and pressing duties which a wise Providence has appointed for the modern maiden, in her preparation for the important responsibilities of free and happy American womanhood.

Mrs. Sage's $10,000,000 Gift for Benevolence

S was foreshadowed some time ago, Mrs. Russell Sage has taken the first great step toward utilizing her vast fortune in the furtherance of philanthropy and ial betterment. On Tuesday, March 12, a bill was introduced in the New York te Assembly at Albany, incorporating the Sage Foundation, an organization ich is to be managed by well known philanthropists of both sexes, l which will have the income of a fund of $10,000,000 to draw n for its maintenance and for carrying out such plans as meet its roval in the direction of improving the condition and surround-s of the poor throughout the United States.

Mrs. Sage makes this personal explanation of her purpose in ablishing the "Sage Foundation":

"Its object is the improvement of social and living conditions in United States. The means to that end will include research, olication, education, the establishment and maintenance of char-ble and beneficial activities, agencies and institutions, and the l of any such activities, agencies and institutions already estab-ed.

"It will be within the scope of such a Foundation to investigate d study the causes of adverse social conditions, including igno-ce, poverty and vice; to suggest how these conditions can be nedied or ameliorated, and to put in operation any appropriate ans to that end.

"It will also be within its scope to establish any new agency nec-ary to carry out any of its conclusions and equally to contribute the resources of any existing agencies which are doing efficient d satisfactory work, just as the present General Education Fund, ganized to promote higher education, is aiding existing colleges d universities.

"While its scope is broad, it should preferably not undertake to do within that scope what is now being done or is likely to be effectively done by other individuals or by other agencies with less resources. It will be its aim to take up the larger and more difficult problems, and to take them up so far as possible in such a manner as to secure co-operation and aid in their solution. In some instances, it may wisely initiate movements with the expectation of having them maintain themselves unaided after once being started. In other instances it may start movements with the expectation of carrying them on itself. Income only will be used for its charitable purpose, because the Foundation is to be permanent and its action continuous. It may, however, make investments for social betterment, which themselves produce income.

Mrs. Russell Sage

"The Foundation will be national in its scope and in its activities."

In the articles of incorporation, the following persons are named as trustees: Robert W. De Forest, Chairman, New York State Tenement Commission; Cleveland P. Dodge, prominent in many philanthropic and Christian enterprises; Daniel C. Gilman, ex-College President and first President of the Carnegie Institute; John H. Glenn, associated with many notable charities; Helen M. Gould, well known throughout the land for her noble benefactions; Mrs. William B. Rice, President New York State Charities Aid Association, and Miss Louisa L. Schuyler, the founder of the New York State Charities Aid Association. Concerning her trustees, Mrs. Sage writes:

"I have sought to select men and women who are familiar with social problems, and who can bring to their solution not only zeal and interest, but experience and judgment." She added that she had the utmost confidence in the ability and judgment of the ladies and gentlemen who composed the Board, and believed they would fulfil all expectations.

The Glorious Day

EASTER is the Emancipation Anniversary of the Christian world—the one day of all the year, next to the Advent, that is the most glorious and worthy of signal remembrance. It brings with it a new inspiration of faith in God and of perfect assurance in his love for the children of men.

Every swelling bud and sprouting leaf reminds us that the life which conquers death in nature's realm has its parallel in the Resurrection—that great central fact of Christianity—in which we have the assurance of our own spiritual revivification. Christ in us becomes the vitalizing force which lifts us from the darkness of sin and death unto light and life everlasting.

This old world of ours needs more Easter cheer. It needs to realize that the risen Christ and the empty tomb have for the whole race a grander and higher significance than any other event since time began. It needs to feel that the defeat of King Death and the triumph of King Jesus over the grave, have thrown open the gates of life and happiness to all who will enter therein. It needs to grasp the imperishable truth that, when the Son of God burst the bars of death and the grave, he revealed the way of life eternal to all who accept him and follow in his footsteps. His resurrection was the Divine pledge of our own, and the soul that rests upon him has already risen from the deadness of sin and begun the life everlasting. For such, the grave is not an abiding-place, but the vestibule of the greater and nobler life beyond.

Therefore, at this joyous Easter time, when all nature is rejoicing, let our own hearts join in the songs of praise and gladness. Around us, we see the woods adorning themselves with living green, and the air is resonant with the song of birds. Over all the earth, wherever the name of Jesus is known, it is the glad emancipation time:

'Tis the festival of all creation:
Christ hath risen, who gave creation birth.

A Difficult Task

ONE of the penalties of a reputation for accomplishing difficult tasks, is that of being invited, and even urged, to undertake other work. President Roosevelt is finding this out. His ability and tact are now recognized the world over, and wherever there is a stupendous obstacle to be overcome, the thought is apt to arise in men's minds that if the President were to undertake it the thing would be done. So general is this confidence that he might be overworked, if his own good sense did not limit the tasks he undertakes to those legitimately belonging to his office. But this fact does not prevent solicitations assailing him and if the present tendency continues, we may hear some day of a crank with unlimited faith in his power applying to him to make water run up-hill.

Not quite so difficult a task, but one which must have puzzled the President, was that submitted to him recently by a number of estimable gentlemen from New York. These gentlemen are concerned, and not without good reason, over the decline of religious interest among certain classes in their own city. They point out that during the past six years, while the Jews have increased the number of their synagogues by thirteen and the Roman Catholics have added six to their churches, the Protestant churches are now three less than they were. They say that the number of these edifices is utterly disproportionate to the population. That may be conceded, but it is not precisely the question involved. It would be more to the purpose to show that they are disproportionate to the requirements of the population. There is little doubt that if the churches already existing were overcrowded more would speedily be built.

Precisely what Mr. Roosevelt was expected to do to remedy the sad situation is not stated in the dispatch describing the conference. It may have been explained to him, and the explanation would be interesting. Whatever it was, the President listened courteously and promised to aid them "in every way possible." With all respect to him and full recognition of his skill and energy, we have not much hope of perceptible results. The difficulty is outside his bailiwick. True religion was never yet promoted by official patronage or by legislation. It must come from within. The spectacle now being presented in Brooklyn, of the largest churches in the city being crowded to the doors every afternoon and evening to listen to an untutored man preaching the simple Gospel of salvation through Christ, teaches a lesson much more to the point. Gipsy Smith does not preach newfangled theories, nor esoteric doctrines, Higher Criticism and the rest, but the old-fashioned remedy for sin and the way by which men may become in the true sense children of God, and as in the case of Spurgeon and Moody men flock to hear such preaching. If such doctrines were preached plainly and earnestly in our churches, there would be no need to invoke the aid of the President of the United States.

Mrs. Sage's Gift

HOPE at last is promised for the poor and the unfortunate in the organization outlined on another page of this journal. Mrs. Sage is planning to go to the source of social trouble and has supplied an enormous sum to render the knowledge thus acquired practically useful. If an epidemic of typhoid breaks out in a community, we applaud the philanthropist who sends out physicians and nurses to relieve and cure the sufferers. He deserves all the praise we can give him, because he is attending to the present need and is doing the work that is the most urgent. But his work needs to be followed by another, which searches for the cause of the epidemic and by closing some sewer, or purifying some food supply, prevents another visitation of the dread disease. The misery of our cities is a similar condition; its woes are worse even than typhoid. Mrs. Sage proposes to deal with them by giving aid to societies that are engaged in the relief of the sufferers, and by establishing a new organization which shall study the causes and devise plans for removing them.

Intelligent philanthropists will hail this project as an augury of better times. Mrs. Sage has endowed it munificently. The vast sum of ten million dollars is to be invested and the income applied to the work. If poverty and misery are in any degree remediable, as we believe they are, an organization so endowed should be able to discover the fact and do much to set a remedy in operation. The man who needs work in order to maintain himself and his family, should be brought in contact with the work that is needing the man. The wretched homes in which the poor are compelled to live in order to be near their work, may now be transformed into sanitary and salubrious quarters and the causes that cooperate in making evil still greater may be held up to public scorn until they are extirpated. There is an enormous amount of work on these and similar lines waiting to be done and we are devoutly thankful that philanthropists able and eager to do it will now, through Mrs. Sage's generosity, be armed with the means of engaging in the service.

Dowie

WITH the passing away of John Alexander Dowie, the peculiar sect which he founded will inevitably disintegrate. At no time has there been any valid reason for its separate existence as a religious division of the great Christian Church, and it has been kept intact solely by the strong and unique personality of its founder and leader.

There are many thousands of good men and women in "Zion" who will now be glad of the opportunity to return to the parent fold and who will be welcomed there. In all the essentials, their belief has been practically unchanged. Whatever eccentricities may have been indulged by their leader—due no doubt in large part to the bodily and mental infirmities of his later years—his people have held steadfastly to what they believed to be the truth of the Gospel, and have exemplified that belief in sober, temperate, God-fearing lives.

Dowie's death was a tragedy, sad and pitiful beyond words to express. The closing scenes emphasized very clearly the fact that had long been apparent: that physical weakness, combined with the continued struggle of the last few years, with its discords and disappointments, had impaired both mind and body. Had Dowie's public career closed six years ago, when his power and influence were at the maximum, he would have been remembered by thousands of sincere and honest people as a great spiritual leader.

As it is, they will judge him kindly and will generously cover up his weaknesses and forget all his failures and follies for the sake of the good he did in earlier years, before age brought sickness and hallucinations. They will recall the zeal and energy with which he labored in founding and establishing one of the most extraordinary moral, social and industrial experiments of our day which, now that the master-hand is gone, seems destined to fall to pieces.

Among the Workers

—A SPECIAL APPEAL was made to young people in the recent meetings of Rev. E. E. Davidson at Bangor, Me.

—A UNION EVANGELISTIC series of meetings has just closed in Oneida, Ill., conducted by Rev. J. L. Meads and Rev. Ed. Meads of Jamesville, Wis. One hundred and fifteen persons confessed Christ.

—EVANGELIST C. H. YATMAN has just closed a series of union evangelistic meetings at Massilon, O., which have been marked by phenomenal religious interest and many open professions of conversion.

—THE COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED, appointed as the representatives of the evangelistic churches of New York, has prosecuted its work for two years, and is greatly encouraged by the outlook. This year it hopes to have at least ten tents, properly manned and equipped, in addition to other places of meeting. Fifty thousand dollars is needed for the work during the coming summer.

—THE PAST FOUR weeks have witnessed one of the greatest spiritual awakenings Oberlin has ever experienced. The churches of the city united in one strong body under the leadership of Rev. Milford H. Lyon, of Wheaton, Ill. Meetings have been held in a large tabernacle seating nearly 3,000. About 700, including many students and also many business men of the city, have taken a definite stand for Christ.

—DR. ALICE CONDICT writes from Ludhiana, Punjab, India: "You will be pleased to hear that the static electrical machine (contributed by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers) is a wonderful blessing. It is the only static electrical machine in all India. The English Government has decided to remove all the lepers from Ludhiana. The natives have named the machine. 'The Burrah Rajah' (The Big King'). Already the news has gone to distant parts of India about the cures, and strangers have come from a distance to get the benefit of 'The Burrah Rajah.' We need $1,000 to build rooms for these distant comers."

The Worst of Modern Famines

THE Washington correspondent of the Chicago Evening Post says that officials of the War and State Departments are accustomed to tales of suffering from battlefields and from the stricken districts of faraway countries, but they admit that the stories from China are much more dreadful than those which have come through official channels from stricken lands in the past. The tales of horror, as they come to Washington and to the missionary societies, would be past belief were they not well supported by proof.

The Department of State (says the New Haven Register), has in its files stories of suffering which make one feel that something must be radically wrong with the universe because such things are allowed to come to pass. Money—mere money—will save the lives of human beings, but money is not forthcoming as fast as the need demands.

Memorial Day in Japan

MONG the American customs that Japan has adopted, if indeed she did not have it long before America, is that of consecrating one day in the year to arted national heroes. In recent years there has been urally a huge addition to their numbers. The victories er the leviathan among the nations were not won with- an enormous loss of life. The victories were costly— le less than defeats would have been. True, the brave le country, venturing out like David to accept the llenge of the Russian Goliath, brought the European lly to his knees and had the reward of humiliating its ient foe, but every city and village in Japan had to y its share of the cost. It was cheerfully paid, but who ever know the aggregation of individual sorrow and eavement? Thousands of families whose observance Memorial Day was perfunctory before the war, have w an individual interest in it. The banners borne in procession have names inscribed on them that the blic passes over lightly among the list of the illustrious, t which are precious to some family, a proud inheritance ar to every member. The cemeteries are to a Euro- an visitor very quaint in the style of the memorials. at at Kiushiu, visited by Canon Tristram, contains the usoleums of the old Princes of Chikunsen, which are objects of very reverent visitation. The tombs of male members of the nily are distinguished by gh square shafts on circular ses. This cemetery, like hers in Japan, is remarkable r the beauty of its flowers, e azaleas alone surpassing ose of other lands. The in- riptions on the tombs are ng and eloquent on the rtues of the deceased. his is natural to a people ke the Japanese, in whom e habits of reverence for roes and respect for elders e inculcated from childhood. boy who is rude or disre- ectful to his parent or acher would be regarded as abnormal degenerate, hose punishment would be vere to the verge of cruelty. e cannot wonder therefore at the Japanese reverences e graves of his ancestors nd joins in the memorial remonies over the dead eroes of his nation, and not ldiers alone, but men who re noted for their virtues. It ould be a matter for thank- lness if the epitaphs had in em some of the hope that is xpressed in those of a Chris- an cemetery.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them lso who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him (I. Thessa- onians 4: 14).

The Procession on Memorial Day in Japan

The Prisoner's Jubilee

The unique distinction of having been in prison for ifty years is claimed by a convict in one of the State's risons of Connecticut. A movement is on foot to cele- rate the fiftieth anniversary of his committal to the risons, which occurs in July next. It is said to be the nly instance in the United States of a man having passed alf a century in prison. The convict made an effort ome time ago to obtain a pardon from the Governor on hat account and hoped to have tasted the sweets of liberty n the anniversary, but the Governor having investigated he circumstances of the crime for which the man was entenced could find no reason for exercising clemency. The convict therefore settled down to make arrangements for the celebration of the day in the prison. He is now seventy years of age and is regarded as a model prisoner. He has developed a taste for gardening during the past ten years and as he became, through age, unfit for the usual prison duties, he has been permitted to cultivate the prison grounds and to have charge of two or three greenhouses erected within the precincts. His crime, committed when he was twenty years old, was the remarkably cold-blooded murder of his girl wife. The thing that he did in a few minutes has held him captive for fifty years. We see nothing inconsistent in this; yet there are many who protest against the punishment God inflicts on the wicked as being out of proportion to the deeds done in a brief life on earth.

Yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? Are not your ways unequal? Therefore I will judge you, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord (Ezekiel 18: 29, 30).

Paris in Darkness

The greater part of the French capital experienced great inconvenience and deprivation of enjoyment on two nights recently, through the strike of the electrical workmen. The city had formerly conducted the business, but had granted the concession to a company, who began operations by depriving the employees of certain privileges they had enjoyed under the management of the municipality. The men were required to work longer hours, to give up old-age pensions and other advantages. The whole number of thirteen hundred skilled operators, failing to obtain any concessions, went on strike. The results were highly inconvenient. There were no lights on the streets; the theatres were in darkness and had to abandon performances; and the trains on the subways, which are run by electricity, ceased to operate. The mansions of the President and the members of the Cabinet and the police headquarters were lighted only by a few old oil lamps and such candles as could be procured in a hurry. There were no newspapers, for electric motors have been installed in the printing houses and the old steam engines discarded. The stores, cafes and restaurants were obliged to shut down at an early hour. There was also a narrow escape from a flood, owing to the failure of the electrical pumps, which had kept the water down in a tunnel in the course of construction on the south side of the Seine. The citizens did not know, until this experience taught them, how dependent they were on this new source of light and power and on the men who produce it. It is so with God's gifts; not until they are withdrawn do men realize how dependent upon them they are.

If thou hadst known the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes (Luke 19: 42).

To Transform the Face

The making of a strange contract is announced in the New York daily papers. The parties to it are a wealthy man, so ugly as to be almost repulsive and a spscialist who makes a boast of being able to transform faces. The specialist has undertaken to make the rich man handsome, or at least passable, and he is to have $50,000 for the service. A preliminary experiment is to be made on a baboon. If the specialist can reshape the baboon's nose, fill his cheek hollows, remove the furrows from its forehead, modify the cheek bone and slightly raise the corners of its mouth, then the rich man engages to pay him $20,000 and further to submit himself to the same process for which if it is successful he will pay $30,000 more, $50,000 in all. He must set a high value on his personal appearance to pay so much and to bear the inevitable pain, in order to gain comparative good looks. It is a pity that the man does not understand that the mere change of feature, even if it can be effected, does not insure beauty, which is a matter of spirit and character which God promises to give to his people.

Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body (Philippians 3: 21).

The Electric Eye

Statisticians report that more than one-half of recent railroad accidents are due to defective rails. The problem therefore of detecting a flaw in the rail is the most pressing the Companies have on hand, and the fact that a device known as "the electric eye" has been applied is arousing deep interest. An officer of one of our most important roads says: "The broken rail has been one of the greatest and most distressing problems ever confronting railroads. The perfect rail has not yet been obtained; the manufacturers confess that it is impossible to make it. That is to say, a thousand rails may be perfect, but the next one may have some defect which cannot be detected before it leaves the mill; nothing but actual use can develop it. No human eye can see the defect. The first crack may be no broader than a hair, and hidden beneath the top of the rail. It may not break immediately; several trains may go over it without making the crack perceptibly bigger. One train, then, may enlarge it and another rip the two pieces apart." The human eye being unable to detect a flaw, search has been made for an electric eye, and this has now been devised and is being tested. It consists of a fine electric wire running along the rails and connected with the signal towers. This is so fixed as to register a flaw the moment it appears. The Companies find that it is not safe to rely on the human eye, as so many travelers on life's highway have found. Happily for these latter it is not necessary to invent a mechanical eye. They may be sure of safety if they trust in the guidance that is offered them.

O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jeremiah 10: 23).

Imprisoned in a Fire

A perilous position was that of an employee of a Company whose offices at Danbury, Conn., were recently destroyed. In one of the lower floors of the building there were several coils of tarred rope lying ready for use in the Company's business. By some unknown means one of them became ignited, possibly through the head of a match falling upon it. The smouldering coil was not noticed at first, but soon a cloud of dense smoke arose and filled the building. Flames quickly appeared and then the employees realized that the moments were precious. At the first alarm a zealous young clerk in the cashier's department made a dash at the huge safe, to rescue the Company's ledgers and securities. He had entered the safe and was returning with his load, when the heavy door of the safe swung shut. Another clerk had noticed the door standing open and not knowing that his colleague was inside, closed it. The clerk inside was horror-stricken and foresaw his fate of being suffocated and perhaps roasted in his iron prison, by the flames roaring around him. Happily his position gave him access to the works of the lock and he set himself intently to the task of manipulating the mechanism controlling the bolts. The task was delicate, but his life was at stake and he worked with desperation. He was utterly exhausted when he succeeded and startled the firemen by stepping out of the safe. Many men in his circumstances would have been so nervous and agitated that they could not have opened the door. There are some circumstances in life when the man thus enmeshed in difficulties is unable to deliver himself. Then his resource is to cry to God for deliverance.

They cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them; he led them forth by the right way (Psalm 107: 6, 7).

ANGELS, SING HIS TRIUMPH

GOD has sent his angels to the earth again,
Bringing joyful tidings to the sons of men;
They who first at Christmas throng'd the heav'nly way.
Now beside the tomb door sit on Easter Day.

Yet the Christ they honor, is the same Christ still,
Who, in light and darkness, did His Father's will;
And the tomb, deserted, shineth like the sky,
Since He passed out from it into victory.

God has still His angels, helping, at His Word,
All His faithful children, like their faithful Lord:
Soothing them in sorrow, arming them in strife,
Opening wide the tomb doors, leading into life.

Father, send thine angels unto us, we pray,
Leave us not to wander all along our way;
Let them guard and guide us, whereso'er be,
Till our resurrection brings us home to Thee

IT CHANGED HIS LIFE

LAST February my mother asked me to renew her subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the ninth time since I first subscribed for it for her, ten years ago. During these ten years my mother was an invalid, much of the time unable to leave her chair except for a few steps. Her mind, however, was clear and bright and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was a great delight. My father, Dr. Flagg, while not a churchgoer, was a most benevolent man and more than ordinarily charitable, and my purpose in subscribing for the paper was that he might become interested in the spiritual and eternal side of life through THE HERALD, which cannot fail to interest anyone who sees it. As I expected, he began reading the paper, not excepting the sermons by Dr. Talmage, and, after a little, for sociability's sake, he asked that mother read them aloud to us on Sunday evening. Very soon we heard him praising the paper to people who came to call and we were much pleased, for, being a busy doctor, he had not been able to attend church since the first years of his practice. Through the paper, however, he again became interested in church, and the Sunday before he received the shock which ended his life he wrote to me saying he had attended church three times that day, and gave me the text and the chapter, which, the minister afterward told my mother, he chose for him when he saw him enter.

My father was deeply affected by that last service, and without doubt made his peace with the Giver of Life. The next day he was stricken down, never to recover, dying in a few days. This was a great blow to my mother. She remained an invalid with us until she, too, was called last May. To the last THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and her little Book of Psalms were her daily book.

An Easter Carol

SWING your bells, ye Easter lilies, let them chime from sea to sea,
With the tidings: Christ has risen, who died on Calvary;
He died for our redemption, and he rose to set us free
From death forevermore.
Ring His praise, ye Easter lilies,
He lives forevermore.

Angels, sing the sweet evangel of the love that cannot die,
Of the risen Christ ascended to his throne beyond the sky;
He is making up his jewels, as he calls his own on high,
To live forevermore.
Angels, shout the sweet evangel,
He lives forevermore.

Holy angels, shout hosannas; Lilies, ring each waxen bell,
O soul of mine, with rapture thrill! O tongue, the story tell
Of Him, who died to save us, and who rose that we may dwell
With Him forevermore.
Men and angels, shout hosannas,
He lives forevermore.

A MONUMENT TO ZEAL

THE death of Mrs. Virginia Earle Matthews, founder of the White Rose Home Negro Working Girls, is a loss to her race. She has been ill four years, strug ing against the inroads of consumption, but not abandoning the good work begun her ten years ago. She undertook to apply the social settlement idea to the m ignorant and depraved class of negroes in New York. It was her habit to meet colored girls, who came from the South, at the docks of the steamers and here she c tracted the disease which terminated her life. Her parents were slaves and lived Fort Valley, Georgia, where she was born.

An article on her work, which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD several years a made many acquainted with the pressing needs of Mrs. Matthews for financial he Mrs. C. P. Huntington gave for a considerable term the rent of the house No. East Eighty-sixth Street, N. The Misses Stillman also beca patronesses of the work. M Matthews' sister, Mrs. Anna Rich matron. The home receives support from any church, but pends wholly upon voluntary cont butions.

The whole work is a monume to the zeal and consecration of t remarkable woman, who struggl through the dark days to see h dearest wish fulfilled.

On the Bowery

ON the Bowery, wrecks of manhood,
Float upon the ruthless tide:
Lost to home and lost to loved ones,
With no shelter and no guide.
Sick and sad and lone and weary,
Shivering in the midnight cold,
Supperless, forlorn and dreary,
Wandering sheep without a fold.

How the Mission lights attract them
Steaming coffee, wholesome bread;
Kindly words and deeds more kindly,
Waken hopes that once seemed dead.
"Come again!" they hear it gladly—
They who thought the world so cold.
Hear the blessed invitation.
How they hasten to the fold.

There they hear of One so loving,
One who for their sakes has died,
One who lived a life so lowly
And for them was crucified.
Can it be He still is calling?
Oh, they will not bid him wait,
Eagerly they plead for mercy
Lest their coming be too late.

Saved, they turn again to loved ones—
To the home so far away—
To the mother, who is praying,
"Save, oh save my boy to-day!"
On the Bowery Christ is seeking
For his jewels gone astray.
Let our hearts go out in longing,
Let our hands be free to day.

Types of Famine Refugees Now Leaving the Great Tsingkiangpu Camp

In the Famine Camp at Shien-szu

The Famine's Death-roll Growing

GRADUALLY, as the winter months roll on, the grim tragedy of China's famine is being disclosed. Since the break-up of the refugee camps, the suffering and mortality have increased. Before these great multitudes of miserable beings reach their homes, thousands will have perished by the way. Even now they are leaving in their wake a line of victims that recalls one of the fate that overtook Napoleon's armies in the retreat from Moscow. What can this vast ragged horde of men, women and children, emaciated and weak, do but die?

They are promised support by the government "until the next new moon"—on reaching their homes; but this will apply only to the able-bodied who survive the present terrible sufferings. What of the sick, the feverstricken, the poor women and children and the aged?

"Tsingkiangpu refugees are coming home," writes a missionary in Suchien to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, "and as far as we see there is no help for them. They come wringing their hands in the most pitiful appeals. We do what we can and others we turn away with promises. 'We'll all be dead!' they cry in response."

Another missionary, Rev. B. C. Patterson, writes describing the scenes of the food distribution. He says: "The men climb over each other. The women snatch their arms. The crush continues for hours daily. The crowd grows ever larger. Two-thirds of the faces have changed to a leathery yellow complexion for want of nourishing food."

"In every collection of dwellings I visited," writes another correspondent, "there was either a dead or dying person, and some contained several. The cause is nothing but starvation. Although the victims are masked by the great bundles of rags they wear, I had the opportunity to observe a few cases here closely and could see that they were emaciated to the last degree, fearful and horrible—living skeletons."

From all of the famine provinces, the news is ominously similar—increasing suffering and sickness and a mounting death-roll. Five sub-prefectures in the province of Kiangsu alone have an aggregate of over 1,000,000, who must be fed to save their lives, and conditions are equally bad in Anhui and part of Honan. Rev. Mr. Junkin, of Yaowan, writes that in that section "hundreds of thousands are absolutely destitute."

China is giving and freely, and even the government and provincial officials are giving one-tenth of their salaries to help check the famine; but the extent of the suffering is so great that little impression has yet been made on the situation.

One remarkable effect of the famine and the present relief work is the altered attitude of the Chinese toward foreigners. "It is a new day in China," writes a correspondent. "The people are patient, mild and gentle, bearing their heavy burden of suffering quietly and with rare forbearance. Excitement and disturbances are rare. The people seem to feel that the foreigner man is their friend." It is evident that the gift of life-saving food and the strenuous efforts of the Interdenominational Missionary Committee at Chinkiang and other foreigners in behalf of the starving multitudes in the concentration camps have been a valuable and enduring object-lesson of practical Christianity.

"Shanghai, March 13.

"Distress and sickness increasing. Scattered condition of population renders mortality statistics unprocurable. Everything now centres on hurrying forward relief. Demand for additional distributors is hard to meet.

(Signed) "NORTH CHINA HERALD."

A correspondent of the North China Herald, who has made a journey through the famine districts west of the Grand Canal, writes that there are no transport animals left in Suining, Suchou, Hsuchoufu, Chinpeichou, Tusan and Yaowan. Traveling is difficult and lawlessness has increased owing to the general suffering. What little food is still in the district is held at fabulous prices. The people are eating stewed bark mixed with garlic. Even dogs are eaten. Middle-aged women and young wives are being sold for from $10 to $15, and young children from $3 to $4 a piece. The Grand Canal is the sole channel by which supplies can come to this section. The condition is growing more desperate daily.

In Suchien matters are even worse. Some relief has been afforded in a few districts by the flour purchased with American contributions and forwarded from Shanghai for distribution by the missionaries. Some clothing has also been apportioned among the almost naked sufferers. Recent rains have made the whole country a sea of mud. It will be June at least before any food can come from the soil. All stock and domestic animals have been eaten, and now, save for the little flour that the sufferers are receiving through the Relief Committees, the familiar diet of the great mass of the population is chopped straw, chaff, leaves and stalks, all boiled together. This makes a sort of soup, which inevitably leads to dropsy, famine fever, typhus and other horrors.

Yangchou has 63,000 famine refugees in camps, each receiving just sufficient rice and bean-cake to keep soul and body together. They sit crouching in the doors of their mat huts, their skinny, yellow faces drawn and haggard and their eyes fixed on vacancy. Hundreds are too weak to move.

At Nanking, the Famine Relief Committee recently made a distribution, and nearly two thousand garments, contributed by foreigners, were given out to the most needy. The Committee is now giving employment to those able to work. The officials also have commenced to give employment in deepening canals, etc., in the city. There are from thirty to forty thousand refugees there. Rice is given out regularly and the famine camps have been arranged and divided by barriers.

Rev. J. H. Malone writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Nanking:

"The famine in China is eliciting the sympathy and help of Christian people everywhere. The number actually involved without doubt goes into the millions, and the suffering has just begun. In and around Nanking, we consider there are between one hundred and fifty and two hundred thousand refugees from the famine districts. These people, for the most part, are good, respectable farmers, who have lost all or nearly all their belongings, and are or will be driven to desperation unless some means can be devised to tide them over the next few months.

"On the banks of a small river just outside Nanking, there are thousands of mat sheds, inside of which a multitude of human beings are suffering from cold and hunger, the like of which, perhaps, has never been known in China before. To-day, the writer and several other missionaries, in company with Chinese officials, devoted our time in distributing clothing to about sixteen hundred. To describe them would be an impossibility. Old men and women, boys, girls and infants, half starved, emaciated, with hardly any clothing, crowded around the soldiers' camp where we were stationed, to get a garment to keep them from freezing. It has been very cold, and many looked as if they would not need clothing or anything else many more days. On many of their faces death was clearly stamped, and it is only a question of a few more days like to-day and all will be over, as far as human help is concerned.

"We have helped a few, and would like to take many of the children into our orphanage. I picked up one little girl the other day, whose condition was most pitiable. Her only garment consisted of a very thin cotton jacket, which did not reach to her waist. The lower part of her body was perfectly naked; her little, pinched face and cold feet and hands appealed to even the Chinese, as they stood gazing upon this shivering piece of humanity. I could not rest until she was provided for, and it has ended in her being taken into our girls' orphanage, where she is being cared for and is now one of the happiest girls we have. How many there are in just as bad a condition to-night throughout the famine districts of China one hardly dares to comtemplate. Thousands we know of in and around Nanking are suffering from cold and hunger; infants being born into the world without any preparation for their advent. Every day brings us face to face with abject poverty, suffering and death in its most

BULGARIA'S QUAINT PEOPLE

Young Bulgarians in the Characteristic National Dress of the Country

ONLY a day's ride from Vienna southeast is Sofia, the growing capital of Bulgaria. Twenty-five years ago a town of some twenty thousand inhabitants, it now numbers over eighty thousand. The city with its handsome public buildings, parks and growing numbers, is an epitome of the whole Bulgarian nation that now has to be reckoned with in all political calculations made by Abdul Hamid at Constantinople, or by the cabinets of Europe.

The people of Sofia and the people you see toiling in the fields as the train puffs its way up the steep grades on the way from Austria, are much the same. All simple, energetic, well-built peasantry. Those of the city dress somewhat differently, and high hats are much in vogue when some public reception is on at the palace, or some statue is unveiled. The main wealth of the country comes from the farms; seven-tenths of the Bulgarians are tillers of the soil. In recent years most of the attar of roses sold in America has come from Bulgaria, and is a growing industry. These hardy folks seem to American eyes to have stepped out of the pictured page of some old story-book. On work days the men dress in sheepskin coats and woolen leggings, strapped about with leather like Italian brigands. Fur cap, even in summer, is the universal national headdress. On holidays they are gorgeous creatures, with coat and trousers heavily embroidered in white and various colored cords. The women are usually dressed in sober colors, but on feast days and at weddings they blossom out in semi-oriental magnificence. A Bulgarian bride, whether handsome or not, can rightly say that her face is her fortune, for she decorates it most profusely with coins hung on strings. Her headdress and wedding gown also jingle like a small mint in motion. The position of women is not as high as in the Germanic states. The Bulgarian believes in keeping the women very much at home and very, very much in the background. The lord and master rides to market on the farm cart, if he is rich enough to possess one, while his women-folk trudge behind carrying the farm produce that is to be sold.

Flower Girls Gathering Roses

The Bulgarian small farmer is probably one of the most contented in Eastern Europe. There are no great landowners, nor are there the destitute poor in the farming regions, which means practically all Bulgaria outside of the cities. The peasant has few wants, and these his toil is able to satisfy. It is said that when the Russian troops came down through the country during the war with Turkey, they were greatly surprised at the rude comfort they found in the Bulgarian villages and farmsteads. Probably a good part of this prosperity is due to the fact that the Bulgarian is usually of sober habits and has not been hampered with the socialistic arrangements of the Russian peasant, who holds his land as part of the community, and in consequence is very unwilling to make any improvements on the lots that have been assigned to him for the time being. The Bulgarian is able to work out his destiny as an individual, and seems to be doing it very much to his own satisfaction.

The Bulgarian farmer has to contend with an unfertile and rocky soil, but his industry conquers, and he is often able to reap crops that would do credit to many an American farmer who has to plow out a livelihood for himself and family from some of the rocky hillside farms of New England.

Like the French Canadian, he likes to live in a community, and we find few isolated farmsteads as we do in the United States. This may arise from the fact that, at no distant date, they were under Turkish rule and the country kept in a disturbed state by outlaw bands.

Driving out from Sofia to some of the villages within a radius of a dozen miles or so, the American traveler is struck by the fact that he can see large tracts of land under cultivation, but the farmhouses are noticeably absent. Here and there, however, he can see the belfry of some Greek Church, marking the site of a small village. It means a long tramp for the men and women who labor in the fields, for the women work with hoe and spade in this country as much as the men. Long tramps, however, are part of the peasant's daily life and are not considered a hardship. What tra ing the peasant does, he usually accomplishes on own feet. In fact, in the capital itself there are but carriages, even among the more wealthy class of population.

The peasant village is usually composed of one street, the houses being set comparatively wide a and each one surrounded by a walled enclosure must cost its hard-working owner con erable expense for its construction repair. The wall is of loose stone, wel together with mud and a mixture of ru and hardbaked mud. A few have woo palings. The wall is of such height t little can be seen of the house or of daily life of the inhabitants. The Bu rians have a strong dislike of stran knowing anything of their family aff and one must have a good reason intruding on their privacy. The vari outhouses of the farmstead are built in the inclosures, and running all about the family chickens, ducks, geese, livestock, which now and then ventur invade the house without greatly disc certing the inhabitants. The house i one story, built of mud and stone covered with whitewash. The roof red tiles comes down with a long sw over the eaves, making a kind of veran roof. This is pleasant in the short, summer, but must make the living ro exceedingly dark and gloomy in wint as the windows are small and are arranged to admit much light. The fl is flush with the ground and made of hardbaked m The kitchen is the living room of the family. There a regular bedroom for the parents, but the rest of family get along with mattresses spread on the floors. Of course, in many places, with the increase of prosperity, European furnishing is being copied degree, but as a rule the people are not in a hurry to take up with what they consider as extravagant and somewhat new-fangled notions. Probably the present good health of the Bulgarian population is due in no small measure to the fact that they are a survival of the fittest. All the weak constitutions must have died out long ago from hardship and frequent wars.

A Bulgarian Girl Studying in America

The government of Prince Ferdinand has never had cause to worry about race suicide. Large families are found everywhere. The peasants marry young, and a family in which there are but five children is the exception. The population is increasing at a rate of two hundred thousand a year.

The Bulgarians have made great progress as a military nation, and recently the military experts of Europe have waked up to the fact that the Bulgars have one of the finest armies in the world for its size. A good "fighting machine" is an absolute necessity if this young nation wishes to maintain itself as an independent State. Hostile neighbors watch its progress with jealous eyes, and would gladly sweep over its borders if they could take the Bulgarian people at a disadvantage. Servia tried it once and was badly worsted. A conflict between any nation and Turkey would involve Bulgaria. The Macedonians would certainly rise in case Turkey were attacked, and the Bulgarians would go to the assistance of the thousands of their countrymen who dwell in Macedonia. It is one of the ambitions of the new Bulgaria to annex a large part of Macedonia and make Bulgaria a kingdom instead of a principality. The Bulgarian people are very proud of their army, realize the necessity for its existence, and vote the military expenditures with greater good will than for any other public purpose.

In cases when other departments have a surplus, the amount is transferred with the full consent of the people's representatives in the Bulgarian assembly to the War Office. The nation has a standing army of 40,000, and could within a few hours mobilize an army of over 100,000 well-trained men. Hundreds of Macedonians are serving under the Bulgarian colors, in order to learn the military art for the struggle that, sooner or later, will set the Balkans aflame and make large changes on the map of Europe as we now know it. The officers are in most cases the sons of well-to-do farmers. Many private soldiers after two years' service in the ranks, pass an examination and receive officers' commissions, a fact that makes the service pleasing to the ambitious. The men are well housed, well clothed and well treated, and in consequence the term in the army is looked forward to by many young men who like the break in lives that otherwise are very monotonous. The men are strong, but without the snap we find in some services; but they can fight their country's battles, and that is the prime requsite for a next-door neighbor to the Sultan.

While the nation has been progressing in a material sense, spiritually it has remained in much the same condition as it has for the past hundreds of years. The Bulgarian National Church is part of the Eastern or Greek Church, and has its own Exarch, who lives at Constantinople. The Exarch performs much the same functions for the Bulgarian Church as the Pope does for the Roman Catholic. Worship is a matter of outward form and of ritual. The religion of the heart and mind is noticeably absent. The people attend church with comparative regularity and go through the specified forms and then get rid of their religion until the next Sunday or feast day comes around. The priests are uneducated. They enjoy certain social privileges in their communities, but they are not expected to be examples of Christian living. They farm and engage in other pursuits. They used to have control of the town liquor saloon, but that has been taken away from them, and in consequence a number of them are poorer. They are permitted to have one wife, but if she dies they are not permitted to marry again.

Preaching is forbidden. A priest who attempted it some time ago was excommunicated. He has left the church and is now urging the formation of a new body of believers, to resemble the Anglican Church. He believes that a certain amount of form as well as preaching is necessary to satisfy the mind and eye of the Bulgarian peasant.

A small party of educated Bulgarians has recently made arrangements for preaching services in a hall and are urging that the Church reform its present system to some extent in harmony with the present age. The great mass of the clergy are satisfied to go on in the same old way, a way that will surely result in their losing a large part of their influence. Protestantism is beginning to get a hold on the hearts of the people. Here and there a little party of believers in the preaching of the simple Gospel have been gathered into churches. One of the most active of these Protestant Christian churches is in Sofia. A photograph of it appears on this page together with that of its pastor, the Rev. Marco Popoff, whose name is already familiar to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as one of its correspondents.

Pastor Popoff's Church in Sofia

A Bulgarian Maid in Her Bridal Dress

Pastor Popoff is now in this country, making an effort to secure funds to enlarge his church in Sofia, as at present only a part of the congregation can get within its walls. He has three hundred people under his ministration, and this number would be greatly increased if seats could be provided for them. Pastor Popoff, it will be remembered by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, rendered great aid as a member of the Relief Committee in charge of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund during the suffering in Macedonia several years ago. He organized a committee of native pastors and missionaries in Sofia.

Any readers interested in the progress of this evangelical work in Sofia may address Pastor Popoff, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York.

THE TEMPERANCE FIELD IN 1907

By Rev. Hervey Wood

THE writer frequently receives from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD inquiries as to the progress of temperance reform. "Is the temperance cause gaining in our country?" or "is drunkenness on the increase?" or "is the consumption of liquor per capita increasing or diminishing?" These and many similar questions are constantly being asked. In order to answer these queries, and at the same time to furnish data that may be useful, the following facts are presented:

1. That there were in these United States on the 30th day of July, 1906, over 250,000 liquor saloons (internal revenue returns) licensed to sell soul and body destroying liquors.

2. That over one billion dollars ($1,000,000,000) is invested in the liquor business in our country.

3. That one million men (1,000,000) are employed in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the United States.

4. That the liquor dealers have organized in every State in the Union for the purpose of extending and defending the trade, in ways hereafter explained.

5. That there is a National Liquor Dealers' Association, composed of several State organizations.

6. That this Association at its yearly meeting held in Pittsburg, October 11 to 16, 1903, voted to use a fund of five million dollars ($5,000,000) for offensive purposes."

7. That ten picked men have been sent to Washington as lobbyists in Congress with the best legal counsel (an ex-Senator of the United States being at their head); that they are there for the purpose of defeating every measure that will restrict the trade in liquors, and to secure the repeal of every existing law that interferes with the drink traffic.

8. That the same number of lobbyists, with legal counsel, have been appointed to every State Legislature for similar purposes.

9. That an almost unlimited corruption fund is in the hands of these Congressional and State lobbyists for the purchase of votes. (See presentment from New York County Grand Jury of 1905, sent to Albany).

10. That the Liquor Dealers' Association have a Press Bureau in Washington, D.C., for the purpose of disseminating so-called "news items" throughout the country as government news; that this Bureau has its agents at every State capital, and that they have also a Bureau of Literature in New York City and in Washington for "educational purposes."

11. That in addition to the 250,000 licensed saloons in the country, there are over 50,000 grocers and druggists who sell intoxicating liquors.

12. That in some of our large cities, department stores are selling liquors.

13. That over $250,000,000 is invested in the proprietary and patent medicine business, and according to the Board of Health of Massachusetts and the Bureau of Chemistry in Washington, over 90% of said medicines are made up of poisonous drugs and whiskey, and contain anywhere from 15 to 70% of alcohol; that many excellent people are acquiring the alcoholic appetite through partaking of said medicines.

14. Political influence. Every saloon is a centre of political influence against the home, the church and our country.

15. Lawlessness. The most lawless thing in our country is the liquor traffic. The open saloon is the rendezvous of criminals of all kinds, the thief, the gambler, the card-sharper, the pickpocket, the burglar and highwayman.

As one looks over this vast array of the forces of evil and the powers of darkness he may be pardoned if, in the language of Holy Writ, he asks "Who is sufficient for these things?" Well, God and his people are, for "more are they that be with us than are they that be against us," and we shall eventually win the day.

In closing, let me enumerate some of the forces at work for temperance and sobriety. Note the following facts:

1. The churches are getting together to fight this enemy of God and man. They muster in these United States some twenty-eight millions of members (28,000,000). Where will the 1,000,000 men employed and interested in the liquor trade be when the Church of Jesus Christ lines up for conflict? The Church is beginning to move.

2. The students of our universities and our colleges, the brightest, brainiest men and women of our Republic, are arraying themselves against drink and to work for God and home and country. These brainy men are going into the pulpits of our land, into the halls of legislation, into gubernatorial chairs; men of the grit and grace of Joseph Folk of Missouri, Hanly of Indiana, and Colby of New Jersey.

3. There never were so many godly men and women total abstainers and consecrated workers for the cause as at this moment, not only in our own country, but in Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia, while Canada is forging ahead even of the people in this country. 33,000,000 of our people are living under legal prohibition in one form or other. South of Mason and Dixon's line, out of 27,000,000 over 17,000,000 are living under some form of legal prohibition.

4. The strongest kind of temperance talk was heard, both in the House and Senate, during the 59th session of Congress, and drink was driven out of all State and national soldiers' homes.

Listen to the oncoming tramp of our millions of American boys, trained in our public schools; listen to the young Goughs, Dows, Phillips, Cuylers and Dodges now going forth from our halls of learning to wake up the American people.

Our beloved Republic, aye, all this sin-cursed earth, shall yet be delivered, for truth is mighty and must prevail, and God, even our God, is on our side.

A YOUNG MAN'S VISION

International Sunday School Lesson for April 7

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

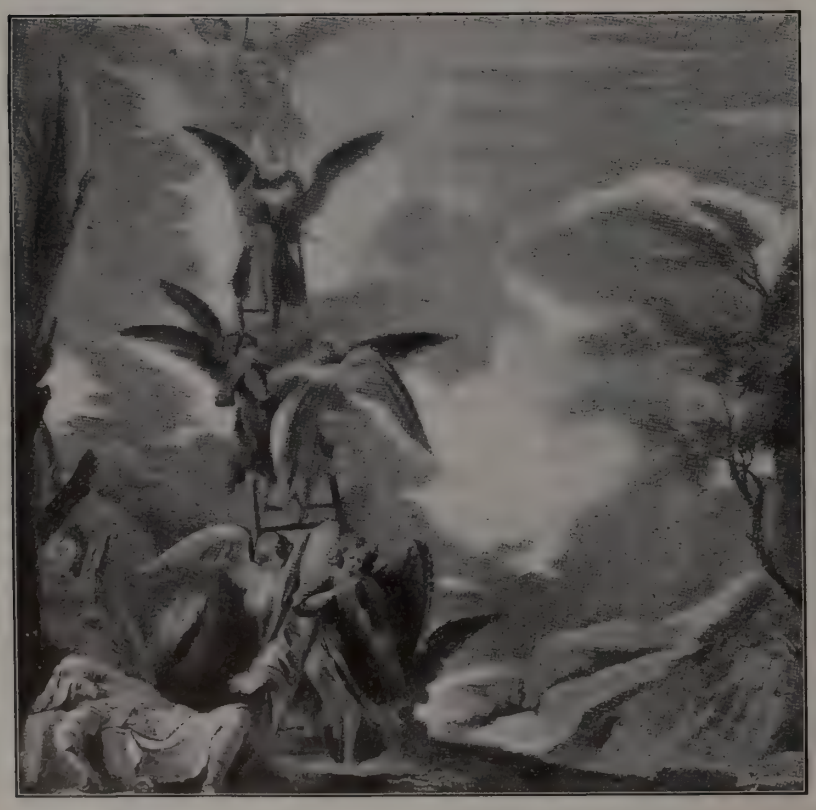
JACOB sleeps, and his couch is mother earth with its soft mattress of tender grass. His pillow is hard, but it does not make him wakeful. The curtains round about him are sable and gemmed with stars. And God's banner over him is love. When Jacob laid him down to sleep he was weary and footsore, for he had traveled far. He was sad of heart, for he was separating himself from his father's house. He was troubled in spirit, for he had wronged both his father and his brother. He was anxious about his future, for he was not assured of a welcome by his Uncle Laban, who was as yet a stranger.

When the fetters of his body were loosed in slumber and his spirit was free for the time, God came to the portals of his life and spoke to him and promised to be with him, in fulfilment of the peculiar covenant he had made with his grandfather Abraham and his father Isaac, that in his posterity should all the families of the earth be blessed. And God poured strength into his mind and body and gave him journeying grace, by saying, "I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land, for I will not leave thee."



"Behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it"

The blessedness of it all awoke Jacob from his slumbers and the place seemed to him as the very gate of heaven. He arose and prepared to worship God, by setting up as an altar the stone pillow upon which his head had rested. The pillow became a pillar, a monument erected to the glory of God, which he dedicated by pouring oil upon it. And then Jacob took upon himself there the oath of allegiance to God and promised to give him one-tenth of all the substance which should be his. It was as the face of friend answering to friend, for in what he said and did Jacob was responding to God's loving kindness.

Jacob a Fugitive

This lesson naturally divides itself into three topics: First, a fugitive from justice; second, a vision of God; third, a consecrated life.

1. The Fugitive. It is a mistake to suppose that we must apologize for a man's sins because his story is in the Bible. Jacob had been guilty of three great sins. First of all, he had cheated his brother in exchanging a dish of lentil soup for a birthright that carried with it all that goes with the elder son's rights in a family; the honor of being the head of a household, and having the largest share of the family property. In this case there was also a special additional privilege, the promise of God that he should be a blessing to all other families in all countries and in all centuries. This was the part of that Abraham had most prized and that Esau "despised," because of which he was declared to be "a profane person," reminding us that profanity is a broader term than young people commonly suppose. It is profanity to desecrate the Lord's Day; to treat the Bible with disrespect; to conduct oneself improperly in church, and the worst of all profanity is to despise the call of God to all of us to be a blessing in some way to the world.

A Man Without Principle

Esau's sin, however, does not lessen Jacob's sin. The bargain which he made was as mean in character as when a white man buys land or valuable furs of a child-like Indian for a bottle of rum; for Esau, called "The Red," probably because of his red hair and sanguine temperament, was very much like the Red Men in his impulsiveness as a grown up child, and indisposed to regular labor and giving himself much to the adventures of hunting. He was also very much like the sailors, who are so easily cheated by the shrewd Jacobs of to-day, as they come in from the long voyage with wages in their pockets, and are soon relieved of it by the "sharks," so well known in all commercial ports as men who sell shoddy garments and drink and vices to the impulsive men of the sea.

Every boy should learn in his home, Sunday School and public school in his first lessons that only a fair exchange is no robbery. "Value received" in a note should be explained as proclamation to every one, that neither property nor pay can properly btained except by rendering a true alent in goods or services, except when eceives a present from a person who right to give it. The Duke of Wel-n was told one day by his chamber-that there was a chance for a great tin in some land that he desired, be-the owner was financially embarrassed must take almost any price he could Wellington indignantly said, "Pay the land is worth and never talk to a bargain again." The word bargain metimes used lightly in advertising, but e sense in which it was used in this a bargain is a brother to burglary.

Meanness of a Lie

e second account in Jacob's wrong-do-vas getting goods under false pretenses e occasion when he deceived his father utting on false hair in order to person-sau and get the father to confirm the in he had made with the soup. The offense was the repeated lies he used ceiving his blind father. In our days girls and older people are apt to treat as a trivial thing, and yet it is a good that no one resents anything more than to be called a liar, showing that is still recognition of the deep mean-of a lie. Let us consider what would en to society if lying should become ral; neither banking nor any form of t nor any part of the machinery of zed society could go on if lying was tual. In China, where it has been ble in the past to hire a person to lie few cents, the courts have thought it ssary to use torture to get at the facts. n the matter is fully considered it will en that a lie is one of the very mean-and most fundamental of sins. The tive from justice, whose case we are idering, was guilty of these three great —cheating, false pretenses and lying.

A vision of God. It is very encourag-o people, conscious of their own sins imperfections, that God would speak ly to such a man as Jacob. It is as-ed, in view of what is said about repen-e in other parts of the Bible as essential conciliation with God, that Jacob had me repentant for his sins, the conse-ces of which had made him sorrowful lonely. He had learned the meaning hat the Oriental poet says:

w tracketh wrong as echo follows song, on, on, on.

e had learned also what Byron meant n he said:

No exile from himself can flee,
To lands though more and more remote,
Still, still pursues
Where're I be
The blight of life, the demon thought.

is said that despair is the condition to ch man is driven when only the best is ible, but to a man without faith it n seems to be only the condition when the worst is possible. But Jacob, in his sinfulness, never got away from his y instruction about the presence of l. To Jacob the sinner, but also the itent, God revealed himself while Jacob t in the wilderness on his pillow of e. The terraced hills of Palestine, were before his eyes as he fell asleep, is vision became the front steps to the r of heaven, in which he saw God look nercy upon him, reassuring his lonely rt with promises of his presence.

God Always Near

he great significance of this part of the y is that heaven lies about us always if only had eyes to see. God and the els are never far away. We can never anything behind God's back, never thing of which he needs to say, "Show o me," but to the penitent soul the ught of his constant presence is not one terror, but brings the sense of mighty pfulness always at hand. The angels e both ascending and descending, going with prayers and coming back with ssings, and the wonderful commerce l goes on between the praying soul and ever helpful Father above.

The artists and the poets have made ch of this vision; they have found the y powerful in suggestions of comfort dark places of life, as in the hymn, earer, my God, to Thee"— here let the way appear, steps up to heaven;

ll that thou sendest me, in mercy given,
ngels to beckon me, nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Longfellow suggests that vices repented of may be like the rounds of a ladder to heaven—

Saint Augustine, well hast thou said,
That of our vices we can frame
A ladder, if we will but tread
Beneath our feet each deed of shame!

We have not wings, we cannot soar,
But we have feet to scale and climb,
By slow degrees, by more and more,
The cloudy summits of our time.

Dr. J. G. Holland finds in the story a picture of the gradual development of character as like the successive rounds of a ladder—

Heaven is not reached at a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

We rise by the things that are under our feet,
By what we have mastered in greed and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ill that we hourly meet.

But the profoundest interpretation of the ladder is in the words of Christ (John 1:51): "Hereafter you shall see heaven opened, and angels ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." Christ, then, is the way to heaven, through whom God comes near to man and man comes near to God. The cross is "the gate of heaven," and wherever it is truly set up, whether in stately temple or open field, there is "the house of God." Jesus, in a cornfield with his twelve apostles, pointed to the beautiful sanctuary of marble at hand and said, "In this place is one greater than the temple." There can be no "house of God" where God is not. "What church is this?" said a stranger at the open door. "Christ's Church." "Is he in?" The cordiality with which the stranger was welcomed in his name confirmed the solemn affirmative answer.

The Ideals of Life

Jacob should be considered not only as a fugitive from justice, but as a young man going out from home to begin the work of life. It is very essential to any true success that such a young man should have a vision of God, some ideal of being a blessing to the world. A young man whose horizon does not extend farther than he can see, and who sneers at sentiment and ideals and talks about being practical when standards of righteousness are presented, might almost as well be a beast, for the privilege and the duty of a man is to see beyond the visible into the invisible, including God and heaven in the range of his daily life. It was through using the invisible Moses was able to make the largest success that ever came to a human life.

Jacob seems to have forgotten the steps and the angels when he heard God's voice from above them saying, "I am with thee," and repeating the covenant previously made with Isaac and Jacob, that he should have a countless seed and be a blessing to the world. Even though lesser opportunities await us, there is not one who cannot make some little spot better and happier.

Jacob's Consecration

3. A consecrated life. The first practical result of this vision of God in case of Jacob was consecration of his property in vowing to give a tenth of it to God. He recognized God the giver of it all, who from the beginning generously required only a tenth of our income as he has required a seventh of our time, in both cases more for our own good than for any advantage to himself. The custom of tithing is a Jewish custom, but it is first spoken of in the Bible in connection with Abraham, who lived before the Mosaic law of tithing. All our time belongs to God, but he requires that one-seventh of it be set aside for sacred uses in recognition of his control of it all and as a step towards the consecration of all time. And so in connection with our property, he has taught from the beginning that one-seventh of it is not ours to keep. The Jew went far beyond the tenth in making free-will offerings, in some cases went up to one-third of his income. A little child caught the spirit of it all when she said to her mother, "I have paid a tenth, now I want to give something." The discussions of this subject have been too exclusively devoted to the question whether a tenth should be given, but quite as important is the question as to what purpose it should be devoted.

These pictures are wonderful examples of the art of color printing. They are reproduced on heavy plate paper and can be framed at moderate cost or used just as they are in any room of the house. The subjects represented are such as will appeal to all Bible lovers generally; they will add much to the beauty of your home.

What more appropriate decorations for the home, Sunday School, or pastor's study than these beautiful pictures? Exact size of pictures, 11x14 in.

Why we make this Offer: The object is to acquaint you with as illustrated by J. James Tissot, the most beautiful, instructive and valuable publishing achievement the world has seen.

396 ILLUSTRATIONS—117 IN COLORS

Nothing approaching this work has ever been attempted before. In a series of over four hundred splendid pictures, all the most impressive scenes and incidents in the Bible story are depicted, true in color, costume, landscape, and all details as to the life, the country and the time.

To those who read the Bible habitually, it is of the highest value, and to those who are seeking to awaken a desire for Bible reading and study in others, it is an invaluable auxiliary. Its strongest appeal is perhaps to parents and teachers; but we can not imagine a home in which Tissot's wondrously illustrated Old Testament, if acquired now, will not be a treasured possession for generations to come.

READ WHAT THE EDITOR OF S. S. LESSONS SAYS:

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of Tissot's Old Testament. From an art standpoint they are fine, the coloring faithfully representing the originals. I have now the whole Bible illustrated by Tissot. It is something that every Bible student, especially Bible teachers, should seek to own because of the true-to-life character of the pictures, portraying just the kind of people who were concerned in the events, instead of the 16th Century Italians, as we have in many of the pictures by the Old Masters.

FROM this date, our undertaking to answer by mail, letters in which ten cents are enclosed for reply, is withdrawn. Letters asking for information of general interest will be answered in The Mail-Bag as speedily as possible. In some cases where, in our judgment, good may result from a personal answer, we will reply by mail. We cannot answer inquiries of the nature of conundrums nor those written for the purpose of argument.

E. V., Huntington, Ind. 1. Was George Washington a Roman Catholic. 2. Have other people besides the members of the Catholic Church burned heretics at the stake?

1. No; he was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, serving as vestryman in two places. Reference is made to this in a recent account of Pohick Church, published on the MAIL-BAG page. 2. Yes.

W. H. D., Richmond, Va. Does God hear the prayers of sinners?

We are taught to believe so. A striking example is that of Manasseh (II. Chron. 33: 18). A greater sinner than he it would be difficult to imagine. We can understand prayers of sinners for temporal blessings being unheard; "their sacrifice" and perhaps their prayers, too, "are an abomination" (Prov. 15: 8), but when the sinner cries to God for pardon and for help to quit his sins, he is surely heard. God does not mock the wicked man when he bids him seek the Lord. Let the wicked forsake his way and return, for he will abundantly pardon (Isa. 55: 6, 7). God heard the prayers of the people of Nineveh (Jonah 3: 7-10). The way of approach to God is by repentance and that God gives (Acts 5: 31). When the wicked man prays for that he gets it, then God forgives him and he is in a position to ask for and receive all other blessings.

M. E., Marshall, Mich. Is not the situation described in the story you published, "Of Such is the Kingdom of Heaven," which depicts children as working twelve or fourteen hours a day much overdrawn? Several here cannot believe it.

It is not overdrawn. If your friends will send an inquiry, with postage, to the National Child Labor Committee, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City, you will receive much carefully authenticated information covering conditions worse than those described in Dr. Sheldon's story.

S. McB., Boone, Ia. 1. In what year was Christ crucified? 2. In what year and in what manner did the Apostles die? 3. In what year was the Apostle John banished to Patmos?

1. In A.D. 30. 2. We do not know the dates of their deaths. The manner according to tradition was as follows, taking the order given in Matthew 10: 2-4: Peter crucified; Andrew crucified; James beheaded; John died a natural death in extreme old age; Philip hanged; Bartholomew died after being flayed; Thomas pierced with a lance; Matthew stoned and beheaded; James the less, brains dashed out with a club; Thaddeus (Judas, not Iscariot) shot with an arrow; Simon the Canaanite crucified; Judas Iscariot, suicide. There are other traditions, but this is believed to be the most accurate. 3. The tradition is that he was banished in the fourteenth year of the reign of Domitian, which would be 95 A.D.

G. A., Waterbury, Conn. Can you inform me if Arcturus is visible now, and in what part of the heavens and the hour? Also what part it plays in the solar system?

Arcturus (Alpha Bootes) rises north of east about half past 9 P.M., and is in the meridian, 20 degrees north of the equator, at half past 3 A.M. It is a beautiful lone star of the first magnitude. No other bright star is near it. Of all the first magnitude stars Arcturus is the most distant. The best determination makes it 950 billion miles, or nearly forty times the distance of Alpha Centauri. So when we look at Arcturus, how awful is the thought that its light left its fiery home 160 years ago, moving every second 186,300 miles. The theory that our sun revolves around Arcturus is delusive, as there is not any evidence that such is the case. Our sun is moving about twelve miles a second nearly toward Alpha Lyræ. Whether its path is a curve or straight line is unknown, and may remain unknown for thousands of years. If curved, then the sun and all his planets are revolving round some other sun, in period of time no one but God can appreciate.

Marathon, N. Y. LEWIS SWIFT

B. B., Wanpaca, Wis. When a minister calls on one of his hearers, should he offer prayer without being asked?

It depends on the circumstances of the case. The pastor is usually the best judge in such matters. He knows whether the people upon whom he is calling wish him to pray with and for them. Occasionally where there is a doubt he may formally ask whether they desire prayer. Then there are calls of a social rather than a pastoral character, where prayer would not be offered unless specially requested.

Inquirer, Middletown. What is the proper rendering of the word "clientele," and what is its history? How is it pronounced?

The word "clientel" is in good use and part of the English language. It is used to designate "a body of professed adherents, a following." It is pronounced clai-en-tel. It comes originally from the past participle of the Latin verb cluo, to hear. The English tongue received it by way of the French.

W. M. P., Martinsville, Va. What did Christ mean by saying, "I will have mercy and not sacrifice" (Matt. 9: 13)?

He was quoting from Hosea 6: 6. His meaning is explained more fully in Ps. 50: 8-15. The Jews thought that if they offered sacrifice all would be well, but God told them in those Old Testament passages that he wanted a change of heart. Sacrifice was unacceptable when the offerer's heart was full of malignity, unkindness and hardness to his fellow-man. Christ's parable of the unmerciful servant (Matt. 18: 23-35) emphasized the same truth.

J. R., Utica, N. Y. What is the opinion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with respect to the alleged discovery by certain Boston physicians—that the body of a dying person, carefully weighed just before dissolution, is heavier by one ounce than when weighed immediately after dissolution, and that the missing ounce represents the weight of the soul which has fled, and which is thereby proved to be actual, ponderable matter?

The so-called "discovery" is either a ghastly joke or a statement resulting from dense ignorance of the subject. Sir Wm. Crookes, ablest of living scientists, pronounces it "absolute nonsense." Another authority pronounces it an "imbecile form of materialism," and adds, "mind is no form of matter." At the moment of dissolution, all gases are expelled from the body by muscular contraction, which is probably the reasonable explanation of the phenomenon that puzzles the Boston doctors, who have laid themselves open to ridicule by their absurd statement.

W. L. B., Kaufman, Tex. 1. When and by whom was the Apostles' Creed formulated? 2. Have any changes been made in it since the original? 3. Does the sentence "he descended into hell" mean the grave or the world of eternal torment?

1. Many of the early writers hold that the apostles themselves composed the Creed while in Jerusalem, shortly after the ascension. This statement rests wholly upon tradition. Augustine even gives the name of the apostolic contributor of each phrase or passage. "He descended into hell" is attributed to Thomas. 2. It has unquestionably undergone many changes. In its present form it was probably first generally used in the fourth century. 3. It is omitted in some forms of the Creed used in Protestant churches, and in others (the Protestant Episcopal Church for instance) it is optional to use it or "he went into the place of departed spirits," which is a permissible interpretation.

Mrs. M. K. D., Malesus, Tenn. What were the Accadian tablets found a few years ago and believed to have been written several thousand years ago?

The discoveries at Niffer, both tablets and sculptures, dated back of 4,500 B.C., it is claimed, and revealed the existence of a king, En-sag-kus-anna, who called himself "Lord of Kengi," or the South. He had many conquests. The excavations also told of the rulers of Tello, whose land was absorbed by Babylonia. Some of the tablets told of Naram-Sin and Sargon, kings of Agade (Accad) and their wars.

Mrs. H. A. M., North Livermore. How many Marys are there spoken of in the New Testament, and who are they and where are the references found?

Mary, the mother of Jesus; Mary Magdalene (Luke 8: 2); Mary, the sister of Lazarus (Luke 10: 40); Mary, the wife of Cleophas (John 19: 25); Mary, the mother of John (Acts 12: 12).

H. P., Galena, Md. What is the estimated number of English speaking people in the world?

It is spoken by 4,000,000 in Canada, 3,500,000 in West Indies, 3,000,000 Australians, 1,000,000 East Indians, 38,000,000 in Great Britain and Ireland, 63,000,000 in United States, besides probably a million more in Jamaica, Africa, parts of Continental Europe, sections of South America, and the scattered islands of the Pacific.

Mrs. S. A. B., Stockton, Kan. Give your opinion on spiritualism or conversing with our departed friends through a medium?

While we believe with Paul (see Heb. 13: 1), we regret to say that spiritualism, so-called, is almost exclusively practised for gain by charlatans and humbugs. Better leave them alone.

Jessie M., Nashville, Tenn. What is the present status of the Japanese school question in California? I have not read of its final settlement yet.

The San Francisco Board of Education has decided to readmit to the schools all Japanese under sixteen years of age. The Federal suit against the Board has been ordered by the Washington authorities to be discontinued.

A reader of this journal (Miss May Le Dodd, of Roseland, N. J.) pays this graceful acrostic tribute to its work and usefulness:

CHRISTIAN HERALD, truly named,
Herald of Salvation;
Round the world so justly famed
In every clime and nation.
Speeding like a herald true
To spread the joyful tidings;
Its Gospel message ever new
And truth in light abiding.
Never may thy journeys cease.

HERALD, messenger of peace,
Enter every humble home,
Rays of light and heaven's love
And blessings scatter from above,
Labor on, all sin to fight,
Dear messenger of right and might.

Mrs. W. C., South River, N. J. Please give me some information concerning Neal Dow. When he died, etc.

Neal Dow was born in Portland, Me., in 1804. In 1851 he became mayor of his native city, and was instrumental in the passage of a restrictive liquor law for Maine. As an officer in the Civil War, he was a prisoner for eight months, and retired as Brigadier-General of Volunteers. In 1880 he was the prohibition candidate for the Presidency of the United States, being widely known as a temperance reformer. He died in 1897.

B. B., Lacombe, Can. Is there not a comet approaching the earth now? Is it not Halley's Comet, which has not been seen since 1835? What would be the length of its orbit?

Halley's Comet is approaching the earth with a daily increase of motion and is expected to arrive at perihelion (nearest the sun) between March and July, 1910. It left us, as I well remember, in 1835. It was my first independent discovery in astronomy, though only a lad of fifteen years. It awakened a faint desire to study of the stars, but the desire was not fully developed till the great comet of 1843 appeared, which I also independently discovered, the grandest comet of the nineteenth century except that of 1811. The return of Halley's Comet is going to be an historical astronomical event. Lucky will be the man who first discovers it.

LEWIS SWIFT, F.R.A.S.C.
Marathon, N. Y.

Hannah F. C., Pembroke, Me. When and by whom were the constellations in the heavens named? Where did Job get his knowledge of them? Also Amos?

The earliest known astronomers were the Chaldeans. The Chinese, too, have studied the heavens with science and care for nearly four thousand years, and the first recorded observatory was that built by Hoang-ti in 2608 B.C. Long before the book of Job—probably the oldest book in the Bible—was written, the constellations had been designated by the astronomers of Asia by appropriate names. That some of the ancients took the lights of heaven to be "the gods that govern the world" is unquestionably true. Many of the names by which they are now known are traceable to the Arabians, who were star worshipers. Job, as some authorities hold, was a chieftain of Uz, in Northern Arabia, though others believe him to have been an Israelite. There are no means of knowing who it was that first gave names to the principal constellations.

Reader, Elmira, N. Y. What were the Minnesingers in German history?

They were lyric poets of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, who sang of love and war to entertain the knights and barons. They played their own accompaniments on the viol. The name comes from the German minne, love, and singer, a singer. They were followed in the fourteenth century by the Meistersingers, who were regularly incorporated. "Reynard the Fox" was one of the songs of the Meistersingers.

Robert Shaw Minturn, Treasurer of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, writes:

Permit me to express to you and to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, our very high appreciation of your and their generous support of our Association's work, in the relief and improvement of the poor of New York. It is a great gratification to us that the form of our efforts commands your approval and sympathetic co-operation. The check for $138.25 (contributions from CHRISTIAN HERALD readers), just received, will be the means of relieving an immense amount of suffering.

W. B. S., Germantown, Pa. "The children's Church" is a new and beautiful idea, applicable to any church and all denominations. Y., for details.

The Gospel of the Lilies

By Rev. Dr. Edward O. Guerrant

THE greatest preacher was the simplest. The "common people heard him gladly," and understood him easily. This discourse on the lilies (Matt. 6: 28-30) was his first sermon, his "Inaugural address." In it he states the character of his kingdom, and lays down the laws of its government and the duties of its subjects. He shows its superiority over all that preceded it, and the absolute security and happiness of all its inhabitants.

Multitudes waited on his teaching. He was the "desire of all the nations." For four thousand years a guilty, hopeless world had been expecting a Deliverer. All other helps and hopes had failed. "In the fulness of time" he came to save a lost world; to bring a race of immortals back to God; to restore order and peace to God's kingdom on earth. It was a mission worthy of a God, and only a God could do it. This great sermon on the mountain was his first utterance. He used plain language. He was speaking to plain people. Most of them were poor and unlearned. Their life was a hard one; a struggle for bread, long and sharp. He knew something of it himself. Probably he was in sight of Nazareth, where, for years, he had lived in an humble home and worked as a carpenter. He was speaking to multitudes, who were accustomed to "walk by sight," to depend upon their own arm for a living. The daily inquiry was, "How shall we get bread and clothes for ourselves and children?" They saw nothing beyond the narrow horizon of a hard life, and nothing above the roof of their humble homes.

For years they had been ground beneath the heel of tyrants, and deluded by teachers who taught a false religion, without a Saviour or a hope. They felt the need of something better. This was the occasion.

The object was to teach them, and you, and me, a better way—the divine, the heavenly way. We need it. The old Galilean cry has come down to us—"What shall we eat?" It occupies most of our thoughts and time and energies. He came to show us a better way; to set the world right; to put God back in his place in our lives; to lift up the burdens that have crushed humanity for six thousand years.

He showed them the utter helplessness of man; the utter folly of their thinking more of their clothes than their bodies; more of their food than their souls. Looking down into the valley where beautiful lilies were blooming, he calls their attention to them, and says, "Consider the lilies!"

What a scene! What a sermon! How simple, yet how sublime. He made those lilies; he painted their heavenly colors with his sunlight; he refreshed them with the dew and showers; he dressed them in colors more regal than "Solomon in all his glory." They "neither toil nor spin." No milliner could have made their wardrobe. God only could make it.

He made them and planted them along mountain glen and stream, in field and meadow. He fed and clothed them. The wild lilies have no other provider. God alone cares for them. How well it is done. No human heart or hand can take his place. He planted them where they grow; he selected their home. They grew as he wisely ordered, by stem and leaf and flower. He watered them when thirsty, and fed them when hungry.

They have no care;
They bend their heads before the storm,
And rise to meet the sunshine warm.
God cares for them.
His love is over every one:
He wills their good, his will be done.
He does neglect no single flower;
He makes them rich with sun and shower;
Their song of trust is sweet and clear,
And "he that hath an ear may hear."

You see the lesson. The Maker of the lilies made you; the Lover of the lilies loves you: Will he not clothe and feed you? Are you not worth more than all the lilies? Why, then, be "anxious" about the morrow? Why, then, be afraid to trust God? How unnatural! How unreasonable! How ungrateful! This is the lesson: Trust God like the lilies, and he will take care of you. This is the life of faith, the lily life, the child life, the heavenly life.

Then consider God's prodigality to the lilies. Go into a beautiful garden and examine the flowers. What a wealth of color and shape and perfume. All colors, all beautiful shapes, all exquisite perfumes, The wealth of heaven poured out on earth. No wonder Jesus called heaven "Paradise," the beautiful garden of God. But that lily is only a poor soulless flower. It can never know who feeds it, or made it, or loves it. It can never see or know or enjoy him. You can. This is your God, your Father. Consider what he does for the lilies; then doubt what he will do for you, his child, his image, his loved one. You can know him, see him, love him and enjoy him. How much more then will he do for you. What prodigality of love, and grace, and riches and honor he has for you.

See what he has already done for you. For whom did he make the lilies, and the birds, and the sunshine, and the world? All for you. For whom did Jesus die? To whom are angels ministering? For whom is heaven waiting? All for you.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

Then consider God's resurrection of the lilies. They vanish with the summer, and the snow of winter covers the grave of the lilies, and we imagine they are dead. The wild bees seek them in vain, and the valley is desolate where they bloomed, and the children wonder where they have gone. But God smiles over the landscape with April sun and showers, and the lilies rise from the dead and bloom again. This is the resurrection of the lilies. Does it teach us no lesson? Have we no loved ones beneath the sod and the snow whom we call dead?

An angel form walks o'er the earth
With soft and silent tread,
And bears our best loved friends away,
And then we call them dead.

And will not the God of the lilies smile on them again, and make them rise from the grave and bloom again? He says he will. "Awake and sing, ye that sleep in the dust." Hear him say. "Thy brother shall rise again," and thy mother, and busband and child.

We will consider the lilies, and thank God for the beautiful lessons they teach us. The loving hand that heals the broken lily with divine surgery will bind up the broken heart of his child.

The mighty voice that calls the sleeping lilies from beneath the sod and snow, will call our loved ones from their graves. Blessed resurrection! With beauty beyond all lilies, and life beyond all death, we will receive them again to our rejoicing hearts and homes.

When hard times come, and your heart fails, "consider the lilies how they grow," and take courage. When death comes, and takes your best loved ones away, then "consider the lilies" how they rise, and rejoice that we shall meet them again

In those everlasting gardens,
Where angels walk,
And seraphs are the wardens.

side the time-worn methods of creating interest among the people and started to hold services that attracted the attention of the lukewarm Christian and the nonchurchgoer to the East Baptist Church. The results were gratifying. The church has been enlarged and handsomely furnished. It is thronged on Sunday; the membership is fourteen hundred; that of the Sunday School nearly eleven hundred. The people are not rich, yet the offerings are large.

How was all this interest aroused. Mr. Woolston is an earnest preacher, but he felt that lessons were more deeply impressed if the eye could aid the ear of the people. "He gave lantern sermons." Bible pictures and others that illustrated the points of the discourse were thrown on a screen at the back of the pulpit. The people who came out of curiosity remained as actual Christians in many cases. Even in summer 1,200 came out to the "lantern sermons." He takes various objects to the pulpit to give emphasis to his remarks. Once he carried a baby lion in his arms. Almost every night there is a lecture, prayer-meeting or concert under the auspices of the church or some one of its numerous societies. The sick are visited, the poor helped, and all made to feel the warmth of Christian fellowship. Although Rev. Mr. Woolston has reached the meridian of life, yet he is as active as a young man and working to make his church one of yet wider usefulness.

heeler's seeds are sold on honor." So Elbridge T. Wheeler, Bridgeport, Conn., as- the readers of his catalogue, upon whose cover "Wheeler's 1907 Trial Collection" of fine peerless roses bloom. They are two-year-old field-grown plants, and are delivered anywhere for $1.25. The "New June Pink Tomato" is a wonder of gardening, and cauliflower and cucumbers seem of special merit. Wheeler's "Giant-flowering Nasturtium" will transform an unsightly spot (7 large pkgs. 25 cents) and "Jumbo" pansies are most attractive. Wheeler's fertilizers are first-class.

"A Seed catalogue is a picture of the firm which issues it." Northrup, King & Co's Twenty-third Annual Catalogue of Sterling Seeds contains the above statement, and proceeds to give an excellent showing of everything the garden can grow. Perhaps their specialty of the year is their great variety and choice of onion seed, but melons and the various grains of the Northwest follow closely. A wonderful grain and seed-cleaner, the "Clipper," should be noted. Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

The photograph of "Black Ben" apple trees grown at the Stark Bro.'s nurseries, Lousiana, Mo., prove that the Fayetteville nurseries sell fruit-bearing trees. The annual catalogue is accompanied by many earnest testimonials, which speak for themselves. By much grafting, an ideal apple has been secured in the "King David." Stark's fruit book, The Planting and Culture of Trees and Orchards, should be in every farmer's library.

Park's Floral Guide for 1907 declares that everybody should have the four well-rooted rose plants, which they will send free with every $3 order for seeds and bulbs received during March or April. Watermelons of solid, crimson sweetness are those grown from Buckbee's "Monte Cristo" melon seeds. The Seed and Plant Guide, issued by H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill., contains "An Open Letter to My Neighbors," which they should not fail to read. Beside the fine old standards of the garden, the Rockford Seed Farms have successfully tested a marvelous "Great Cardinal Onion" and a glowing new pepper, the "Great West." 78 cents will buy, prepaid, six strong, healthy carnations, gems of beauty and fragrance.

ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

Has written an interesting article, entitled

"My Conversion to Life Insurance" of which the following is an excerpt:

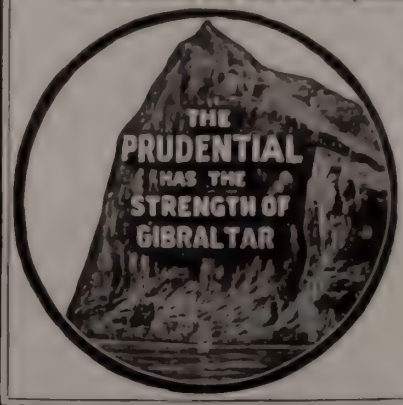
"For a first confident matter, I discovered that Life Insurance has been brought to a science. Every chance has been measured and accounted for; every last possibility eliminated of the company breaking down. The premium Life Insurance as practised by The Prudential for example is mathematically exact and a certainty as the sum of two and two are of making four. Given a policy plus death, the death loss is paid, and that promptly.

True, my doubtful friend, all things of this world are liable to fail or to fade. Crowns rust, thrones decay, and the sponge of time wipes nations from the map. And yet as men use the word, such companies as The Prudential are sure, since they found themselves on investments that are as the blood and sinew of the country. The government must fall before they fall; and the policies they issue, and the promises they make, have all the vital enduring qualities of a government bond.

The Prudential, that Gibraltar of Life Insurance, attracted me. I had heard it best spoken of. Besides, its controlling spirit was Senator Dryden—whose intelligence had been its architect, just as his integrity was and is its cornerstone."



This article, a most interesting and valuable exposition of Life Insurance, should be read from start to finish. A copy of it will be sent free of charge to any reader of this publication who will write.

GOOD NATURED AGAIN

Good Humor Returns with Change to Proper Food

"For many years I was a constant sufferer from indigestion, and nervousness amounting almost to prostration," writes a Montana man.

"My blood was impoverished, the vision was blurred and weak, with moving spots before my eyes. This was a steady daily condition. I grew ill-tempered, and eventually got so nervous I could not keep my books posted, nor handle accounts satisfactorily. I can't describe my sufferings.

Nothing I ate agreed with me, till one day, I happened to notice Grape-Nuts in a grocery store, and bought a package, out of curiosity to know what it was.

"I liked the food from the very first, eating it with cream, and now I buy it by the case and use it daily. I soon found that Grape-Nuts food was supplying brain and nerve force as nothing in the drug line ever had done or could do.

"It wasn't long before I was restored to health, comfort and happiness. Through the use of Grape-Nuts food my digestion has been restored, my nerves are steady once more, my eye-sight is good again, my mental faculties are clear and acute, and I have become so good-natured that my friends are truly astonished at the change. I feel younger and better than I have for 20 years. No amount of money would induce me to surrender what I have gained through the use of Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

After the Jamaica Earthquake

From a Special Correspondent

THERE has been during the past year a steady and gradual deepening of spiritual life in many of the churches of Jamaica, accompanied with a growing concern for personal salvation on the part of very many of our people. This I regard as a part of the general awakening which is passing over many parts of the world, especially in India at the present time.

Towards the close of last year, during some special services, this interest became very intense and large numbers kept coming for salvation in the churches in this part of the island. The earthquake, with its attendant slaughter of so many lives in Kingston, our capital city, has added tremendously to the movement that had already begun, so that at the present time there is a wave of blessing passing over Jamaica, or I should say, many parts of it, such as has not been experienced since 1860-61.

Many doubters have been moved by fear, but vast numbers have become subject to the influences of the Holy Spirit, and their happy faces and clear testimonies show, as they themselves express it, that "they have crossed over the line"—the dividing line that separates the kingdom of darkness from "the Kingdom of the Son of His love." It is very blessed to work under these circumstances.

On February 2d, Dr. Francis E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavor, and his daughter were with us, en route for South America. It was an unusual pleasure and inspiration to meet them, and my people had the benefit of hearing Dr. Clark on the following day. February 2d, you will remember, is the birthday of the Christian Endeavor organization, which has a strong root in Jamaica. This being so we had a photograph taken of the doctor and our inquirer's or catechumen's class, which always meets on Saturday afternoons for instruction. There are now 381 on our roll who are "seeking salvation," though probably two-thirds of the number are already rejoicing in Christ, and are ready to bear their testimony in public to how Christ became their Saviour. Every Friday evening we hold an open-air service, when these young converts are most helpful in telling of the saving power of the living Christ. It is touching, almost irresistible to hear their story. I have sometimes been pitied, by those who do not know our compensations, because my lot is this out-of-the-way corner. But so long as the presence of God is evidently with us, and the seal of his Spirit accompanies the work, I would not wish to be anywhere else.

The picture is taken on my chapel steps, a building which was sadly injured in the hurricane of 1903, and for which you gave me some help. We have just restored it at a cost of $3,200 and are grateful that it has stood the recent earthquake without serious damage. Only minor cracks are left on our walls, the worst being from top to bottom of our sitting-room, which is underneath the chapel where our family of eight reside. On the right of Dr. Clark is the Rev. B. J. Loner, who has just come to my assistance from the Congo, where he has been a missionary for eight years. He is one who helped to bring forward the array of evidence against the cruel practices that have made the regime of King Leopold in that part of the world so repulsive to the Christian conscience. I stand at Dr. Clark's left hand, and the figure to the extreme right, with the hat on, and his little boy in front, is one of my most reliable deacons and helpers.

CALLED HIGHER

Mrs. Henry N. Chappell passed away on April 20, in Vermillion, S. Dak. She was a Christian and was ready to go. She had been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years.

Mr. J. W. Jacoby, of Philadelphia, Pa., died recently, aged fifty-eight years. He is mourned by a wife, three children and an aged, widowed mother. Mr. Jacoby's constant aim was to live as an example of the true believer, and repeatedly stated that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD greatly strengthened his spiritual life.

Rev. Edward Pirineu, a Finnish missionary to his people in the United States, passed away on January 15, from Nasel, Washington. Of him his friends who are left say, "The spirit of our Lord was with him to win souls for Jesus." When his voice failed, and he could no longer preach the Word, his last years were spent in translating the works of Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage and the Rev. C. M. Sheldon into his native tongue, in order that his countrymen might be benefited thereby.

Mrs. Rebecca J. Myers died at Knoxville, Pa., on February 8, aged eighty-seven years. Mrs. Meyers has left the record of an unusually serene and beautiful Christian life, and its influence will strengthen many to whom life's pathway has been made plainer by his example.

Mrs. Mary E. Thompson entered into rest, in Moran, Kans., on January 6, aged sixty-one years. She was converted in childhood, and her Christian faith, love and kindness will never be forgotten by those who knew her best. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was a welcome visitor in her home for many years.

Mrs. George Curle passed peacefully into eternal rest on January 29, 1907, at Mildmay, Ont., Canada, in her sixty-first year. From her early youth, she was identified with the Methodist Church and actively engaged in all branches of its work. Her beautiful Christian life was an inspiration and power for good in the community in which she lived.

cruel forms. And yet the suffering has just begun.

"The missionary hospitals are being filled up with the worst cases. Helpless women with their infants are being rescued and treated; but with some of them disease already has the upper hand.

Viceroy Tuan Fang, of Nanking, having been informed that men in Kiangpeh and Chinkiang were buying young girls from the refugees, issued stringent instructions to keep close watch for these purchasers of human flesh and to punish them to the fullest extent of the law. "The refugees," writes the Viceroy, "have a pitiable excuse to sell their children; but there is no sort of excuse for the villains who purchase them for every other purpose than what is promised to the parents of the children. The sale of children must be stopped at all costs, and those rescued from the clutches of the sharks, must be sent back to their parents and the buyers severely punished."

The Christian's Sabbath*

CARE for the welfare of the human race was never more clearly manifested than in the provision God made of the Sabbath. What a dreary round of labor our lives would have been if this provision had not been made. Even those who do not keep the day as God intended it to be kept, have reason to be thankful for the institution. Its physical value is demonstrated beyond a doubt by statistics of all kinds. The man who disregards the day inevitably loses his powers and dies before his time. The Sabbath-keeping nation is of a higher type, with citizens more intellectual, physically more vigorous, and more enduring. Man needs the weekly rest-day to break up the monotony of his life, to give his powers time to relax and renew their strength. God knew the need and provided for it.

Man's spiritual nature requires the weekly rest. He would be in danger of forgetting God if he did not have it. In the rush and whirl of worldly cares he must give his mind wholly to worldly concerns, otherwise he would fall behind in the race. But the Sabbath calls a halt and gives him time to consider his higher nature and its needs. It saves him from becoming an animal, and reminds him that he is a man with the capacity for becoming a son of God. So the spirit as well as the body craves the Sabbath and benefits by observing it.

Literalists, of whom there are many in every generation, are striving to break up our weekly custom in these days. If they succeeded, part of the world would keep Saturday, part Sunday and the greater part, hesitating between the two days, would observe no day at all. It is always dangerous to break down a good habit unless we are sure that a better one will come in its place. The Jews kept Saturday and still keep it, to commemorate the rest of God in creation (see Ex. 20: 11). They made it a burden with puerile ordinances and prohibitions which Christ ridiculed. The Gentile followers of Christ were set free from the slavery and when an attempt was made to force it upon them it was resisted. The Apostles told them what part of the law they must observe (Acts 15: 28, 29) and in that list the Sabbath had no place. Paul expressly told them to disregard the laws of the day (Col. 2: 16). But the day was too precious to fall into abeyance. The weekly rest was needed and there was a perpetual anniversary in the resurrection of Christ. That day was held sacred as the best of all festivals. Christians met on it to celebrate the Lord's Supper and gradually the whole day was kept holy, a memorial of an event dearer than the creation.

HER PEACE-OFFERING

By JEAN C. GULICK

"WHY, Lucy, what have you been doing? You look as dirty as a little beggar."

The question was addressed to a small girl, who, hot and dusty in appearance, was wiping the perspiration from her brow, as she paused at the door of her mother's sitting-room.

"We've been riding Mr. Goodrough's horses in from the farm, and having the greatest fun; but that horrid old Miss Travers! I just hate her." Lucy paused, waxing eloquent in her indignation.

"But what has Miss Travers done?" asked Mrs. Layton.

"Well, she is just as hateful as she can be," continued Lucy, her eyes filling with tears. "We only ate the pears off the tree by the window yesterday, and—"

"But that was stealing, dear."

"Well! she never uses them and we left her two, anyway."

Mrs. Layton smiled involuntarily.

"And this morning when Betty and Nan and I went over to apologize and offer to pay for the pears, she scolded just dreadfully, and drove us out of the yard."

"Perhaps she thought you had come to take the chickens or the cat," suggested her mother.

"But we told her, 'we've come to apologize!'"

"If she will not accept your apology, dear, you will just have to be very patient and as kind as you can, and show Miss Travers by your actions in the future that you really are sorry. She is old, dear, and we must make allowances for her. She has no little girls; maybe she does not understand them. But you must not hate any one, my daughter, for that is just as bad as stealing."

"I'll try, mother," and Lucy gave her mother an affectionate kiss as she left the room. A few moments later Lucy was seated at her desk, while with knitted brow she wrote:

"MY DEAR MISS TRAVERS: The Bible says, 'If thine enemy smite thee on the one cheek, turn to him the other also.' Mother says that every one has a great many burdens to bear; I think that you are my burden, but I am going to try to be brave, and bear you patiently. I am sorry that I took the pears. We left you two. Please tell me if you can forgive me. Respectfully,

"LUCY LAYTON."

She skipped over to the letter-box with a light heart, repeating over and over in her mind, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

"That's what mother says that means," she mused, half aloud.

After waiting in vain for a reply, a week later Lucy again took her pen in hand.

"MY DEAR MISS TRAVERS: The Bible says, 'The way of the transgressor is hard.' I think I am finding that out. I wish you would forgive me. Martha says (she is my nurse) I ought to treat you with contempt, and that I am hurting my dignity by writing to you again, but I feel more encouraged every time.

"Yours patiently, LUCY LAYTON."

Lucy waited again, but still no answer came. She pondered the matter carefully, and at length one Saturday afternoon, when her mother had gone to preparatory service and she knew that Miss Travers would be there too, she carried the large market-basket upstairs to her room. One by one she stowed away in its depths her little treasures, all of which were so dear to her. A tear splashed upon her beloved rag-doll, Hannah, as she laid her in the basket. Gazing about the room a sigh escaped her. "I should rather not, but I think I had better take Fuss-and-Feathers," she said, as she took the bird-cage from its hook in the bay window.

"There's just one thing left," she mused, "but I must give all or it will not be like the widow's mite." She took a shining gold piece from its hiding place in her bureau drawer and slipping it into an envelope, wrote upon it:

"MY DEAR MISS TRAVERS: I can never write you another note, because if you will not forgive me now, my heart will be broken. I have done everything I could think of, and prayed for you every night. I have brought you all the treasures I have in the world; so you see I can not do anything more. The money is to pay for the pears. The gifts are for a peace-offering. Very lovingly,

"LUCY LAYTON."

"Martha," said Lucy upon entering the kitchen, will you help me carry these things up to Miss Travers? You take the basket and the baby-coach, while I carry Fuss-and-Feathers and the rocking-chair.

"Now," said Lucy, in a businesslike tone, "Martha, if you will hang the bird-cage on the top branch. Yes, I'm going to trim it like a Christmas tree," she said, in answer to Martha's look of mute inquiry.

"Bless me, darling, I don't see how she could resist such a sacrifice," said Martha, as she wiped her eyes. Lucy gave one parting look at the tree, whose every branch was laden with toys, dolls, books, pictures, ribbons, sashes and everything imaginable that could belong to a small girl.

"Here's a note," said Martha, handing Lucy an envelope, while the family were assembled at the supper-table. Lucy dropped her fork in her excitement and flushed deeply.

"Oh, mother!" she exclaimed, "she's forgiven me! and she wishes me to come to see her. I'm just the happiest girl in the world. Now I can understand the verse: 'There's rejoicing among the angels of heaven over one sinner who repenteth,'" said Lucy to her mother that evening, as she knelt to say her evening prayers.

SEA-ROVER'S REMEDY

Postum Coffee and its Power to Rebuild.

The young daughter of a government officer whose duties keep him almost constantly on board ship between this country and Europe, tells an interesting tale of the use her father made of Nature's food remedy to relieve an attack of malarial fever:

"Father recently returned from a long sea-trip, bed-ridden and emaciated from an attack of malarial chills and fever," she writes. "In such cases people usually dose themselves with medicines, and we were surprised when he, instead of employing drugs, proceeded to devote himself exclusively to Postum Food Coffee, of which he has long been fond. He used two or more cups at each meal, drinking it very hot, and between meals quenched his fever-engendered thirst at all hours of the day and night from a supply we kept ready in the water-cooler. For several days his only drink and sometimes his only food was Postum Coffee, hot or cold, according to the moment's fancy.

"Within a day or two his improvement was noticeable, and within a week he was a well man again, able to resume his arduous occupation.

"He first began to drink Postum Food Coffee several years ago, as a remedy for insomnia, for which he found it invaluable, and likes it so much and finds it so beneficial that he always uses it when he is at home where he can get it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. While this man uses Postum as a remedy, it is in no sense a medicine, but only food in liquid form. But this is nature's way and "There's a reason." How 20,000 Chicks were Hatched in 3 MONTHS

Hatched in my Model Incubators and raised in Model Colony Brooders. This is a bit of history of the work done at the Model Farm, which was started in April of last spring as a money making business. The use of my Model equipment will enable you to do as well. Let me tell you how. Catalog of Model Equipment mailed upon request. The Model Farm is owned by the Model Poultry Company, of which I am President. It is a co-operative as well as an educational organization, in addition to being a money-maker. You ought to be acquainted with the work we are doing. We are the largest poultry raisers in the world, and have more growing chicks today than any other five farms combined together. Ask for descriptive literature. Send two dimes for a copy of my book "Eggs, Broilers and Roasters." It gives the cost of production in all branches of the poultry business. It gives the market quotations, week by week, averaged for three years. Its tables show when a chick hatched any week in the year can be marketed as a broiler or roaster chicken, and the profit. Also profit in egg production and how best to secure them. Write today.

He was Dead and is Alive

By Mrs. M. Baxter

ALONE in his death, Jesus must be alone in his burial too. The women who had followed him from Galilee truly "followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how the body was laid," but it was only to fall back upon their earthly conceptions and their earthly resources. They returned to busy themselves in preparing spices and ointments to keep the body of the Son of God from corruption. Mistaken women! They did their best, but how little they had understood their Lord!

And we? As we yield ourselves to our God, our life is one long disappointment on human lines, one death and resurrection on Divine lines. All we are and all we have, all we do and all we think, has to pass through death, that the flesh may, like the corn of wheat which falls into the ground, die to its own goodliness and power, and that Christ, "the hope of glory," may be formed in us (Gal. 4: 19; Col. 1: 27).

The women rested on the Sabbath after the crucifixion, but very early the first day of the week they came to the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared. But early as they were, one had preceded them, who brought nothing in her hand. Mary Magdalene had waited neither for spices nor for the dawning of the day, she "came while it was yet dark unto the sepulchre" (John 20: 1; Mark 16: 9). Was it she who anointed him for his burial? Was she the same with the sister of Martha and Lazarus? This is not clear; in any case, Mary had no interest outside Jesus' grave, until he made himself known to her as the risen One.

The women found to their amazement that the stone at the door of the sepulchre was rolled away. They had expected to find a stone between them and a dead Christ, and had said among themselves, "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" They entered in, but they found neither the stone nor the dead Christ whose body they had come to anoint. They looked for what they had left two days before; they were on human lines still.

We have to deal with him who is "the First and the Last, and the Living One" (Rev. 1: 17, R.V.). If we can trust our Shepherd when he leads us through the valley of the shadow of death in our personal experience, in our work for God, our family, or social relations, we shall find we have no longer to do with a dead Christ but a living, mighty one, to whom all things are possible. It was no longer permitted to those women of Galilee to minister to Jesus as they had done; their spices and ointments, the doing and serving, the busy Martha spirit, were all out of place. They were perplexed. But God does not leave his true children long in perplexity. He sent heavenly messengers with a heavenly message. "Why seek ye him that liveth among the dead? He is not here, but is risen; remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying, The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his words."

Until now these words of Christ had gone for nothing. Oh, are there not many who live in perplexity and poverty of soul, vainly seeking a dead Christ, to whom they fain would minister? In the past, his word had come to them in power, but they were not obedient "to the heavenly vision" (Acts 26: 19), the impression faded away, and for years they have walked afar off, mingling much of self-effort, much of the flesh, with their devotion, because they have not "endured as seeing him who is invisible." Why seek ye him that liveth among the dead? In resurrection everything is changed: "Thou sowest not that body that shall be."

8 Fine Healthy Rose Plants FREE

TO introduce our popular woman's magazine, THE LADIES' WORLD, into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, we offer for a limited period only, absolutely free with a year's subscription at 50 Cents (the regular price), a set of 8 Fine, Ever-Blooming Tea and Hardy Roses, all choice varieties, as follows:

1 Bridesmaid. A beautiful rich Dark Pink Tea Rose. A very free bloomer, easily grown, and very desirable for summer bedding outdoors.

1 The Bride. A mammoth, ever-blooming Cream-White Tea Rose, of exquisite form and texture. Equally valuable for either summer or winter flowering. A strong, healthy grower, and a constant bloomer. One of the largest white roses known, the flowers being very double.

1 Mrs. Ben R. Cant. A brilliant Red Tea Rose. Flowers round, full and double. Remarkable for its robust habit and profuse manner in which it blooms from early summer until late fall. A garden rose, especially fine in autumn.

1 Clothilde Soupert. A superb White Tea Rose, whose flowers are borne in clusters all over the bush, being large, full and double, and deliciously sweet. Noted for its compact, vigorous habit and profusion of bloom. Grows rapidly and is loaded with flowers during the entire season. Perfectly hardy.

1 Wellesley. A great New Hybrid Pink Tea Rose. A very vigorous grower, free flowering, and possesses fine keeping qualities when cut

1 Philadelphia Rambler. The most magnificent Crimson Climbing Rose in existence. Blooms earlier than Crimson Rambler, with color deeper, flowers larger and perfectly double. Very free in both growth and bloom. Flowers borne in clusters covering the whole bush. It is perfectly hardy.

1 Star of Lyon. A lovely Yellow Tea Rose which blooms in the greatest profusion, and each bud is a perfect gem. The flowers are large, double and very fragrant. It is perfectly hardy with ordinary winter protection.

1 Silver King. An ever-blooming pure Snow-White Tea Rose. A vigorous grower, with heavy foliage—a free bloomer, the flowers being large, perfect and double, and very fragrant. Valuable for outdoors. Hardy with protection.

The Eight Rose Plants described above, comprising our Premium Collection, are grown by one of the largest and most reputable rose growers in the United States. They are not cheap, common roses, but well-known standard varieties. We send strong, healthy, well-rooted, 1-year-old plants, warranted true to name and color. They are carefully protected in the packing, and are shipped, prepaid, from the greenhouses where they are grown, directly to our subscribers, thus receiving but one handling, and are guaranteed to reach their destination in good order.

A Remarkable Career Ended

WHEN John Alexander Dowie, founder of the Christian Catholic Church, and of Zion City, passed away at his home on Saturday, the ninth of this month, a career ended that had been watched with interest by the people of more than one continent. It is probable that in the future, when the ill feeling, caused by Mr. Dowie's ungovernable and unfortunate outbursts of temper, has died away, that even the most bitter of his former opponents will not deny that mingled with his extravagant religious assumptions, there were some elements of greatness; that his mind conceived great things, and, before his physical and mental impairment, he was able to carry these plans to a successful conclusion. Probably for some time before he made his startling declaration that he was the reincarnation of Elijah, his mind had become unbalanced. He died in the darkness of mental affliction, his mind filled with shadows and imaginary dangers.

Mr. Dowie's career was one of kaleidoscopic changes. He went from one great scheme to another, and always successfully, until he made his great crusade to New York, when his good fortune seemed to leave him. He was a Scotchman, born in Edinburgh, May 25, 1837. He lived there until he was thirteen years old, when his parents removed to Adelaide, Australia. From early boyhood he showed a great fondness for books, especially those of a religious nature. His family were Presbyterians of the old Covenanting type, and the young man was a great "sermon taster" of the preachers of his church. The family was not well off in this world's goods, so young Dowie became a clerk in a grocery store in Adelaide. He worked hard, studied evenings, and saved his money. This went on for seven years, when he had saved enough money to enable him to leave the grocer's shop and study for the ministry, a goal for which he had been striving ever since he became interested in books.

He left Australia and went back to Edinburgh. He soon became noted as a bright student of theology.

Completing his theological studies, he returned to Australia prepared for active work. His first call was to the pulpit of the Manly Congregational Church in Sydney. His earnestness of manner and finished delivery in preaching soon attracted attention, and his fame began to spread beyond the confines of his own parish. He was called soon to the Collegiate Church in Newton, near Sydney.

A few years later, in 1878, he left regular church work in his own denomination and branched out for himself. In Melbourne he built a "popular tabernacle." It was at this time that he began to advocate some of the peculiar ideas that were such a feature of his teaching at Chicago.

After some years he decided to change his field of labor to Great Britain. He came by way of San Francisco and decided to remain for a time at least in this country. He settled in Chicago in 1893, and built a small wooden tabernacle near the entrance to the World's Fair Grounds. His somewhat eccentric methods advertised him and his sect, and St. Paul's Church, a large edifice, was purchased to accommodate the increasing congregations, but this was outgrown before it was used thrice. Central Music Hall was then hired. Sunday after Sunday it was filled to the doors. He started a bank and a publishing house. He was sometimes mobbed on his trips to nearby towns for attacking in his sermons the prominent physicians. As a protection he organized the now famous Zion Guards.

Mr. Dowie found that his plans were outgrowing Chicago, and founded Zion City, forty miles to the north. The new city was dedicated on May 30, 1901. Parks were laid out, handsome houses built and factories established. The value of the entire property was several millions. Two years later he and his followers made their famous trip to New York City. It ended in most dismal failure. Thousands crowded the meetings at first, but left as soon as the novelty wore off. Dowie returned to Chicago, and from that time he was constantly in trouble.

The account of the dramatic struggle between the deposed leader and the "insurgents" at Zion City is of too recent occurrence to need recapitulation here. He had accumulated great wealth through his system of tithes, and this for the most part was taken from his control and put under the charge of officials elected by residents of Zion City and members of its church. The empty title of Spiritual Overseer and a residence at Shiloh House remained to him. A year ago he had a stroke of paralysis, and he was a physical wreck until the end. The hallucinations to which he had been subject for a number of years grew upon him, and he died calling upon the Zion Guards to drive away his imaginary foes. Thousands of people attended Dr. Dowie's funeral, many pressing forward to touch the hem of his pastoral gown in which the body was robed. The closing of the leader's life will probably mean the end of Zion City as a religious institution.

Victorious Effort*

GRACE attains its triumph in the perfecting of the individual soul and its collective triumph in the glory of the perfected church of Christ. There could be no better evidence of its power. It is poor material on which it works. The human soul is a strange mixture of good and evil. Studying the character of a child, the aged Christian, who knows what life is and what the world is, cannot avoid a shock as he sees in the character even of the most innocent child, the germs of the evil rampant in the world. Left to itself, the selfishness, the greed, the anger and the fleshly passions he recognizes in the child will develop and the sweet innocent may grow up a corrupt, malevolent, sensual man. The germs are all there and the child shows it in his conduct. A watchful, tactful parent may do much to restrain them. They are easily checked, when the child loves the father and the mother and is obedient and docile. But even then the parent is sadly conscious, that when home care is removed and the temptations of the world exert their influence, there is still in the child's nature fuel that the fire may ignite. How much more dangerous is the condition of the child who has had no Christian training.

Christ draws a sad picture of the heart. Out of it, he said (Matt. 15: 19), proceed all kinds of evil. The best of us knows that there are in him the capacities for these things. The heart is like a powder magazine, on which the fires of temptation may exert an explosive power. What is the remedy? What is the protection? The answer God gave to Paul is the secret: "My grace is sufficient for thee." It is encouraging to know that God is on the side of good. He desires our development. He is anxious that we should not revert to the animal stage of being. He would kindle our ambition. He has tried to show us what we may become. To the man who ranges himself on his side, he says you are a son of God, and it doth not yet appear what you shall be. There are mountain tops that you cannot see, but you will see them as you ascend. The way is long and arduous. There is opposition within and without to overcome; but the attainment is worth the struggle. "My grace is sufficient for thee."

The City of Sultans' Tombs

IMAGINE yourself on a tiny, unseaworthy boat bound for Moudania, Broussa's seaport, on which Turks, Greeks and Armenians are crouching, hamals (porters) pushing on with big loads on their backs, calling out "varda" (give way), boatmen around screaming, and over all a dense fog settling down, and you will realize the joy of hearing some one say in your tongue, "Americans, are you not?" The difficulties of the trip seem then to vanish for you in the companionship of your countrymen.

Broussa is about twenty miles from its seaport, Moudania. It is located on the foothills of Olympus (not the famous Olympus, but no doubt in some way connected with it). The city was captured in 1326 by Orkhan, the Turkish Sultan, and was until 1453 the capital of the Ottoman Empire.

Among the Pottery Sellers of Broussa

It is a city of mosques, the largest being that of Onlou Jami. It is said that there is a mosque for every day in the year. The city lies over the base of three hills, the outer limit being chekirge, where the natural hot springs baths are. In spring time, the hotels there are crowded with people who have come for the baths. There are both iron and sulphur springs, and the water of one bath is said to pass over beds of silver ore.

Six of the sultans are buried in Broussa. The tombs of some have rich tiling inside, especially that of the Chelibe Sultan (gentleman sultan). He has both a tomb and a mosque. A tomb of another sultan is interesting because of its relics and the simple grave, which is open to the heavens. He requested that he should be buried where the rains of heaven would fall upon him, so there is an opening above the grave in the roof of the tomb, and grass is always growing on his grave.

Right in the heart of the city a school has been established for training native girls. It is under the auspices of the American Board and is supported by the Woman's Missionary Board of the Pacific. It is having a hard struggle for existence, however, owing to the lack of sufficient means to pay the necessary expenses. At present it is in rented buildings, some of them old and unsuitable. The dormitories are unheated, and the girls are obliged to wash, cold mornings, at the fountain and comb their hair in a room one side of which is entirely open to the weather. There are at present forty-one boarders and forty-five day scholars, thirty-five of whom go to the kindergarten. The teacher is an Armenian, trained in Germany. There are two American teachers, Miss Powers, the principal, and Miss Allen, both daughters of missionaries. There are also six Armenian teachers, including the matron, and an Armenian master comes in for the higher classes in Armenian. There are two departments, one for Armenian girls and one for Greek. English is the language of the school, and before the girls graduate they can read, write and speak it quite well. The aim is to give the girls a good common school education, train them in housework, teach needlework, plain sewing and dressmaking, and above all to build up Christian character.

I Am the Paint Man

2 Full Gallons Free to Try—6 Months Time to Pay

I Guarantee Freight Charges.

I AM the paint man. I have a new way of manufacturing and selling paints. It's unique—it's better. It revolutionized the paint business of this country last year.

Before my plan was invented paint was sold in two ways — either ready-mixed or the ingredients were bought and mixed by the painter. Ready-mixed paint settles on the shelves, forming a sediment at the bottom of the can. The chemical action in ready-mixed paint, when standing in oil, eats the life out of the oil. The oil is the very life of all paints.

Paint made by the painter cannot be properly made on account of lack of the heavy mixing machine.

My paint is unlike any other paint in the world. It is ready to use, but not ready-mixed.

My paint is made to order after each order is received, packed in hermetically sealed cans with the very day it is made stamped on each can by my factory inspector.

I ship my thick pigment, which is double strength, freshly ground, in separate cans, and in another can, I ship the pure, old process Linseed Oil—the kind you used to buy years ago. Any child can stir them together.

I sell my paint direct from my factory to user you pay no dealer or middleman profits.

My $100.00 Cash Guarantee

I guarantee, under $100 Cash Forfeit, that the paint I am offering you does not contain water, benzine, whiting, or barytes—and that my Oils is pure, old-fashioned linseed oil and contains absolutely no foreign substance whatever.

I guarantee the freight on six gallons or over.

My paint is so good that I make this wonderfully fair test offer:

When you receive your shipment of paint, you can use two full gallons—that will cover 600 square feet of wall—two coats.

If, after you have used that much of my paint, you are not perfectly satisfied with it in every detail, you can return the remainder of your order and the two gallons will not cost you one penny.

No other paint manufacturer ever made such a liberal offer.

It is because I manufacture the finest paint, put up in the best way, that I can make this offer.

I go even further. I sell all of my paint on six months' time, if desired.

This gives you an opportunity to paint your buildings when they need it, and pay for the paint at your convenience.

Back of my paint stands my Eight-Year officially signed, iron-clad Guarantee.

For further particulars regarding my plan of selling, and complete color card of all colors, send a postal to O. L. Chase, St. Louis, Mo. I will send my paint book—the most complete book of its kind ever published—absolutely free. Also my instruction book entitled "This Little Book Tells How to Paint" and copy of my 8-year guarantee.

O. L. CHASE, The Paint Man.

WHO HAVE NEVER SEEN THE SUN!

ARTLING, YET TRUE is this statement. More astounding is the fact that this vast number of people are not confined in the Catacombs of China Siberian mines; but it applies to every man, woman child living in this glorious country of ours who not provided themselves with a dark glass, or, it is better, a solar telescope. Telescopes heretofore ded with a Solar Eye Piece or dark lens for sun observations have cost from $8.00 up. We have produced a Large Solar Telescope, which for $1.00 will enable people to correctly see the sun for the first time. Previously you have only seen the rays of light, or sunbeams.

PLANETARY CONFIGURATIONS

There will be Four Eclipses in 1907, two of the Sun and two of the Moon. A transit of Mercury over the Sun's disk November 14th (the Sun rising with the planet on its disk). An Occultation or Eclipse of Neptune September 30th, of Uranus November 9th.

A telescope of considerable power will be necessary to view these phenomena satisfactorily.

The Earth will pass through the plane of Saturn's rings on April 12th and October 4th, where they will become practically invisible.

SUN SPOTS. They are dark patches from 1,000 to 100,000 miles in diameter. They last from a few hours to many months. They are known to be hollow cavities in the photosphere, depressed several hundred miles below the general level. Their cause and the precise theory of their formation are still uncertain. At intervals they are very abundant; then there are periods when they almost vanish. Scientists claim that there is a connection between the spottedness of the Sun's surface and the number and the violence of our electric storms and auroras. How interesting to watch these changes and learn to foretell their effects upon the weather!

Using the Eye Piece of an Excelsior Telescope as a Microscope

HISTORY OF THE TELESCOPE

The telescope seems to have originated in Holland early in the Seventeenth Century. It is quite certain that prior to 1608 telescopes were unknown. From 1670 to 1850 a considerable number of telescopes were made over 2 feet in diameter. The largest of these was "The Lick," of the Lick Observatory, California, which was 36 inches in diameter and 57 feet long.

Our own Excelsior Telescope was first brought out in 1888, but the Excelsior Telescope of 1907, with its Solar Eye Piece, with 21 years of work, study and improvement, is a far superior instrument to any of our previous models.

GIVE THE BOY A TELESCOPE! Interest him in the study of the planets. LET HIM EXPERIMENT with lenses and reflectors. SOME GENIUS WILL HARNESS THE SUN some day and with his warm rays heat our dwellings and generate the steam that runs our factories. IT MAY BE YOUR BOY, if he is given a few ideas now to think about.

MR. C. M. MEDLEY, of Duluth, Minn., who purchased one of these Telescopes, says they are superior to anything he expected; that with it he could discern boats on the Great Lakes at a distance of 5 to 10 miles, and in clear weather he could read the names of steamers and other craft at a distance of one half mile away.

Questions and Answers

NOTICE

FROM this date, our undertaking to answer by mail, letters in which ten cents are enclosed for reply, is withdrawn. Letters asking for information of general interest will be answered in The Mail-Bag as speedily as possible. In some cases where, in our judgment, good may result from a personal answer, we will reply by mail. We cannot answer inquiries of the nature of conundrums nor those written for the purpose of argument.

Mr. Henry H. West, Fremont, O. Is there any record of a Sunday School superintendent and organizer who began work in 1853 and continued till 1907 without a vacation of three months in any one year?

This means fifty-four years' continuous service as superintendent. We should be pleased to hear from any reader who knows of a longer record.

X. X., Shoshone, Idaho. Explain the method of conferring degrees B.D., Ph.D. and D.D. Are these degrees conferred on account of graduation in a line of study, or on account of honor? If on account of study, what subjects would one require to graduate in in order to have B.D. or Ph.D. or D.D. conferred on them?

The degree of B.D., Bachelor of Divinity, is conferred on students who have graduated at some theological school entitled by their charter from the State to confer such a degree. Ph.D., Doctor of Philosophy, is usually attained by several years of post-graduate study after the candidate has received the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts. It is sometimes given as an honorary degree to a man who has distinguished himself in literature, D.D., Doctor of Divinity, is an honorary degree given to distinguished clergymen.

A. C., Washington County, N. Y. How large is the Island of Cyprus?

It is one hundred and forty-eight miles long and about forty miles wide.

F. B., Peoria, Ill. Our church is deeply interested in your great life-saving work in China. You have many helpers here. Will you kindly state what is the nationality and religious belief of the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD?

Dr. Klopsch is a native of Germany, born there in 1852. His parents on both sides were Lutherans and his grandfathers were preachers of that church. He came to the United States as a child. In his young manhood, he united with the Methodist Church, in which for many years he has been a local preacher.

A. L., South Fork, Pa. Please tell me what the Saviour meant, when he told his disciples to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves?"

The wisdom of the serpent might be interpreted to mean discretion in danger, tact, diplomacy, adroitness in expedients, and the harmlessness of doves would keep them from resorting to sinful measures or impure expedients to escape danger.

Writing of the result of the Smoot case, Mrs. J. R. D., Ithaca, N. Y., says:

All honor to Senator Burrows, of Michigan, and the other noble men who dared to stand [illegible] the last for God and our native land. M[illegible]a is a great evil, for it enslaves not onl[illegible]lies but the souls of its victims. And w[illegible]'l it religion.

A. S. K., Laceyville, Pa. How does the [illegible]d and silver coined in the mints get into circulation?

By payments to the vast number of government employees and for government work; also by payments to banks, etc.

Reader, Payette, Idaho. 1. What is the address of Winston Churchill, candidate for Governor of New Hampshire? 2. Was a record kept of the names of those Pilgrims that came over in the Mayflower? If so, how can I secure the names?

Winston Churchill lives at Cornish, [illegible]. 2. Yes. Governor Bradford, who [illegible] the Mayflower, and who was for [illegible] governor of the colony, wrote a [illegible] of the coming of the Pilgrims to [illegible]try, and gave a list of all the [illegible]s on the Mayflower, and also how [illegible] the original company were living thirty years later. The history, entitled Bradford's History of Plimoth Plantation, has been republished by the State of Massachusetts, and may be purchased of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Cost, $1.

W. D., Rumford Falls, Me. What is the original meaning of the word crinoline?

It is a French word meaning stuff made of crin, hair.

Inquirer, California. What is the condition of the North, East and Western States as to prohibition?

Only three States—Maine, Kansas, and N. Dakota—have what is known as "State Prohibition," while all but four States have what are known as "Local Option Laws." These are only another form of prohibition, and are limited in extent in certain sections of the States, where the citizens annually or semi-annually vote the liquor out. REV. H. WOOD.

D. G., Plainfield, N. J. How long have cucumbers been used as food?

They were mentioned by Virgil and other classical Italian poets. It is recorded that they were brought into England from the Netherlands in 1538.

R. A. F., Bentonville, Va. 1. If people first believed the earth to be a vast plain, with four corners and four sides, when did they first find out that it was round? 2. What is the meaning of this passage of Scripture: "There are seven kings, five are fallen, and one is and the other is not yet come" (Revelation 17 : 10)?

1. Nicolas Copernicus (1473-1543), in his De Revolutionibus Orbium, put forth the propositions (1) that the universe is spherical; (2) that the earth is a sphere; (3) that earth and sea make one globe. Galileo also taught the earth's sphericity. It is uncertain whether any of the earlier astronomers held this opinion, although it may reasonably be inferred that some did. 2. The seven monarchies arrayed against God's people were Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Greece, Medo-Persia, Rome, and another, supposed by commentators to be the Germanic-Sclavonic empire. The first five had already fallen. Rome was still existent and powerful, and the last had not yet been developed.

H. M., Colorado. 1. Who discovered the Delaware River, and where does its name come from? 2. Where and when was the first settlement made within the boundaries of the present State of Delaware?

1. Henry Hudson discovered the Delaware River on August 28, 1609. The river is named after Lord De La Ware, Governor of Virginia, who entered the mouth of the river in 1610. 2. The first settlement was made by David Petersen de Vries, at Hoorn-Kill, now Lewis, just inside the entrance to Delaware Bay. He called the place Swanendael.

Emma S., Covington, Ky. In a recent address here, it was said that Washington was the richest American of his day, and was as fond of money as any of our modern millionaires. What was the extent of Washington's fortune?

To a considerable estate which he inherited from his father and brother (including the Mount Vernon property), he added by marriage much more, and was enabled to live in the dignified style [illegible] fitting a person of his rank and position [illegible] those early days. At no time, however, did his estate greatly exceed £40,000 ster[illegible]ing ($200,000).

Mrs. B. M. P., Rosemary, N. C. I should be glad of some information upon the life and character of Nancy Stair. How much of Elinor M. Lane's book is true to history?

Nancy Stair's father was a minor poet and friend of Robert Burns. Mrs. Lane's delineation of Burns is unnecessarily harsh; read Carlyle's Essay on Burns for a fair portrayal. Nancy Stair is a tender memorial to the beautiful character of a young poetess of the latter half of t[illegible] eighteenth century, whose songs are s[illegible] sung among the Highlands of Scotland.

W. D., Chester, W. Va. As the sun is furth[illegible] from us in summer than in winter, why do [illegible] experience the greatest heat in summer?

The sun's rays strike more directly t[illegible] face of the planet in these northern la[illegible]tudes. Get any elementary book [illegible] astronomy for full explanations.

Elmer B. N., Canandaigua, N. Y. What is t[illegible] most enlightened modern opinion as to t[illegible] probable site of Eden?

The greater number of eminent Biblic[illegible] scholars, travelers and explorers incline [illegible] Babylonia. Others, of almost equa[illegible] authority, regard Armenia as the true sit[illegible] Still others hold that the Paradise of ou[illegible] first parents was in the country about t[illegible] Caspian Sea, in Syria, in Bactria, Indi[illegible] Cashmere, Ceylon, Cabul, &c.

A. W. F., Duluth, Minn. What is being done abo[illegible] the distress in Russia?

A Relief Committee has been organise[illegible] in New York and is doing good servic[illegible] Russia has made no official appeal, and d[illegible] clines to admit officially the existence [illegible] famine conditions. The government ha[illegible] decided to issue a loan of $40,000,00[illegible] expressly for relief purposes. Still th[illegible] suffering is very great.

Civic Reception to General Booth in City Hall, Toronto

GENERAL BOOTH, the veteran founder of the Salvation Army, is now on his fifth Canadian campaign. On reaching Toronto he was accorded a public welcome, and a civic address was presented by the Mayor at the City Hall, where thousands gathered to greet the old warrior of the Cross.

Miscellaneous

J. H. R., Durand, Wis. We are unable to supply the information. It will be necessary for you to write to the Secretaries of State, of all the States, to get information that would be authentic.

C. C., Cortland, O. Richard Carvel was written by Winston Churchill, the American author. Write to the Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C., for information about the two-cent postage rate.

J. H. C., Stockbridge, Mass. A majority is more than half of the whole. A plurality is the difference between one candidate's vote and that of the next lower candidate where there are more than two in the contest.

A. B., Dale, N. Dak. 1. Marriages between persons of different religious beliefs usually result unhappily. 2. We certainly do not regard Joseph Smith as a prophet. He is held by the orthodox Christian world to be an impostor.

J. E. P., Dayton, O. The church founded at Jamestown by the first colonists was Episcopalian. We believe the statement made in regard to the number of Episcopalians who signed the Declaration of Independence to be fairly accurate.

Mrs. McB., Washington, Pa. God's power is not shortened that he cannot save. He still pardons and heals. (See Psa. 103:3). We see no reason for criticising others because they happen to differ with us in non-essentials, if they hold fast to the great essential truths of the Gospel.

M. M. P., Butler, Minn. A "righteous indignation" against such a sin as you describe is not necessarily jealousy. One would be more than human to pass it by calmly. Yet even under such circumstances, and while fearlessly condemning the sin, a Christian will not cherish a spirit of revenge.

M. M. K., New York. 1. On high spiritual grounds a lie is never justifiable. We advise you to get a phamphlet by H. C. Trumbull which discusses the whole subject on scriptural grounds. 2. It is difficult to see any material benefit to be gained from reaching the North Pole. Its discovery might settle some disputed scientific questions.

J. F. R., Scranton, Pa. Marriage among Christians during the time of the Roman Emperors was according to the rites of the early church, from which the Catholic Church developed as we now know it. The massacre of St. Bartholomew was ordered by Catherine de Medici, mother of the French King. She was a Catholic and wished for the extermination of the Huguenots on both religious and political grounds.

Appreciates the Premiums

The "Worth While" Library has been received, and I want to say that it is rightly named. I received the two "Companion Pictures" some time ago and think very much of them. I have been a subscriber for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the past seventeen or eighteen years, and I would part with any other of the many papers we take rather than it. MRS. C. B. LAMKIN.

Homes Surrounded by the High Water

THE GREAT SPRING FLOODS

ENICE, City of the Sea, has little water in her canal-like streets, compared with the floods that have swept through the thoroughfares of Pittsburg, Cincinnati and other towns and cities in lvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky. The e done will amount to many millions, but much loss cannot be estimated in cold dollars and cents. eblotted out, homes carried away or undermined, old treasures gone forever on the flood with the g of the waters, make up a story that will be ith saddened hearts for years to come by the who were fortunate to escape h ground with little besides ives.

week ending March 16 was the worst that Pittsburg has enced for many years. Eighty of ice blocked the Alleghany above Parker, Pa., while rain d from sagging clouds over- The downtown districts were der water and the mills closed, ing thousands out of work tem- ly. The tracks of most of the d lines running into Pittsburg covered with water, and when ter subsided there was danger he tracks had been undermined. Fallston, an acre of ground ly slipped out from under- the rails of the Pittsburg & Erie Railroad, and sent a ca- plunging over a bank and down feet into the river. The train were imprisoned in the wreck ad a narrow escape from drown- They were pulled out more than alive by the fireman and engineer, while the flagman, h badly injured, made his way ily back along the tracks, to two other trains that were almost due over the line.

ces where the river swept through were covered mud and refuse for several inches, and Pittsburg's -cleaning will take weeks after the water has led to its normal level.

e water reached a height of thirty-seven feet above ual level at Pittsburg and Alleghany and spread ver a territory of ten miles. The great manufac- g plants were flooded (already causing threats of a n the price of steel), the bridges were unapproach- and thousands of people who live in the suburbs who work in Pittsburg found themselves marooned e city, and with no knowledge of how matters going with their loved ones at home, except where the telegraph and telephone lines to small nearby towns managed to survive the general wreck. It was the most disastrous flood that has occurred since the first log huts grew up about Fort Pitt over a century ago, though previous inundations have caused fearful loss. The present flood, it is estimated, will cost the people of Pittsburg over $10,000,000. To add to the general trouble, fires broke out in several places, and buildings had to be dynamited to prevent the spread of the flames, for, oddly enough, though there was enough water above the pavement to put out a Vesuvius, the mains had burst underneath and the hydrants were useless. The fire loss was probably $200,000.

On Pennsylvania Avenue, Pittsburg

Fourteen deaths were caused by the flood within a period of thirty-six hours. In the suburbs of Aspinwall, Sharpsburg, Etna and Millville, over five hundred families had to retreat to the upper stories of their homes. They were without heat and suffered greatly from cold and damp, and also from the lack of food. This last source of distress was removed by numbers of volunteers who came off from the "mainland" in well-laden skiffs, and distributed food to the needy, which in this case included the well-to-do as well as the poor. The water wore away on the thin cellar walls of these houses until there was great danger that the structures would collapse. In the county of Allegheny alone several thousand houses were completely cut off by water, and the only possible way of escape was by skiff or rowboat.

The entire town of Marshfield, West Virginia, a place of sixty houses, was entirely carried away, it has been reported to us. The people fortunately were warned in time, and got on to higher ground just in time to see their homes wrenched from their foundations and carried swiftly off. Viola, in the same county, saw twenty of its homes bobbing and canting away down the river. All were thankful that they escaped with their lives. But little property was saved.

Cincinnati was America's chief watering place for a time, as a glance at the accompanying photographs will show. Pittsburg came in at second place, an honor the smoky city did not covet and one she would willingly pass on to any other town that wants it.

The small boys on the edge of the overflow in both cities, were the only people who got any enjoyment out of the situation. Building rafts out of boxes, these young gondoliers rowed and poled up and down the streets, level with the first-story windows, and studied the fascinating art of navigation in their own back yards, while their families looked on ruefully from the second story windows. In Cincinnati many a careful housewife cautioned the other head of the household to be sure and wear rubbers before going down town. They certainly needed them, but they would have been better sixty feet high instead of two inches, for that was the height of the river reached.

The lower Ohio Valley has seen the highest water since February, 1884. The Muskingum, Great and Little Miamis, and the Scioto have been pouring their floods into the Ohio River from the North, while from the South the Lanawah, Licking and Big Sandy Rivers have poured in an almost equal amount of water. These rivers for miles before they swept into the Ohio, had overflowed their banks, and carried havoc to farms and villages whose inhabitants had thought themselves secure. A number of lives were lost, and there were many thrilling escapes. Twenty workmen were living in a house that formerly stood well back and above high water mark at Zanesville. Suddenly the place was surrounded by the rising waters of the Muskingum, and

A TESTED SALVATION

TEXT: I. COR. 10: 13

"There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man"

THE scientists teach us that anthropology, or the science of man, is the crown of all the natural sciences; but subsidiary to it and contributory to its proper comprehension are the other natural sciences. Nature has the same method of working in all, and if we learn what she does in the lower spheres, we shall know what she does in the higher. If we learn how the plants and the animals grow and thrive, we may infer that in a similar way man will grow and thrive. No man is absolutely unique. He is one of a species the members of which prosper under like conditions or degenerate under the opposite conditions. Nature is a unit in this. In other words, the same inexorable natural laws which cause a rose, or a lily, or a heliotrope, or a horse, or a cow, or a sheep, or a robin, or a bluebird, or a trout, or a black bass to do and to be what they are under certain conditions, are the same inexorable biological laws which will compel man under certain conditions to do certain things. When we study the characteristics of a species, we study in a broad sense the characteristics of all the individuals of that species and there is no exception to the rule.

A Uniform Law

Now Paul, in the words of my text, is enunciating a great natural law. He comes to us and says, "My brother, in your egotism you believe you are different from the rest of mankind. You may think that no man ever faced just the same trials and temptations and sorrows and bitter disappointments which you have. But in your loves, your hates, your sorrows and your temptations you are just like the generality of mankind. You are under the common law; you must eat as they eat; you will laugh as they laugh; you sleep as they sleep; you suffer from the cold and the heat as they suffer; you cry as they cry; you are tempted as they are tempted; you sin as they sin. Furthermore, you can be saved from your sins by the atoning blood of Jesus Christ as they can be saved. You are part of a great species of living creatures which is called the human family." Then Paul seems to generalize all his thoughts into these words of my text, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it."

My friends, as there are thousands of men and women in the past who have been tempted just as we are tempted and God has found a way by which they may escape from their temptations, so if we let Jesus come into our lives and accept his offer of a way of escape, we may overcome our present temptations. We all have many temptations. There is no doubt about that. The next question is, do we apply the Gospel weapon against those temptations?

Physical Temptations

There are in the first place physical temptations. There are the temptations of the blood, of the nerves, the muscles of the stomach and of the heart. There are the temptations which appeal to the physical organism which we have inherited from our ancestors, and which may have been weakened by disease or by abuse. These temptations of the physical organism are among the very fiercest of all temptations to battle against. Paul was speaking literally as well as figuratively when he described himself as an armed sentinel standing guard over his body, or as an armed foe in mortal combat with the passions of his flesh. He knew, as every true Christian ought to know, that unless he was continually warring against the evil desires of his flesh he would become their slave. He said, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection, lest by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." Oh, my brother, do you know that with the help of the Holy Spirit you may overcome your physical temptations?

One of the most common of those physical temptations is the craving of the stomach and the nerves for a stimulant or a soothing narcotic. You are not a lazy, good-for-nothing drunken loafer. You are an intense, ambitious, energetic man. You, perhaps, started with nothing; and everything, to use a slang expression, "seems to be coming your way." Your business has been going ahead by leaps and strides. The orders have been tumbling in on you as an avalanche. If you had ten hands and ten feet and ten eyes and ten brains, you could work them all to their limit. The result is you have been overworking that body. You cannot sleep at night. When you arise for breakfast in the morning you are more tired than when you went to bed. About two years ago you began to use stimulants. You did it to arouse your depleted faculties. Then at night you commenced to take some sedative. You said to yourself, "I must sleep. I must sleep or I shall die." Then you did not like liquor. You did not in the beginning crave that sedative. But now every nerve and muscle and sinew of your body is crying, "Give me drink; give me that sleeping potion. I must have them or I shall go mad." Under these you are going down and down. You are heading straight for a premature grave. Do you not realize now what Paul means when he says, "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection lest by any means when I have preached to others, I myself shall be a castaway."

Or perhaps we have broken the moral code. Perhaps we have inherited the inflamed proclivities of some dissolute ancestor. When we try to govern ourselves we find that we are like a mettlesome, high-strung horse, ready at a moment's notice to take the bit in his teeth and rush madly away. The cold blooded-man of phlegmatic temperament cannot understand why the quick-tempered, high-strung, nervous, passionate nature can so easily kick over the traces and do what it ought not to do. The phlegmatic man is a mound of wet sand, slowly being dried by the rising sun. The passionate man is a gunpowder magazine, ready to be exploded by a spark. And yet the power of God can come in and make it possible for a weak man to overcome the temptations of drink and all the unspeakable temptations of the flesh. Yes, the power of God has been able to help thousands of men in the past to triumph over the cup and over the morphine habit and over libertinism. The power of God can help you now to triumph over your evil desires of the flesh. Your temptation is not an extraordinary case. There have been many men of the past even more desolate than you, who have been saved from the sins of the flesh. Have you forgotten Paul's statement? "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to men, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it."

But there are mental temptations as well as physical. Just the same as a man may have a malformed body he can have a malformed mind. His thinking apparatus may be all askew. In Bulgaria a short time ago there died a young woman of thirty years of age. She had the mind of a matured, developed woman. She could talk as a woman. But she had the body of a little six months' old baby. She never grew physically after she was a few months old. She had to sleep in a cradle. She had the mind of a woman, yet the body of a little child. In direct antithesis to this we often find men of fully matured physical bodies who are worse than children in intellect. Their minds are warped and twisted out of form. They have such malformed intellects that they cannot think aright. They cannot tell the difference between right and wrong. In their own strength they are intellectually color-blind.

Minds Askew

You know what I mean by a man having defective color-sight. When the applicant for a locomotive engineer's position applies to the railroad, what is the first and the chief rule by which the official tests the applicant? He takes him into a room where there are a lot of worsted yarns all jumbled up together. "Now you go and pick me out the blue skeins" says the examiner. "Now pick me out the red." The difference between the colors of red and white may involve the safety of hundreds of passengers which an engineer may ha his charge." Some of you may be surprised to that hundreds of would-be engineers have been reje because the optic nerves which connect their eyes their brains could not carry their messages aright. there are hundreds and thousands of men whose b are deformed. They cannot think aright. They not tell right from wrong when they see it. These have malformed intellects just the same as others malformed bodies. Of course, I am here using brain in the broad moral sense and not in the nar

The Reader's Magnet

I was never more impressed with this thought some time ago when I was reading the most marve sermon I think Henry Ward Beecher ever preache is called, "The Courtesy of Conscience." In this course Mr. Beecher shows how each man by educat as well as by hereditary law, becomes an entity to self, or an individual different from all other indi uals. Each man to a great extent judges the worl giving voice to the predominant characteristics of own heart and mind and life. "Now," says Mr. Beec "take a man of large benevolence. That is the dominating quality of his mind. It overshadows ev thing else. As he goes through the Bible everyth that magnifies the goodness of God and the merc God will come after his magnet. Whenever he co to a fissure where there is smoke or wrath, he jump and will not touch it. While on the other hand, man who has not such benevolence, but has a good of the sense of justice of government and of rules regulations, goes through the Bible and when he retu he has on his back a pack filled with the texts of fir Mr. Beecher was showing that every man's mind is a unto itself. If that mind is a malformed or one-si mind in its color blindness, it will cover with fa colors every moral object its eyes focus, just the same the locomotive engineer with color-blindness may th the red light of warning is the white light of safety.

The Guiding Voice

Now, the power of the Holy Spirit may come i our lives and teach us to think aright. Through Holy Spirit we can get a revelation of what the div sacrifice means. Through him we can truly get infinite grasp of what the words "Jesus Christ Saviour" mean to the troubled, sinful heart. Oh, sins of the mind. Oh, the awful results of wrong thi ing to the human heart. This mental fog is like a other kind of darkening mist. If you have e crossed the Atlantic you know well what I mean. Wh you come to the Banks of Newfoundland the fo settled about you so thick that you cannot see the pr of the ship from the stern. Then the boat slows up a the deep-throated fog horn begins to call. Every ti that hoarse note goes rolling over the waters it see to be calling, "Oh, ships and fishing smacks, where a you?" Then off in the distance you will hear a fai answer, calling, "Here am I! Beware! Beware! B ware!" So in the mental fogs of in the fogs of scepticism which envelop every huma heart, there is but one right course. Slow up. Se forth thy cry for guidance. Call and keep callin "Jesus, where art thou! Jesus, where art thou Then amid the deepest, densest gloom of life thou w hear the Saviour's answer, "Here am I. Come to m Come to me!" Oh, may the mental fogs which ha enveloped so many of us to-day be lifted by the su shine of God's love. "There hath no temptation take you but such as is common to man."

But there are temptations from without as well temptations from within. There are temptations whi come to us from other men, as well as temptations wel ing up in our own hearts. There are temptations soci and commercial as well as spiritual. The prophet old described himself as a little terror-stricken birc with a great flock of angry sparrows encircling it, tryin to peck it to death. Thus when we see all the tempta tions which swoop down upon us from without, can w not cry out, "Mine heritage is unto me as a speckle

, the birds about are against her; come ye, assemble e beasts of the field come to devour." For truly rever we go into the outside world Satan is ready reet us with fierce temptations.

Don't you remember the old nursery fable where the er stands at the door of his palace trying to get the to come in and banquet with him? Well, that is the Satan stands at the door of the commercial and the al world begging his victims to come in and sup with . He looks at us and smiles, and says, "Come, join social club! Come and learn how to drink wine and amble with us! Come and join our dancing cotillion. Of course many of these entertainments may conflict with your old-fashioned ideas, but never mind, you can still be a member of the church and be just like hundreds and thousands of Christians who profess their religion and do not practice it." Or Satan sends acquaintances, who say "Come, let us use in wildcat speculations some of the moneys which have been left us in trust for the widow and the orphan." And though the average man would not be dishonest if left to himself, yet when some of these worldly temptations come to him from without, he yields because other men about him are accustomed to sin in the same way.

I always look upon the infectiousness of sin a great deal as I do upon the transmitting power of an electric current. When we were young I had a classmate who owned an electric battery. Then he used to stand us boys around in a circle. We would all clasp hands, and the end men would take hold of the handles of the electric battery. Then my classmate would turn on the current, and this current would go running from hand to hand and from hand to hand, until it had made the complete circuit. If two of those men would unclasp their hands, instantly the circuit would be broken and the current stopped. So I believe Satan sends the currents of temptations through the hearts and the minds and the souls of men. He arranges us about in circles. Then he gets us all to clasp hands. Then because men by our side sin we sin, and because we sin other men sin. But though there is a pernicious companionship of sin there is a saving companionship in Jesus Christ. When you clasp hands with loose men, with evil men, with sinful men, the currents of spiritual death leap through your soul. When you clasp hands with good men, with God-fearing men, with Christian men, the currents of spiritual life will go coursing through your minds and hearts and souls.

Now, my brother, the question for you to decide today is not whether you are tempted worse than any other man has been tempted. Your spiritual temptations are such as have always been common to man. The great question for you to decide is whether you are willing to clasp hands with Jesus Christ and with good men who are struggling to save a sinful world and let the divine currents of redemption leap through your minds and hearts and souls as the electric current goes coursing over the wires. In other words, to-day are you going to break the divine currents which want to save and redeem you and give yourselves up to the evil currents which will be the means of your eternal overthrow?

If we clasp hands with Jesus Christ, if we clasp hands with Christian men, if we get in touch with the divine life we shall ourselves become divine. Now, my friends, the question for you and me to decide is this: With whom shall we clasp hands? Shall we clasp hands with Satan? Shall we clasp hands with Christ? If you clasp hands with Satan you must be destroyed by Satan. If you clasp hands with Jesus Christ you shall by the promises of God be filled with eternal life. Which current will you seek to-day? The divine current of spiritual power which comes straight from the Throne of God or the currents of evil by which you will be forever destroyed? In God's name which current will you choose? Hear you not God's promise: "There hath no temptations taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it"?

NEW ANECDOTES BY GIPSY SMITH

N beginning his services at the Central Congregational Church, in Brooklyn, Gipsy Smith spoke of the attempts ng made in these days to discredit the ble. He said: "When people came to r Jesus he gave them the word of d, and the word of God is still in this k. Don't you forget it. It is the rd of God struggling with the limitaons of a book, and he has not recalled it y, and until he does it holds the field. I n old-fashioned enough to believe that has no rival. The preaching of this old ory has done during the last fortnight hat it always did. It has attracted gger crowds than anything else would ve done, and I feel sure that if we could on another fortnight or six weeks we ould have even a bigger crowd to listen the old story. There is nothing like it. appeals to the human heart as nothing se does. It satisfies our longing as noth- g else can do. What is the use of trying fill a hungry man with a pretty bread asket? It is no more use than it would e for us to throw a nosegay to a drown- g man."

A Minister's Conversion

"My dear brother, the late Charles A. erry, of Wolverhampton, England, whose ame is known to some of you, and who reached in the United States more than nce, and who was a great friend of mine, hen he went to his first pastorate was a young man, in doubt about the cardinal principles. His friend and my friend Jowett, of Birmingham, told me this story, which he heard from Berry's own lips. Berry was sitting in his study in Bolton, Lancashire, late one night when everyone else had gone to bed, and there came a knock at his door, and when he opened it there stood a typical Lancashire girl, with her shawl over her head and with clogs on her feet. 'Are you the minister?' she asked. 'Yes.' 'Then I want you to come and get my mother in.' Berry, thinking it was some drunken brawl, said: 'You must get a policeman.' 'Oh, no,' said the girl, 'my mother's dying, and I want you to get her into salvation.' 'Where do you live?' 'I live so-and-so, a mile and a half from here.' 'Well,' said Berry, 'is there no minister nearer than I?' 'Oh, yes, but I want you, and you've got to come.' Berry said to me: 'I was in my slippers, and I soliloquized and wondered what the people of the church would think if they saw their pastor walking late at night with a girl with a shawl over her head. I did all I could to get out of it, but it was no use. That girl was determined, and I had to dress and go.

" 'I found the place was a house of ill-fame. In the lower rooms they were drinking and telling lewd stories, and upstairs I found the poor woman dying. I sat down and talked about Jesus as the beautiful example, and extolled Him as a leader and teacher; and she looked at me out of her eyes of death, and said: 'Mister, that's no good for the likes 'o me. I don't want an example—I'm a sinner.' And Berry said to me, 'Jowett, there I was face to face with a poor soul dying, and had nothing to tell her. I had no Gospel, and I thought of what my mother had taught me, and I told her the old story of God's love in Christ dying for sinful men, whether I believed it or not. 'Now you are getting at it,' said the woman. 'That's what I want. That's the story for me.' And Berry turned to Jowett and said, 'I got her in, and I got in myself.' "

Depends on Yourself

"When the sheep in the parable (Luke 15) went astray a man went after it. When the silver was lost a woman went after it. When the son went astray who went after him? Nobody. Nobody. And Jesus told the story. Nobody went after the son. Why? Because he was a moral agent, and was accountable to God for his own act. Why did not Jesus tell the story this way? 'The father was so concerned about the absence of the boy that he got his servants and staff of men and his neighbors and friends together and sent out a search party, and went in the far country and got hold of him and bound him in chains.' Because Jesus knew he would have been a rebel in chains. Because he knew that nobody repents till he comes home of his own accord. And that is what Jesus is emphasizing. Listen! 'He came to himself.' And he didn't send a letter to the old homestead and ask for a chariot to be sent to meet him, and he didn't ask anybody to give him a lift on the way. He went to the far country, and he had to walk home, every inch. He had to tramp it. He said: 'I will arise and go to my father. I have sinned against heaven.' "

The Obstacle to Conversion

"I was conducting a mission in Glasgow a few years ago that lasted sixteen weeks. I moved from church to church in one section of the city and I took a circuit of ten churches—a week in each. I noticed for six or seven weeks a man, a fine specimen of a Scotchman, following me from church to church night after night. I knew he was concerned and I prayed for him, and I felt, somehow or other, there was a link between that man and myself, and I felt that he understood it, too. One night I stayed in that old-fashioned box pulpit and watched the congregation leave at the close, and my man sat down below in the pew and watched me, and presently, we, two, were left alone. I left the pulpit and went to him, and I said, 'My friend, I have been watching you for some weeks.' 'Yes, I know,' he replied. 'Well, you are concerned about your soul?' 'I am,' he said. I said, 'You know what you have to do?' 'Yes, I do.'

"I was urging him to make the surrender, and while talking with him discovered a gentleman near us listening. He came forward and said, 'Will you let me speak to this brother?' I said, 'Yes,' and he continued, 'I have heard part of the conversation and I want to read you (turning to my friend in the pew) a text and he read John 3: 16. 'Do you believe that?' he asked. 'Yes, of course a Scotchman believes that. I can repeat it as well as you can.' The newcomer then read Romans 10: 9: 'If thou shall confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved,' and asked again, 'Do you believe that?' 'Of course, I believe it.'" Next he read from John's epistle: 'If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness,' and asked, 'You believe that, too?' 'Yes, I believe that.' Then you are a Christian.'

"'My friend straightened himself up and looking at the man with the Bible said: 'You are wrong, my friend. 'Well, but you believe Christ died for you?' 'Yes.' 'You believe he rose from the dead for your justification?' 'Yes.' 'You believe he is able to save you?' 'Yes, right on the spot.' 'Then you are saved.' 'No, I am not.' 'How do you make that out?' 'Well, you have read three passages, now find one for me.' 'Where is it?' 'Isaiah fifty-five and the seventh verse.' The man with the Bible turned to the passage and read: 'Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord.' 'Now stop,' said my friend. 'I am the wicked man; I am the unrighteous man, and I have to forsake the sin and the wicked thought, and I have to come back from my own way to God's way. In my heart is a great sin, and I am hugging it and am not willing to give it up, and my own common sense tells me I cannot be saved until I surrender.' That is the best sermon I ever heard on repentance in my life."

A Father's Responsibility

"On the other side of the ocean, just before I left home last September, a mother suddenly came into the room where there was a little boy six or seven years old, and found that little boy trying to kill a baby two years old with the scissors, and she said to the child, 'What are you doing?' and he said, 'I want to kill him.' It frightened the mother and she talked to the father about it, and the father took him to a doctor, and he took him to a specialist, and that specialist was my friend. He examined the child thoroughly and said to him, 'Why do you want to kill the baby; it does not hurt you?' And the boy replied, 'I want to kill somebody all the time.' And the doctor turned to the father and said, 'Are you a drinking man?' The father said, 'Well, I do drink, it is true, but I don't often drink to excess.' The doctor replied, 'Well, you drink. That boy will kill somebody some day. It is in his blood and your drinking habit is the cause of it.' You reap what you sow. Don't forget it. You are passing on what you are to the next generation, and God Almighty will hold some of you men responsible for bringing into the world assassins, murderers and cutthroats. Don't forget it. What we sow we shall reap."

A VICTORY OF PRAYER

International Sunday School Lesson for April 14

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IN ancient days a name meant more than it does now. Oftener than otherwise a name is now given simply as a matter of fancy. Jacob had been given a name, meaning "supplanter." But there came a time when God changed Jacob's name to suit new conditions. He had gone out from the home of his father Isaac a fugitive, fearing the anger of his brother Esau, and now after an absence of twenty years or more, he was returning with his large family and servants and herds and flocks. During the years in which he had sojourned with his uncle Laban, from a poor wayfaring man he had risen to be a man of property. But it was not because of these changed circumstances that God gave him a new name.

Under his rich and lordly garments Jacob still carried an accusing heart for the wrong he had done his brother Esau. He did not expect Esau to receive him with open arms when he should return to Beersheba. On the contrary, he thought that Esau might still desire to kill him. And so as he journeyed toward Beersheba he was continually on the watch for a hostile band. Presently he had word that Esau was coming with a band of four hundred men. Jacob sought to placate him by sending in advance a rich present, and then he divided his caravan into two parts, so that in case of an attack his possessions might not be annihilated.

Jacob's Struggle in the Dark

When night came on, Jacob went out alone to watch and pray. So earnestly did he pray, that God came swiftly to his rescue, even before Jacob could realize that his prayer had been heard. He mistook God for his enemy and strove against him. God had to make himself known to Jacob by putting forth extraordinary power, that Jacob would recognize as beyond the strength of man. By the divine touch Jacob was made so lame that he could wrestle no longer. He clung to God, and begged that he would not leave him without blessing him. Then it was that God gave him a new name: "Thy name shall no more be called Jacob but Israel, for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men." And when God had blessed him there he departed, and it is recorded that Jacob called the name of the place "Peniel," which means "the face of God."

Jacob had nothing more to fear, he was sure of his brother's heart, and on the morrow went forth to meet him. And when they came in sight of each other, Esau ran to meet Jacob and fell on his neck and kissed him. With their arms about each other they wept for joy. Then the present of the five droves was given and accepted. And Esau proposed that they should journey together. But Jacob knew that his little ones could not keep pace with Esau's hardy troopers, and so he urged Esau to go ahead and said he would "follow on softly", according to the pace of the children. He journeyed so softly, that it took him seven years to make the journey that might have been done in a week. He stayed on the way to build a house. At length Jacob returned to his homeland.

The Accusing Conscience

As he stayed at night by the brook he had leisure to think over his mean, tricky, deceitful ways. Like other men of that type when he was in peril he prayed, "Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother" (v. 2). Esau appeared to Jacob like a merciless enemy. The injury Jacob had done Esau, in depriving him both of his birthright and his father's blessing, must have made Jacob feel that Esau must be his enemy. A story is told of a young soldier named Stevens, in Africa, who unwittingly took refuge in a cave in the darkness of the night, as he was wandering alone in the forest, having become separated from his companions. Looking toward the entrance of the cave, he saw in the moonlight a great lion coming toward him, and then the truth flashed upon him that he had invaded a lion's bedroom! He quickly decided to lie down and pretend to be asleep. So he lay perfectly still, with his eyes closed, and presently with a terrific roar, that seemed to make the ground shake, the lion bounded in. The intruder felt the lion's hot breath upon his face. The beast licked him all over, as the poor fellow feared preparatory to tearing him in pieces. Then Stevens cried out to God in earnest, and promised that if his life were spared he would become a Christian, and return to England to preach the Gospel. God heard the cry of the soldier, and shut the lion's mouth. The lion laid down quietly by the side of the man, having probably eaten a heavy supper and soon went off asleep. But before doing so he put his paw on Steven's chest. Oh, what a time of agony and suspense and prayer this was for the soldier! He slowly moved the heavy paw from his breast. The next thing was to creep out of the cave without making the slightest noise, and this God enabled him to do and thus to make his escape. But did Stevens forget the promise he had made to God in the time of his distress? No, he returned to England, and became a valiant soldier of the cross.

Jacob's Mistake

Jacob lodged there that night, and took of that which he had with him a present for Esau his brother (v. 13). The painful consequences of sin may follow us for years after God has forgiven us. An old Chinese proverb says: "An unkind word falls easily from the tongue, but a coach and six horses can not bring it back." How important, then, that we not only pray to be saved from our sins, but also to be kept from committing sin.

And Jacob was left alone. He had sent his family and servants and live stock across the brook Jabbok. As he was walking alone in the darkness to cool his fevered brow, some one in the darkness suddenly seized him. And Jacob as one wrestles for life, thinking it was Esau or some emissary of his struggled as with a foe. The only way God could make himself known to Jacob, was to wound him seriously in his overmastering strength by putting his thigh out of joint. And then Jacob recognized that he had been wrestling with God, who had come in answer to his prayer to help him. A boy was one day out walking with his father near a bridge that was about completed. The men were

Knocking Away the Props

The boy watched them. "Won't the bridge fall?" the boy asked. "No," said the father, "when the props are taken away the timbers of the bridge will rest more firmly upon the stone piers." And so God often takes away our earthly props that we may rest more firmly upon him. When Wellington asked one of his officers to undertake a very difficult and perilous enterprise, and said, "Will you go?" he replied: "Give me one grasp of your all-conquering hand and I can go." The best preparation for difficulties and dangers is to be alone with God, and by prayer grasp his all-conquering hand. Moses alone with God on Mount Sinai prepared his heart to teach God's laws. Alone on Horeb, Elijah heard the still small voice and was prepared to go forth on his difficult work. Alone with God on the Mount and in Gethsemane Christ girded himself fo[r] struggles and duties before him.

"I will not let thee go except thou [bless] me." Wrestling ceased and prayer be[gan], and through prayer Jacob prevaile[d in] his appeal to God. Prayer makes us pri[nces] as at the brook of old, having power with God and [with] men and prevailing. Adam lost his princely plac[e by] his sin, man regains it by prayer. Wrestling with[God] Prince of Peace, he receives of his spirit and his like[ness].

A Young Man Captured

A pastor relates how one night at a revival meeti[ng] young man was asked to go into the inquiry room. [He] grew violently angry. "We resolved," he says, "to [pray] for that young man, and we prayed that he might y[ield] his soul to God. And when the next night at the m[eet]ing the side door was flung open he was the first to [come] in. Prayer had captured him." The same pastor [tells] that he had a classmate in college, whose uncle, Dr. J[ohn] Scudder, of India, wrote to him: "I will pray for [you] every day until such a day, and then I will give my [at]tention to some other subject." The last day of th[at] prayers my classmate surrendered his soul to Jesus."

Thy name shall no more be called Jacob but Is[rael] (v. 28). The former name, Jacob, was a record of [his] sin as his brother's supplanter. His new name me[ant] that he was a prince who had power with God. [Our] names to-day are significant, although we seldom reg[ard] their meanings. Every Charles should be "strong [and] brave." Every Richard should be "liberal." Ev[ery] David should have qualities to make him "the belove[d]." Every Benjamin should be so t[rue] as to be indeed "the beloved [of] God." Every William should [be] "resolute;" every Ira "wat[chful]." The name Stephen imp[lies] that he who bears it shall at l[ast] receive a crown. And as to [the] names of women, every Augu[sta] should be "exalted" in charact[er]; every Elizabeth "consecrated [to] God," every Ida "God-like" every Sarah "a princess" in go[od]ness. But, above all, those w[ho] have taken upon themselves t[he] name of Christian should excel [in] all that is true and noble and go[od]. The German word for Christi[an] is "Christs," so Dr. Arnot or[ce] said, and in that connection [he] took occasion to say that the wo[rld] looks at the visible persons w[ho] thus represent Christ more th[an] they look at Christ himself.

The New Name

And he blessed him there (v. 2[9]). Not only was the name of Jac[ob] changed, but his whole visage [was] well. How radiant a spirit-fille[d] face becomes. One night at [a] revival meeting the leader notice[d] a little girl about eleven years o[ld] looking as if she was in gre[at] trouble. He asked her what w[as] the matter? She replied that sh[e] was unhappy because of her sin. He read to her from his testamen[t] "I am the door; by me, if an[y] man enter in, he shall be saved," and then he explained to her th[at] Jesus was like a door because h[e] was the means of entrance int[o] God's household or family. H[e] said to her that because of ou[r] sins we all deserve to be shut out of heaven, but th[at] Lord Jesus having been punished instead of sinners, [it] was like opening the door wide, and that he was no[w] inviting her to enter in and be saved. Still her head wa[s] bent down and her face was sad. Two days afterward[s] at one of the meetings he saw two little girls waiting i[n] the conversational meeting, and asked why they stayed. One of them, the one who had been so sad, looked very brightly into his face and said: "I want you to speak to my little friend, please." "But what about yourself?" he asked. "Oh, I am saved," she replied. "And when was it?" "Oh, don't you remember," she said, "it was the night before last." "Indeed, I don't remember anything about it." "Why, sir; don't you remember talking to me at the back of the church about, 'I am the door; by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved?'" "But you are not that little girl who looked so unhappy, are you?" "Yes, sir." "Then, my child, you have got a new face." Indeed she had, and a new heart too.

Jabbok Becomes Peniel

And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel (v. 30). And so it seems that places as well as people have new names given to them. The ford at the brook Jabbok became as a shrine to Jacob, one of the sacred places of the earth, and the name he gave it embodied the incident, for Peniel means, "I have seen God face to face." Many places have been made sacred by those who have gone in God's name to lead men into the light.

Concealed Starvation

A Famine Relief Ship for China

The Government Transport "BUFORD" to Carry a "Christian Herald" Cargo of 5,000 Tons of Food—$50,000 more Cabled

FOR the third time, the Government of the United States has granted a relief ship to convey a cargo of life-giving food, the gift of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers to the famine-stricken people of a foreign land. An official telegram from the State Department in Washington brings the welcome intelligence that the offer made by the Proprietor of this journal to furnish a cargo of 5,000 tons of foodstuffs for the starving Chinese has been accepted, and the Army transport Buford has been assigned to this duty.

Recent advices by cable and mail from China, received by Dr. Klopsch, convinced him that the wisest disposition that could be made of the Relief Fund would be to purchase flour in the home market, instead of in China, where all foodstuffs are scarce and held at famine prices. This conviction was confirmed by cablegrams from the Shanghai and Chinkiang Relief Committees, and also from the editor of the North China Herald. Some American flour had already been sent to Shanghai, and so satisfactory was the result of this experiment, the missionaries reported, that the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at once set about securing full information as to the practicability of sending a large cargo of wholesale food from an American port direct to Shanghai, whence it could be transported to the famine districts in the interior.

He communicated with the State Department at Washington, making the request that a vessel be assigned by the Government to carry a CHRISTIAN HERALD cargo to starving China. Established precedent was found in the action of our government during the great India famine, when two steamships, the Quito and City of Everett, were chartered with government funds expressly to convey cargoes of foodstuffs which were purchased with the gifts of our readers and their friends. On March 19, the War Department notified the Department of State that the army transport Buford would be placed at the disposal of the National Red Cross Society for the purpose of carrying THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cargo to China.

The following telegram was thereupon sent by the State Department:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 20.

"DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, Bible House, New York City:

"The Government transport Buford will be entirely at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S disposal for contributions for the famine sufferers in China. Her capacity is 5,000 tons.

(Signed) ROBERT BACON,
Assistant Secretary of State."

Simultaneously with this the following statement was issued:

"The assignment of the Buford for this purpose was made at the request of Dr. Louis Klopsch, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who has notified the State Department that he will load the ship with provisions. Her capacity is 5,000 tons, and Mr. Klopsch intends to supply the entire cargo, which will be in addition to the contributions which he has heretofore sent. It is estimated that not less than $100,000 will be required to supply a cargo of 5,000 tons of provisions, but this Mr. Klopsch advises the Department he is in a position to furnish. The Buford is now at San Francisco, and will sail for Shanghai, where distribution will be made as soon as she can be unloaded."

U. S. A. Transport "Buford," Which will Convey "The Christian Herald's" $100,000 Cargo to China

Arrangements are already under way for the purchase of the Buford's cargo of 5,000 tons of good, clean American flour. The flour will be shipped in sacks, and the entire cargo of 10,000,000 pounds, equal to 250 car loads, will be rushed from the various grain centres by different railroad routes to the Pacific without delay. Inspection and loading will be pushed forward rapidly, and it is expected that the transport, which is a swift vessel, will reach Shanghai within one month after clearing. In Shanghai such a cargo will be almost doubled in value, owing to the food scarcity and high prices there. In the interior, where the multitudes are slowly perishing, the value of the flour will be incalculable. Grain is so scarce in the five famine provinces, that Viceroy Tuan Fang, at Shanghai, has appealed to the Emperor to order the purchase of foodstuffs in Siam.

The editor of the North China Herald sends the following cable dispatch, giving information as to the present situation:

"DR. KLOPSCH, New York.

"American foodstuffs now arriving improve the situation. Distribution proceeding satisfactorily. Ominous silence envelops all districts outside of the missionary reach. Plague caused by famine privations has already broken out in one locality."

FAMINE GROWS WORSE—$50,000 MORE CABLED

(Special Cablegram from the Secretary of the Chinkiang Missionary Committee)

KLOPSCH, NEW YORK — CHINKIANG, MARCH 22

Reports from all parts of Anhui, Kiangsu, Chekiang, and Kiangsi provinces show that the already desperate situation is daily becoming worse. Riots are occurring, with general pillaging of the rice shops in the famine area. The condition of the people is growing steadily worse. There are many deaths, but the area of the famine is too great to permit the gathering of statistics. Sickness of all kinds—fever, small-pox and plague—is increasing. Some seed had been sowed and a half crop was hoped for, but the people, who for some time have only had the bark of trees, weeds and straw to eat, are now, in sheer desperation, pulling the green wheat for food. They are even tearing down houses for fuel or to sell, that with the proceeds a little food may be procured.

The money cabled by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been a great blessing. It is saving many thousands of lives. [Signed] McCREA.

[In response to the above cablegram, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has forwarded, through the State Department, $50,000 more for immediate relief—$25,000 to each Committee—making $150,000 cabled to date. This is in addition to the food cargo of the Buford, which will cost $100,000 more.]

INTO STILL WATERS

A NEW SERIAL STORY WRITTEN EXPRESSLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

CHAPTER I

THE long train from the North rolled into the Grand Central Station and came to a jerky stop, while out the doors and down the steps ...ed a hurrying throng of men and w...en who seemed intent on reaching a g...n point in the shortest possible time. ...ack in the luxuriously appointed draw...room car there was not so much haste, t...ugh even there silk-lined skirts rustled ...dy and carefully creased trousers sub...ed themselves more or less graciously t...he porter's whisk-broom. At the end o...he car a tall, fair-haired woman in d...k blue and a little girl five years old s...by themselves.

"Are we there? Is it New York?" a...ed the child, eagerly.

"Yes, dear."

"And now what do we do?"

"We take a carriage across the city, ...sweetheart."

"To go home?"

"No, dear. We don't go home until n...t month. If we were going there now w...should wait right here for another train. A...it is, we have to cross the city. Come, M...rgaret—see, we are the last to leave," s... added, as she gave a final pat to the b...ck silk coat. "Now run along ahead, d...r."

Even the conductor had fallen captive t...he big blue eyes and yellow curls under l...e Miss Margaret's drooping hat-brim, a... he gave a nod and a pleasant smile as h... lifted the child from the car steps to t... platform. The porter, too, showed all h... teeth in a broad grin.

Once on the platform Margaret hesi...ted, looking from one man to the other. I... seemed to her that something was due t...se two kind friends who had been so g...d to her all day.

"Thank you," she said at last, in her s...eet, high-pitched treble. "I've had a v...y 'joyable time in your car. Good-...!"

Mrs. Kendall smiled, and reached for h... daughter's hand. The porter grinned ...en more broadly than before, but the ...nductor bowed very low with his hand ... his heart.

"It has been a pleasure to me, I assure ...u," he said gravely; and Margaret ...rned away, well content.

Mrs. Kendall still smiled all the long ...y down the narrow lane between the ...rs. It was so like Margaret, she thought, ... do that, and so kind of the conductor ... respond in that ready fashion to her ...aint courtesy. Some would have ...ughed—and Margaret was always ...ieved when they laughed. She was a ...ar little girl, anyway; still, it was no ...onder people called her "quaint" and ...old"; and Mrs. Kendall's lips twitched ... she thought of some of the large words ...at were her young daughter's special ...elight.

In the big waiting-room Mrs. Kendall ...used thoughtfully.

"Margaret," she began, with some hesi...tion, "mother has an errand to do—...mething she wants to get at a store. It isn't far—just down a little way across the street, but she doesn't want to take you. Do you suppose you can stay here on one of these seats until she comes back? Do you, dear?"

Margaret frowned and looked away.

"Margaret would prefer to go, too," she said emphatically.

"Yes, I know, dear; but we can't do what we prefer to do all the time, sweetheart. The street is very full of teams and people and I don't want you with me when I cross it. So, I am very sure, you are going to be my brave, patient little daughter and wait right here until I come back. Isn't that so, dear?"

There was plainly a struggle, but in the end Margaret smiled, even though she sighed.

"Yes, mother, I s'pose so," she admitted; "but please hurry," she added, as her mother helped her up on to one of the long seats.

"Of course I'll hurry, precious," promised Mrs. Kendall with a kiss. "Now don't stir from this seat, dear, else mother won't know where to find you. I'm sure she can trust you! Good-by."

In appealing to her daughter's courage Mrs. Kendall had done a wise thing, as she well knew. Such an appeal was seldom made in vain. Margaret's father, who had died when Margaret was a year old, had been a soldier; and whether it were a hurt finger or a rainy day that threatened to bring tears to Margaret's eyes, the warning, "Soldiers' daughters don't cry!" never failed to bring a smile so brave that the tears could not fall.

"The conductor bowed very low"

"Of course, I'll hurry," Mrs. Kendall was murmuring, as she sped through the station doorway. "Dear child! but I'll be back before she scarcely knows I am gone."

The clerks, however, were busy when Mrs. Kendall reached the store and there was considerable delay before she could leave with her purchase. Perhaps it was this that quickened her steps almost to a run, or perhaps, it was the memory of a wistful, yet bravely smiling face under a wide hat-brim—whatever it was, Mrs. Kendall was certainly keeping her promise to "hurry" as she stepped from the curb-stone and started to cross the street.

Was it a careless chauffeur or a wet cobblestone? No one seemed to know afterwards, but there came a scream, hoarse cries, and then the rush of many feet. Later, a limp, unconscious form in a bedraggled dress of blue, was lifted by tender hands into the ambulance which had been hastily summoned, and which at once drove rapidly away with its burden.

Back in the street three policemen tried to bring order out of the chaos of shouting, gesticulating men and boys; and in the confusion no one noticed the little urchin who dived under a wagon and captured a lady's hand-bag—small, expensively made, and bearing the monogram, "AWK."

"Whew! Wa'n't she a swell one!" cried the boy a minute later, as he was examining his treasure in the seclusion of an alleyway near by. "Whew!" he whistled again, as he stuffed silver and bills into his pockets; "I reckon de gang gits a spree ter-night awright!" He paused, and gazed with frowning face at what was left in his lap: two keys, two trunk checks, a card or two, and a letter addressed to Mrs. Frank Kendall. "Hm-m, I reckon this is best fur them," he muttered, as he tore letter and cards into fragments; "an' I reckon it's jest as well if I ain't found with these," he added, as he dropped bag, keys and trunk checks into a convenient ash barrel. The next instant he gave a wild shout and raced off in search of "de gang" and "de spree."

CHAPTER II.

Left to herself in the huge waiting-room Margaret looked about her with lively interest. There was a lady with a pet dog near by, and a young girl with a cat in a basket across the way. The dog strained at his leash, and the cat pushed its head through the round hole at the top of the basket and made frantic efforts to shake itself free; but the basket and the leash were both strong, and all that the cat and the dog could do was to spit and to bark. By and by the woman with the dog got up and went away, and Margaret had only the cat to watch.

"You may come over here, little girl, if you like," said the owner of the cat pleasantly, as she noticed Margaret's interested gaze. "I think Tiddelkins would love to meet you."

Margaret had almost slipped from her seat to the floor when she suddenly bethought herself of her mother's admonitions.

"No, thank you," she said with much dignity, settling back in her seat. "I promised not to move. I'm waiting for mother."

THE new Serial which begins in this issue will prove of absorbing interest to all of our readers. The author has touched the "harp of life" with no uncertain hand. We will not lessen the anticipation awakened by the first installment of Into Still Waters, by giving an inkling of the plot. It will win a host of friends as it progresses, and it deserves to be read in every household throughout the land.

Let Us Fill the Famine Ship

ONCE more our government has accorded the highest mark of official recognition to the humanitarian work of the readers of this journal. In granting the request of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a famine relief ship for China, the Departments of State and War, with the President's consent, have given to the relief work in which our friends are now engaged the seal of official approval, as an enterprise which merits the cordial support of the American people. For our part, we are thankful to be privileged as the chosen channel through which this great international life-saving benevolence is to flow. God grant it may be the means of saving thousands of lives and of averting much suffering!

The army transport Buford, which has been specially commissioned for this charitable enterprise, is a gallant vessel and a quick sailer. She will sail the latter part of this month. General John Buford, in whose honor she is named, was a brave soldier who served with distinction as a cavalry commander during the Civil War.

This is truly "the King's business," and it requires dispatch. Every reader of this journal should be represented in the cargo of 10,000,000 pounds of flour, which the Buford will carry to the starving Chinese. Let all make haste to fill the famine ship. And, whether your gift be large or small, whether your share of the steamer's life-saving load is the price of a sack of flour or of a single pound, remember that it will in all probability be the means of rescuing one poor sufferer from death by starvation. Give as the Lord hath prospered you; even deny yourself for the sake of giving, for the need is great, the way is open, and the blessing that comes to every heart that does a kindness in His name is assured.

Responding to the urgent appeal in the cable despatch of Secretary McCrea of the Missionary Committee at Chinkiang, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has cabled an additional $50,000 to be apportioned equally between the two Famine Committees, and applied to immediate relief. It is essential that there should be no halt in the work. An interregnum of a single day would mean the loss of precious lives. This latest remittance makes the total amount forwarded by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund to date $150,000. When the Buford's cargo, now under way, is loaded and dispatched, the total will have reached $250,000—a splendid monument to America's practical Christianity.

The Passing of a Poet

WHEN Thomas Bailey Aldrich died recently at his home on Beacon Hill in Boston, the American world of letters lost one of its foremost poets; one who for a quarter of a century had been able to find a common chord in the great heart of his countrymen, which gave back a quick response to the truth and beauty of his verse.

Mr. Aldrich's literary work covered a wide field. Stories, plays, verses came from his gifted pen; but it is to the last that he owes his reputation, and it is his poetry that will live as an integral part of our literature. He did not often aspire to write upon heroic themes. He was a poet of nature, of life as it now is—not as it was. He saw Nature in her softer moods, and no one has better transposed those moods to paper so that the reader might feel them as they came to the eye and heart of the poet. It was this that made him so popular from the time he began to attract the notice of the reading public in the early "seventies." He was painstaking and his own severe critic, polishing his lines until they seemed to sing themselves. He was able to describe much in a single line, where others would have taken many:

> On still nights
> There is a folding of a world of wings.
> A drowsy murmur floats into the air
> Like thistledown.

His life was not one of struggle. He had to work during his boyhood in a counting-house, but success came to him with the first contributions to the periodicals. His was the happy fate to live in beautiful places, among beautiful things, to make the world itself appear more beautiful to those who read.

A Strange Movement

FROM a college in the South comes a remarkable story that reads like a reminiscence of the scenes in Edward Irving's chapel at the beginning of the last century, and like an echo of the story of events in the church at Corinth in Apostolic days. The minister who describes it, says that the power of the Spirit was never manifested so vividly in the whole course of his experience. Every one in the college is affected. "Cultured, refined, sedate, dignified young men and women, hitherto absolutely quiet, subdued and reserved in their religious experience, became suddenly and irresistibly possessed of a strange power, impelling them to shout, rejoice, clap their hands, and in divers ways give expression to the overflowing ecstasy which thrilled their souls. The young men literally take possession of the house, running, jumping and shouting vociferously, while the young women rise to their feet, clapping their hands, waving their handkerchiefs, laughing and shouting praise to God. The movement," says the writer, "had no beginning, has no leader, and possesses every feature of a most genuine work of the Spirit."

The narrative goes on to describe certain instances of the conduct of men affected by the strange power. Far be it from us to decry any manifestation of the Holy Spirit. The subject is too sacred, too mysterious for criticism in any form. Christ, describing the work of the Spirit, said it was like the wind that bloweth where it listeth and we hear its sound, but cannot tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth. Such scenes as those at the first manifestation at Pentecost make us careful of our words in regard to it. But all the more reason is there for being quite sure that the excitement in this little college is really the Spirit's work. It is so easy to mistake hysterical manifestations for divine power, that, knowing our own nature and our liability to be carried away by excitement, we have need to be cautious. Paul had to give such a warning to the Corinthians when they began prophesying and speaking in unknown tongues. The human mind is treacherous and the possibility of self-deception is unlimited and the contagion of excitement is very great. Therefore caution is imperative, lest the subjects of the movement suffer harm and do harm to others, by bringing religion into ridicule.

Time will show what the power really is and whence it comes. These manifestations are not the end of the Holy Spirit's work. They may accompany its beginning, but if they are the end they cannot be genuine. Not for such purposes does the Holy Spirit influence men. If the movement crystalizes into consecration to service; if the subjects of the influence emerge from the exuberance of their joy, devoted to Christ prepared to do and suffer for his sake; if their conduct in the world is characterized by holiness and earnestness and Christian love above others; then we may rejoice in the revived work of the Spirit in these lukewarm days. But if, on the other hand, the strange ecstacy subsides fruitlessly and burns out like a fire of straw, we may be sure that the work is one of purely human origin, the outbreak of human tendencies that are used to simulate the divine power.

Roumania and the Jews

IN the recent anti-Jewish outbreaks in Roumania and at various points along the Austrian frontier, there are ominous indications of the influence of Russia and of a tendency to imitate the methods of those Russian officials whose brutal treatment of the unfortunate Hebrews has shocked civilization.

According to the dispatches, the peasants in Northern Moldavia, usually a quiet and contented class, were stirred to revolt against the new taxes lately imposed by the Roumanian Parliament. In the large tow Botosahni, which has a population of some 40,00 demonstrations were so threatening that it was necessary to effect a diversion. Accordingly, with seems to have been deliberate purpose, the fury o mob was directed against the Jewish residents. Jewish quarter was ruthlessly plundered. Their cipal buildings were given over to the torch. storekeepers were beaten and their defenceless w and children—several thousands of them—were d out into the highways. They fled across the border Austria, where fortunately they were succored sheltered. Similar disturbances are reported in other towns of Moldavia.

This is a new experience for Roumania, which has hi to been regarded as a law-abiding and progressive kingdom. Among his subjects, King Charles nun 300,000 Jews. The ruling church is the Orthodox Gr but Catholics, Protestants, Hebrews, Mohammedans Armenians, till now, have lived together in peace toleration. But across the river Pruth lies Ru Kishinev, centre of massacre and scene of many pogr is near at hand. There, in the province of Bessara the ancient feud between Slav and Semite finds exp sion in hot carnage and rapine. That hatred, tr planted to Roumanian soil, bore its first fruits in Botosahni riots.

If proof were needed of official complicity in the break, it is furnished in the remarkable utterances of Prefect of the Botosahni district. Asked by the R manian Premier why he did not maintain order in territory, he replied contemptuously that no Roum ians were in danger, and as for the Jews, he "would give one Christian soul for a million of them!".

Russia sowed the wind in her cruel Jewish pers tions and she is still reaping the whirlwind. It wil well for Roumania if King Charles and his minis show to their people an example of religious and ra tolerance by making the little kingdom as safe for as for Gentile.

ussia's Second Douma

RE significant than any classification of numbers n the Douma elected by the Russian people, is the election of Feodor Golovin as the President. Reports from influential government newspapers declared that the people had elected more moderate men than were in the former Douma, and besides, they were so hopelessly divided into parties, that it would be impossible for them to combine in opposition to the government. This statement was negatived by the first vote of the Douma, when it was found that the Constitutional Democrats and the Radicals had cast a unanimous vote for Golovin, and that many men known as Octoberists, or supporters of the Czar's original pro-

Conservatives in the Douma, classes, including the retro- e party and the moderate ters of the Court policy, r about ninety; the Social- evolutionists and the Labor number nearly two hundred e Constitutional Democrats -two. These results show the Russian people are y resolved on reform, and heir representatives in the a, though divided in name, unit in opposition to the nment of the bureaus. Even Monarchists or Retrogressists onvinced that a change of n is inevitable and are anxnly that it shall not be too l. The struggle that must ably ensue will be watched intense interest throughout orld, and with sincere hope a basis may be found for ful agreement. The most e Conservative cannot fail to in the result of the recent ons, confirmed by the choice lovin as President, the doom e old system. That is the nce of all Russia, the edu- and the ignorant. The nts are patient, as they al- have been, but they are determined. It is a crisis. l parties God's Word is:

refore now let the fear of the Lord be upon you: take heed o it; for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor t of persons, nor taking of gifts (II. Chron. 19: 7).

Marriage in Egypt

aint ceremonies accompany a marriage in the land e Pharaohs. Ancient traditions are scrupulously ved and the rites that were in use centuries ago are arefully carried out. The bridegroom, if he is in ctable society, conducts the preliminary negotiations a deputy of the bride. If her father is living, he the part; if he is dead, some one, generally the st male relative of the bride, officiates. The bride, urse, as in all Mohammedan countries, has not been by her future husband. Some female friend, who een her, describes her to him, and if he decides to ed, he waits with some friends on her father or ty. If he is acceptable, the father states what dowry he expects, and if the bridegroom is satisfied with the terms, he pays two-thirds of it, the remaining third to be paid after the marriage. The ceremony of betrothal then takes place, the bride being still absent. The father and the bridegroom join hands with the thumbs upward, a handkerchief is thrown over the hands and a Moslem officer recites a chapter of the Koran and pronounces a blessing. Sherbet is then served and a dinner provided at which all present sit down. An interval generally of ten days ensues, during which furniture is sent by the bride's friends to the bridegroom's house. The bridegroom makes feasts for his friends, goes regularly to the bath, and performs various religious ceremonies. On the night agreed upon beforehand, the bride is conducted in a closed palanquin, slung between two camels, to the house of her future husband. She is accompanied by all her female relatives, and by musicians and other followers. This is a solemn occasion, and one of considerable state. Such a procession was recently witnessed by Mr. Paget, of the London Sphere, whose picture of it is reproduced on this page. The bridegroom, according to tradition, should be attending the Mosque when the procession reaches his house; but the bride and her relatives enter and await his return, when he sees his wife's face for the first time. Happy is he if she prove such an one as Lemuel's mother described:

She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life (Prov. 31: 12).

A Losing Profession

Two weeks ago a man named McNally went to the Tombs Police Court in New York and asked to be sent to the poorhouse. He was old and infirm, his clothing was in rags and his hands and feet swollen with cold. It was clearly a case for the almshouse or slow death from starvation. His request was granted and he was sent up. Less than fifteen years ago he possessed half a million dollars, all accumulated by crime. But the whole had been lost or stolen from him by gamblers, receivers of stolen goods, saloon-keepers and blackmailers. The police say that his experience is by no means unique, in fact it is the common end to a criminal life. They cite the case of another criminal known as little Adam, who burglarized a Boston bank and secured nearly a million. Altogether he obtained over three million dollars by bank burglaries. His companions and disreputable people of the other sex swindled him out of all and he died penniless five years ago. Another instance was that of a man named George White, whose robberies netted him more than two millions. He was known as an unlucky criminal, as he was tried and convicted several times, but never gave up his loot. His career began in 1875 and in 1906 he died in abject poverty. Like the others he sinned and suffered, and unworthy persons with whom he associated gained the proceeds of his crime. So in these late days the same law operates as in the days of the ancient prophet and men heed not his warning.

He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool (Jer. 17: 11).

A Bride of Modern Egypt Being Taken in her Palanquin to the Bridegroom's House

A Wife's Sentence

A pitiful story of marital misery was related recently in a court in Bayonne, N. J. It was the wife who, weary with the accumulated wrongs of twenty-five years, had at last invoked the law. The prisoner was repentant and pleaded for another trial. The Recorder, willing to be merciful, and knowing that the wife would receive no help from her husband if he sent him to prison during his incarceration, hesitated about sentencing him. The wife's charge had been clear and explicit. Her husband, she said, seldom worked at his trade; he lost one situation after another, and when he was at work did not bring his wages to support her and the family, but spent them at the saloon. The husband begged so hard for mercy and promised amendment so vociferously, that at last the Recorder said he would leave the decision to the wife. "You know more about the case than I do," he said, addressing the wife, "suppose you take my place and I will endorse any sentence you pass on him." The husband then addressed the wife. "Be easy with me, Mary," he whined. "I will behave myself this time and will bring you all my wages." The wife, however, was obdurate. She said: "You have been talking so for years. I have forgiven you again and again and you have gone away and got drunk and beaten me. I am tired of it and I want to see what effect your being kept from liquor will have on you. I think a month in jail will do you good." The Recorder promptly entered the sentence and the husband was led away weeping by the warden to begin his term. He must have been surprised that the woman who had borne with him, and had doubtless loved him, was more severe with him than the Judge would have been. But then she had suffered and her patience was exhausted. His mistake was such as sinners make when they think that God will always bear with their wickedness.

He, that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy (Proverbs 29: 1).

War About a Mule

A ridiculously inadequate cause is said to have precipitated the present conflict between Nicaragua and Honduras. The dispatches between the two governments show, that while an embittered state of feeling had arisen over the possession of a strip of land which both nations claimed, the dispute was in a fair way to settlement, when a new occasion for quarrel arose. A party of Nicaraguans was charged with entering the territory of Honduras and seizing a mule, which was the property of a Honduran citizen. The Nicaraguans did not deny taking the mule, but said that it belonged to a Nicaraguan citizen who, on account of his resistance to that government had taken refuge in Honduras. To this Honduras replied that the man from whom the mule was taken was a reputable Honduran citizen, who to his sorrow bore the same name as the Nicaraguan refugee, but was an entirely different person. This fact was disputed, and the conflict became so acute that peace negotiations were broken off. The war began, which now threatens to involve other States. The mule is notorious for the mischief he can do with his hoofs, but probably this is the first time he has been the cause of quarrel between nations. These two nations seem to have imbibed some of the mule's spirit. They may yet have occasion to wish they had heeded the Apostle's warning:

But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another (Gal. 5: 15).

SHOULD CHILDREN BE WHIPPED?

What Mothers of Experience Have to Say on the Subject

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A MOTHER who successfully trained a large family of boys and girls, as strong-willed as ever came into this world, each and all bringing honor to the family circle and great joy to the heart of the dear mother, replied, when she was asked "What do you consider the secret of successful training?" "Beginning soon enough."

M. H. P. "I have four boys, three of them are grown. They inherited from their father's side a very contrary high temper. I have raised them so that they are respectful children, though I had a long, hard battle. I never could have succeeded if I had not used the switch. I never punished them to appease anger, but I frequently waited a day or so before administering punishment. I would then take the child, explain his faults, give him advice, tell him that I must be obeyed, and then punish him. I never threatened without performing, any more than I broke my word if I promised a treat. Their father gave me some trouble by not keeping his word, but my sons who are grown tell me that, as they look back, they see that what I did was always right."

Christian Mother. "I am the mother of three and speak from experience. I heartily denounce whipping as a means of punishment. Do you know I find that punishment to the little ones generally has the opposite to the desired effect? It is my firm belief that most children can be handled better by gentle reasoning than in any other way."

A. M. H. "I remember very well when my own dear mother used to whip me. I always felt as if she whipped me in too wrathful a mood. When I had little ones of my own, I thought I would try a different mode of punishment. When they did anything that was wrong and grieved me, I used to sit down and reason with them and show them the better way. Then I would take them with me before the dear Lord, asking him to help them and give me wisdom to train them up for his glory. I had two little girls—they both passed away in one day. It was a great comfort to me at that time that it had never been my custom to whip my children."

J. M. T. writes: "I am a mother of seventy-two years of age, and have learned some blessed lessons from my own experience in training the young, but many more have I learned from the experience and testimony of others. I believe with all my heart that if parents would begin work with their children early enough, there would be no need of the switch."

E. J. B. "I am the mother of three boys, the oldest now seventeen, the youngest thirteen. I have always believed with our missionary friend that there are times when the switch is needed. My children, when very young, were allowed to sit at the table in a little high-chair. When they pulled the tablecloth or threw the dishes around or displayed their temper, they were punished by having their little hands slapped. Do the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD believe a baby under a year old can be taught what to do and what not to do by love? They do learn mother's love instinctively, but will that suffice to keep dishes in place, etc.? I think not. If our babies were allowed to have their own sweet way until they understood what love meant, our homes would be a perfect bedlam. No, the little babe is a little animal and he learns by experience even as we older children learn. If baby found that by pulling the cloth, slamming his tray and overturning the dishes these manifestations were received with love pats and smiles, baby would contrive to enjoy himself to his heart's content. Can any one say we could allow it? Now give baby's hands a good slap, the hands that did the mischievous work, and very soon baby will understand that when he does certain things he is made very uncomfortable. Even a dog learns by being hurt. How could we teach a dog or a cat to be cleanly except by whipping when it was otherwise, and yet our dogs and cats know that we are kind. They do not resent it. They know who feeds them and they appreciate the love and do also (when they are intelligent) learn to know what is expected of them. After all I think we must train all the young animals in the same way, including the human animal."

These experiences culled from a number of letters are glimpses into home life. It would be well for every mother entrusted with the care of young children to bear in mind: First, that she is training them for life, with all its temptations, trials and privileges; next, that it may be the Lord's will that her children should leave her early for the Heavenly Garden. Is she doing day by day for them and with them that on which she can ask God's blessing?

A certain child annoyed his mother very much day after day by violently dashing his cup of milk to the floor. Every attempt to break him of the practice proved futile. Finally Mrs. Lucretia Mott, wearing the quiet garb of the Society of Friends and with their serenity in her manner, came to make a visit in the home. She said to the child's mother, "Thee is mistaken in noticing the baby so much. The child is dramatic in his disposition and likes to make a sensation. Cover the floor with something thee does not care for and give him a tin cup and let him throw it down to his heart's content. Go right on as if nothing had happened. Thee will soon find that the trouble will end." And so it did.

A mother has sent us the following beautiful selection:

Be Patient With the Children

THEY have such tiny feet!
They have gone such a little way to meet
The years, which are required to break
Their steps to evenness, and make Them go more sure and slow.

They are such little hands!
Be kind—things are so new, and life but stands
A step beyond the doorway. All around
New day has found such tempting things to shi
And so the hands are tempted oft, you know.

They are such fond, clear eyes,
That widen to surprise
At every turn! They are so often held
To sun or showers—showers soon dispelled.
By looking in our face,
Love asks for such, much grace.

They are such fair, frail gifts!
Uncertain are the rifts
Of light that lie along the sky.
They might not be here by and by,
Give them not love alone, but more, above
And harder—patience with the love.

A JOLLY CROWD

There's very little troubles us, for fellows one and all,
We work and play, and every day obey our teacher's call.

How to Get Things Done

THE art of getting things done is one that requ as much study and application as any other tau in schools. Hosts of people begin well enough, but break down in the middle, leave their work unfinished, a at the end of a day or a eek, have little to show fo eir efforts. We know h it is in housekeeping. S e of us manage our h m by schedule t i m e. W ave days and hours set ap for definite tasks. We pl our work and we never le get ahead of us. Other eep house in a haphazard ay, and are constantly la nting that "we have no t e."

The fact is, that God ves us the same amount o me every day, and that we choose to waste it, or not put it to good accou we are responsible. An h in the morning is wortl wo later in the day, an for women at least, the hly possibility of getting ge done, lies in a good rt. They who, without ry and without fuss, pass om one duty to another, ey who understand that a eat deal of momentum i st if things are talked but when they ought to is process of doing, s el m have to complain that r work is beyond them.

As habit rules us wi an iron hand, it is wis or mothers so to train r children, that the hat of finishing everything th is begun shall be set in ir acter like hardened pl er of Paris in e a r l y l e. Nothing can stand before diligence, thoroughness nd conscience, in the day's work.

Selfish Prayers

Are we not a little startled now and then at the p nopoly self has in our daily prayers? A large pa of prayer, when prayer is at high-tide, is devoted to i r cession. A dear girl who very recently was called a y from a beautiful earth-life to fulness of joy in hea , was in the habit morning after morning of spending r silent time not in petitions for her own health and p piness, or even for her own work, but for dear fri s over the circuit of the globe. She had friends ev - where, for her soul was attuned to the highest friend p, and she loved to mention these by name to the one fri d who was nearest and dearest of all. When she had g , there were those who realized that they would miss n speakably the feeling that she remembered them at e throne of grace. We may train ourselves in prayer, n other departments of life and other uses of privilege, o forget ourselves, and as our Master did, seek bless s for our kindred, our acquaintances and neighbors and r the wide world. If only we could trace some migh y revivals to their source, we should find that the Ho y Spirit's power came in answer to the prayers of s e dear saints who seldom lifted up their voice in pub , who perhaps could give little money, but who of n communed with God in solitary hours.

Sixty Years a Sunday School Teacher

"IN the teaching of a Bible class lies the secret of longevity and the maintaining of a youthful spirit with gray hairs," says Mrs. Mary A. Wright, who for nearly sixty years has been a teacher in the First Baptist Sunday School in Burlington, N. J. Mrs. Wright, who is now six years beyond the "three score and ten," took her first Bible class in the Baptist Sunday School in Burlington when but sixteen years of age, and is still teaching. She joined the school when only eight and later, when she was given a class, the girls she taught were almost as old as herself. She continued for some time as an instructor of boys and girls; but in later years she has devoted herself to the teaching of adults, and her Bible class for women has long been the largest in the city. She is a remarkable little woman and her faithfulness and enthusiasm in her work has served as inspirations to the hundreds of younger teachers and scholars in the Sunday School, and to many others.

Mrs. Mary A. Wright

She comes of a family many members of which were prominent as Bible teachers. Her father was a minister of the Gospel and her mother was one of the first teachers in the First Baptist Sunday School, organized in Burlington in 1825. Her husband, the late Noah E. Wright, was also an active Sunday School worker, and for forty years was connected with the same school where his wife is still teaching, and where he himself was, for several terms, superintendent. Besides being a teacher, Mrs. Wright is prominent in mission work.

Teachers and officers of the Sunday School and members of Mrs. Wright's large Bible class tendered her a complimentary reception last month. Speaking of her career, Mrs. Wright says: "I have made many mistakes in life, but the teaching of the Bible is not a mistake. One would suppose that after so many years' study of the Bible it would grow old and uninteresting, but every time I read it I find something new. When I started as a Sunday School teacher I little thought that I would spend so long a time in the work, but had I my life to live over again I would still teach a Bible class. I will give you a recipe for keeping young, "Teach a class in a Sunday School."

A Jew Without a Bible

WHILE the Jews are commanded to teach diligently the Word of God to their children, and to talk about his precepts as they sit in their houses, as they walk by the way, when they lie down and when they rise up (Deut. 6:7), the Jew in America has, sad to say, practically eliminated the Bible from his home. A startling situation along this line is portrayed in the fact that of the more than 900,000 Jews of Greater New York, less than 28,000 are reported as being connected with some Jewish synagogue, or place of worship.

Rabbi Leopold Cohn reports an interesting incident in his work among the 250,000 Jews of Brooklyn, N. Y., which gives a keen insight into this singular condition of affairs:

"While visiting among my brethren one afternoon, in the vicinity of the Mission in Williamsburg," he says, "I happened upon an aged Jew, with flowing gray beard and venerable countenance. We engaged in conversation upon the vital Messianic theme. To prove to him that Jesus is the Messiah, I quoted that memorable prophecy of Jacob, 'The sceptre shall not depart from Judah . . . until Shiloh comes.' He recalled the verse faintly, as all the European Jews are familiar with the Pentateuch. But when the truth was strongly brought out, he began to express misgivings as to the correctness of the wording of the verse in question.

"Then, of course, I asked for his Bible, for the Jew will not believe the missionary's Bible, as he thinks the missionary has changed its wording. The astonishing reply was 'A Bible in America! America is only to make money. Who has time to read Bibles? But,' he continued, 'perhaps my neighbor has one.' We went from door to door among ten neighbors in the same house in search of a Bible, but could not find one. It is almost impossible to persuade the Jew in America to study the Bible; even if I offer him a Bible without money, he refuses to take it, except after he has visited the Mission and learned the value of the Word of God. I found in their homes the most advanced productions of modern infidelity—Darwin, Huxley, Buchner, all translated into Jewish—and these they devour with eager zeal for knowledge.

When I saw this strange condition, I felt the force of the word, 'My people perish from lack of knowledge,' and as I saw how eager they were for literature and enlightenment, I set myself to the task of writing a series of tracts in Jewish, suited to the Jewish way of thinking, and calculated to remove any doubts they may have concerning the Messiah. Each year, for seven years, a new tract was written; some friends donated the funds, and we had it set up, and now, whenever a reprint is needed the plates are used. They were hailed by the Jews with gratitude, and the Lord has richly blessed the reading of them to the salvation of many. Christian friends all over the country have sent for these tracts and distributed them among their Jewish friends, and have written encouraging reports concerning them. They have gone even into Russian and proved a balm to many suffering Jews during those horrible massacres."

Rabbi Cohn is now arranging for a new supply of tracts. About 100,000 tracts can be put at once to use. Any reader interested in assisting him in this work of spreading the Gospel among the Jews, by contribution or otherwise, may address Rev. Leopold Cohn, 620a Quincy Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Then Tiddlekins and I will come to you," replied the young girl graciously, as she crossed to Margaret's side. "There, now, this is all right; isn't it, Tiddelkins?" she finished, patting the cat's head.

For ten minutes Margaret forgot everything but the cat with the yellow eyes, the enchanting purr, and the seventoed feet—which last the girl cautiously pulled out of the basket for inspection; then the cat and the girl hurried away to take a train, and Margaret suddenly realized that she was alone, and that her mother had been gone a long, long time.

Quick tears came to the little girl's eyes, but she forced them back.

"Cry? Of course I'm not going to cry!" she stormed hotly to herself. "Soldiers' daughters don't cry!" So she lifted her chin, and tossed back her curls, and swung her feet very hard. She even began to hum a little song—a wavering, quavering little song full of pitiful jerks and breaks.

Richly gowned young women glanced at her and passed by. Motherly old women looked at her closely, and went by with more hesitating steps. One turned back and spoke.

"Are you alone, little girl?" she asked gently. Margaret shook her head.

"I'm waiting for my mother," she faltered.

"Oh, that's all right," said the woman with a relieved sigh, as she went on; but at the door she paused and looked back—and her face was troubled.

An hour passed, and still Margaret sat in the seat alone. The quavering little song had long ago stopped, and in spite of the soldier father, hot tears had from time to time rolled down the flushed cheeks and splashed on the black silk coat with its broad lace collar. More people came and went, and more women asked questions. Once a blue-coated man eyed her sharply, and then spoke to her; but to all she gave the same reply: "I'm waiting for my mother. I must stay right here. She said so."

To poor little Margaret it seemed hours since she began to watch the great door through which she had seen her mother disappear. So many, many people had passed through it since, and so many, many blue dresses had come into sight to bring a big throb of joy to her heart. But every time the blue dress had turned aside, and every time its wearer had shown an unfamiliar face to the anxious little maid watching so intently.

After a time it seemed to Margaret that if only she could reach the door it would be better there. She could see her mother more quickly when she came in. To be sure, there was the wide empty space between herself and the door, and she did not like to cross it alone; then, too, her mother had told her to stay where she was. Still, if she went to meet her, surely mother could not mind that!

Just as all this was reasoned out to Margaret's satisfaction, a man, woman and three children passed quite close to her seat; and with a glad little cry Margaret slipped to the floor, and in their company passed safely across the wide empty space between her seat and the door.

On the outer steps she paused. Even here mother was nowhere to be seen, though Margaret looked with anxious eyes up, down and across the street. Still, it was far better than inside, there was so much more to take up one's attention, and surely here mother must soon come into sight, Margaret told herself.

Little by little the hurrying throngs crowded Margaret quite off the steps and on to the sidewalk. As in the waiting-room people stared, and women and a blue-coated man asked questions; and as in the waiting-room she answered bravely, "I'm waiting for mother."

Five, eight, ten minutes passed, and no mother came. Margaret was thoroughly frightened now, and scarcely realizing what she did, she ran swiftly down the street to the corner. Surely there, where the two ways crossed, she might catch the first glimpse of the beloved blue dress.

CALLED HIGHER

Eliza C. Newman died recently in Boonville, Ark., in her eighty-sixth year. She was a consistent Christian from her early girlhood, always contending for the right against the wrong.

Mrs. Jane Botts, of Hurdland, Mo., went to her eternal rest on the 1st of October, 1906, aged eighty-nine years. Her friends rejoice in the knowledge that she dwells with the Saviour whom she served so faithfully.

Edward W. Findley passed away from Riverton, Ia., on December 26, 1906, aged seventy-three years. His wife, Mary E., followed him on the 11th of January, 1907. "United in life, in death they were not divided."

Mrs. Mary J. S. Sherwood passed to her rest from Moyersville, N. Dak., on October 23, 1906, aged seventy-eight years. She was a faithful Christian, patient and unselfish to the last. Her last words were, "Rest, rest, rest."

Mr. Daniel L. Lyon, of Vermillion, S. Dak., died on September 1, 1906, aged seventy-six years. For fifteen years he had been an interested reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and for the greater part of his life was a loyal Christian.

Mr. P. Midkiff, of Manchester, Ia., an old and valued subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, died at his home on the day following the celebration of his golden wedding anniversary. May the Comforter sustain his sorrowing widow.

John M. Robley died near High Prairie, Mo., on January 4, aged seventy-seven years. His last words were, "The angels are here now, calling me, and I must go." He leaves five sons, four daugters and thirty-four grandchildren.

Mrs. Elizabeth Bagley entered into rest in Auburn, Calif., on January 25, in her eighty-fourth year. Mrs. Bagley was a "shut-in" for eight years, but her loved ones are comforted by the example of her kind and faithful Christian life which she left.

Dr. C. Colegrove, of Holland, N. Y., died October 19, 1906, aged seventy-nine years. A thorough, lifelong student of the Bible, he believed and loved its teachings. He loved the helpful work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and did what he could to assist in that work, longing to do more.

Miss Carrie Dickinson passed to her reward from Texarkana, Tex., on June 15, 1906, in the forty-sixth year of her age. She became a Christian, and up to the time of her death was an earnest worker in the Master's vineyard. She had been a teacher in the public schools for twenty-seven years.

Rev. J. M. C. Hamilton died in Van Buren, Ark., January 7, aged sixty years. Under his long and faithful ministry in the Methodist denomination, literally thousands of souls were converted to God throughout Arkansas and the Indian Territory. His life is epitomized in the words, "He went about doing good."

Mr. Edward Bridson, an old member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD family, died June 9, 1906, in his sixty-sixth year.

"God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given;
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in heaven."

George Garrett Lifferson departed this life on November 27, 1906, in his twenty-seventh year. The only son and surviving child of his parents, he leaves to them the memory of his beautiful life, and the influence of his young manhood was a living testimony to the truth of God in his community.

Mrs. Mary W. Scott died in Paola, Kansas, on October 29, 1906, in her eighty-fifth year. She joined the Presbyterian Church early in life, and always lived an earnest and devoted Christian. Her last words were a prayer that "God would bring all her children home," and then "come, dear Jesus, come."

A single incident serves as a golden key to the beautiful life of ministry which is ended. A friend entered a Washington florist's to order flowers for the funeral of Mr. Wells. "Ah," said the florist, "there was no one like Mr. Wells. Never a day passed that the frail, old man did not come in to buy some roses, or a few violets, or a growing plant, to take to some one in trouble or illness. One day I visited a friend of mine, a poor old soldier, to find him as happy as a child over a rose that Mr. Wells had brought him. Think how I felt when I thought of the flowers that passed through my hands every day, and I had never taken one to my disabled comrade." "Death can never interrupt a faithful Christian life. Shocked and dismayed, with raining tears she wailed—
That now all kindnesses would be too late.

She spoke of all the things that people say—
Of flowers given to the sightless dead;
"And oh, I meant them while she was alive,

A FRIENDLY GROCER

Dropped a Valuable Hint About Coffee.

"For about eight years," writes a Mich. woman, "I suffered from nervousness—part of the time down in bed with nervous prostration.

"Sometimes I would get numb and it would be almost impossible for me to speak for a spell. At others, I would have severe bilious attacks, and my heart would flutter painfully when I would walk fast or sweep.

"I have taken enough medicine to start a small drug store, without any benefit. One evening our grocer was asking Husband how I was, and he urged that I quit coffee and use Postum, so he brought home a pkg. and I made it according to directions and we were both delighted with it.

"So we quit coffee altogether and used only Postum. I began to get better in a month's time and look like another person, the color came back to my cheeks, I began to sleep well, my appetite was good and I commenced to take on flesh and become interested in everything about the house.

"Finally I was able to do all my own work without the least sign of my old trouble. I am so thankful for the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.' It has done me so much good. I haven't taken medicine of any kind for six months and don't need any.

"A friend of ours who did not like Postum as she made it, liked mine, and when she learned to boil it long enough, her's was as good as mine. It's easy if you follow directions." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

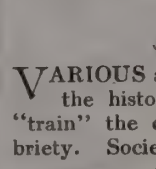
For a New Temperance Crusade

The Youth's Temperance Alliance of America, its Principles and Objects

By REV. ALEXANDER ALISON, D.D.

VARIOUS attempts have been made in the history of temperance effort to "train" the children in the way of sobriety. Societies have been organized, among these, for example, the "Cold Water Army," and the "Band of Hope." What prevented large numerical successes? Several reasons might be advanced. One appears to the writer as potent. They began with the "pledge." Only the boys and girls who took the "pledge" could belong to the organization. This limited the number who came under instruction. What about the unpledged? Probably seventy-five per cent. of a Sunday School remained unpledged. Not to exceed twenty-five per cent. of those over twelve took the pledge. The present plan believes in the pledge; it believes in the pledge being taken; it believes in the pledge being kept.



Alliance Button

The National Temperance Society, with its forty-two years of educational history behind it, with its abundant literature (its over two thousand publications of all kinds are in all parts of the world and in many languages) and its common platform, on which all churches and temperance organizations may stand, namely, total abstinence for the individual and the entire suppression of the liquor traffic for the State and nation, is organizing "The Youth's Temperance Alliance of America." This is an alliance of the young people of this nation against the legalized liquor traffic and for the surrender, without conditions, of King Alcohol. The Society feels that the coming years must be devoted to the preparation of the young for the downfall of that which has so long defied both God and man. The Bible says, "A little child shall lead them." We propose to take God at his word.

This Alliance is to be an alliance of the youth of our Sunday Schools, who will be gathered into fellowship. If its plans are carried out successfully, there will be a real "Federation of the Churches" before the churches, in a technical sense, succeed in reaching formal Federation.

Let me illustrate how we propose to operate this Alliance. Here is a community of from two to five thousand population with, say, five churches in it. In this community we organize a branch of the Youth's Temperance Alliance of America. This branch shall consist of the Sunday Schools of these five churches. Membership in the Sunday School shall constitute membership in the Alliance. "Pledge-taking" will, however, be kept to the front. Every time the Alliance meets, an appeal will be made for those who are willing to sign the pledge to do so. A book will be kept and a report made every month and a full report once a year of the number thus pledging. But pledging will not be the initial point. The Alliance will consist of two classes all the time—"the pledged" and "the unpledged"—both sitting together under the same instruction. The result of this will be that "the pledged" will increase in number and "the unpledged" will decrease.

The Alliance itself is organized in the usual way, with president, vice-presidents, secretary, treasurer and other officers. According to the programme, all local Alliances are to be organized on a similar model. The church is to take the initiative and prepare the way. The vice-presidents are to be the pastors of churches and Sunday School superintendents. Thus if in a given locality there are five churches, the five pastors and the five Sunday School superintendents—ten in all—would be chosen as vice-presidents. There would, of course, be the usual executive and other committees. Meetings should be held once a month for at least eight months in the year. No topic that might excite antagonism or create dissensions will be allowed to come up for consideration. The executive committee shall consider all questions on which differences of opinion may arise. Meetings may be held in the church buildings in turn. The programme will be supplied each month by a different school. This will produce variety. There will be a pleasant rivalry among the schools, which will prevent the interest from waning.

Rev. Alexander Alison, D.D.

Programmes may consist of recitations, readings and essays, songs, solos, duets, trios, quartettes, choruses, etc., by members of the school providing the programme for the month. The pastor, or some one appointed for the purpose, may at the close make an address and an appeal for pledge-signing. The meetings shall not be too protracted. They should be held Sunday afternoons. In places where the Sunday Schools meet in the afternoon, arrangements can be made for a monthly meeting after the schools conclude their sessions. In scattered districts, the Sunday evening service might be given up once a month to the Alliance union meeting.

My illustration has been that of the smaller community, a town of from two to five thousand, where only one branch of the Youth's Temperance Alliance of America may wisely be formed. I have not referred to the larger centres of population. Plans for the "big city," though apparently more complex, discover themselves to be no less simple than those for the smaller community.

The National Temperance Society will send to church and temperance organization workers generally, who may desire it, a printed booklet which will set forth the plan in detail. In this, it is made clear how all shades and opinions may find in the Youth's Temperance Alliance a common platform on which they may stand in fellowship.

If all branches of the great Temperance family unite in pushing this Alliance under the auspices of the National Society, until every village, town, city and state in the Union is thoroughly organized, it will only be a few years until victory shall be emblazoned on our banners.

Write to the National Temperance Society, 3 East Fourteenth Street, New York City, for "Model Constitution" and the booklet referred to above containing full information regarding the organization of local branches. Full instructions for organizing local Alliances will be sent on application, together with any special information that may be desired.

The Rev. Alexander Alison, D.D., who was lately elected General Secretary of the National Temperance Society, is well known among Presbyterians on both sides of the Atlantic. Dr. Alison is a native of Scotland which he left, as a young man, for the United States. He has, therefore, spent the greater part of his life in this country. He began his studies for the ministry before leaving his native land, and completed them on this side. His theological training was had in McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, where he spent the usual three years of study. He took an extra year of work and study in Canada. He has occupied the pulpits of many of the leading Congregational churches in London, and nearly all of the large Presbyterian. He has also conducted a variety of services in England, Scotland and Ireland and has been among the most active Temperance workers. In this country, he has occupied leading pulpits East and West. For six years he was pastor of the West Green Street Church, Philadelphia, where his success led to his receiving a call from the First Presbyterian Church of Seattle. The latter church doubled in membership during his pastorate. As a lecturer also he is well and most favorably known, and for many years has given much of his vacation time to travel and public speaking. His two sons are pastors of large congregations, one in New York State and the other in Delaware.

Dr. Alison's ability and energy along temperance lines mark him as a strong leader in that growing movement. His article in this issue, planning a new temperance crusade among the young, should be read everywhere.

How He Helped China

THE following letter, which tells its own story, may serve as an object-lesson to others who are interested in the Chinese Famine Relief Work.

EUGENE, Ore., March 13.

DR. KLOPSCH, Christian Herald:

Your little leaflet regarding the Famine in China reached me last Tuesday. On the same day I secured the consent of our daily papers to write articles about the famine in China, free of charge, and I gave them some very good stories about the conditions over there, and appealed to the people to attend a mass meeting the coming Sunday afternoon (having engaged the theatre and orchestra in the meantime). I also secured four good speakers to give ten-minute addresses, some musical talent etc., and then got out some handbills on Saturday afternoon. Sunday afternoon was a terribly stormy one, but I got out quite a good-sized crowd, and with the Mayor to preside, we raised $200.88. After paying expenses, I have a net sum of $177.63, which I inclose with this letter. Please use it for the relief of the famine sufferers in China, and with the prayer that it will do much good. I remain, &c., W. H. HALL, Mgr. and Supt. U. B. Sunday School.

Nothing a Surprise

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH: The "Worth While Library" is a library in itself. I had intended them for Christmas gifts, but I fear my selfish propensities will gain control and I will keep them myself. The Calendar also came, but not as a "surprise," for we always expect something good and get it.

M. C. MCKINSTRY.

For Whom Is Life Insurance?

It is not for the rich, nor the independent, nor the selfish. It is for the man who recognizes responsibility; for the man who will discriminate—who will take the money he needs for other things and put it in Life Insurance because he sees that the protection of his loved ones after his departure is the greatest need of all. Such a man is worth insuring, and such a man should be sure of his insurance.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company

offers such a man something as good as gold; a bond of the United States could be no better. Its policies give the maximum of security at the minimum of cost. In sixty-four years of history it has paid more money to beneficiaries than any other Company in the world. If you have obligations; if your life means something to others, insurance is for you. Investigate the cost of absolute protection in the Mutual Life.

The Time to Act is NOW.

the house began to rock and sway in the currents. The workmen rushed out and tried to wade ashore. The flow was too strong for three of them and they were swept away from the sight of their companions.

Cincinnati's Water Front at the Height of the Floods

The loss at Marietta was enormous. The water flowed in until the main street was all "a-wash," and after it ceased to rise, it remained stationary for a long while. Hundreds of people took what they could and left their homes at the mercy of the river, while they made their way to the hilly portions of the district. No supplies could come in from outside, and for a time there was considerable suffering as only a few small grocery stores on the hills could supply the people with food. All the stocks of provisions in the inundated business districts were of course destroyed.

At Gloucester, Ohio, seven business houses went down the river, while the lighting plants were rendered useless, adding to the general terror during the night. A great part of the residential part of the town was flooded. The mines were filled with water, and scores of horses were caught in the inrush and drowned.

The Far West has also suffered from inundations, the cause there being constant and heavy rains, instead of melting ice and snow. Many Californian towns were under water. Nearly thirty people lost their lives in that State. The village of Dreadful, near Oroville, was entirely swept away by the rapid rise of the Feather River. Two hundred people escaped and took refuge in the tops of high trees, where they remained without food for over two days Many, weakened by hunger, were almost ready to drop into the water, when relief boats arrived. One boat caught in the wreckage was overturned, and seven people were lost.

The business part of Oroville was six feet under water and all stocks ruined. Chinatown was eight feet under water, and twenty of its inhabitants were drowned. Rescue parties arrived in time to save many of the celestials who had been caught in their shops. The loss to this thriving town will be nearly $650,000, a large sum for a place of its size.

Stockton was covered with water four feet deep, but there was no loss of life. There was not a dry place in the district. The various towns affected both east and west are wondering if they must follow the custom of Holland and the people of the Mississippi valley, and intrench themselves behind dikes in order to make life and property secure. It is either that or beat a retreat to the hills and start over again.

A Russian Woman's Appeal

Russia's great and distressing need is eloquently set forth in a letter recently received by this journal from Mrs. Mary Weissberg, vice-president of the Copeck Union, which has established a Penny Famine Relief Fund. This is an association of Russian Christian women. Mrs. Weissberg writes: "It has saved many a thousand from starvation and a miserable death." The committee having the funds in charge send them direct to some trustworthy person in a famine-stricken village, and at the same time the starving peasants themselves are notified. There is consequently no opportunity for misappropriations or delays.

India Baptists and Our Orphan Work

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—It gives me great pleasure to communicate to you the following resolution adopted by the Annual Conference of the American Baptist Telugu Mission at its recent session in Nellore:

Resolved, That the Conference record its deep appreciation of the good work done by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its proprietor, Dr. L. Klopsch, in the support of so many orphans and destitute children in the Mission during the past six years.

WHEN DINNER COMES

One Ought to Have a Good Appetite.

A good appetite is the best sauce. It goes a long way toward helping in the digestive process, and that is absolutely essential to health and strength.

Many persons have found that Grape-Nuts food is not only nourishing, but is a great appetizer. Even children like the taste of it and grow strong and rosy from its use.

It is especially the food to make a weak stomach strong and create an appetite for dinner.

"I am 57 years old," writes a Tenn. grandmother, "and have had a weak stomach from childhood. By great care as to my diet I enjoyed a reasonable degree of health, but never found anything to equal Grape-Nuts as a standby.

"When I have no appetite for breakfast and just eat to keep up my strength, I take 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with good rich milk, and when dinner comes I am hungry, while if I go without any breakfast I never feel like eating dinner. Grape-Nuts for breakfast seems to make a healthy appetite for dinner.

"My little 13-months-old grandson had been very sick with stomach trouble during the past summer, and finally we put him on Grape-Nuts. Now he is growing fat and well. When asked if he wants his nurse or Grape-Nuts, he brightens up and points to the cupboard. He was no trouble to wean at all—thanks to Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. AWAY FROM HOME

By Mrs. M. Baxter

A LARGE number of such as are true believers, so far as they go, but whose lives are not of the Abraham type, find their type in Jacob, they are really God's children, but they do not reach the true spirit of sonship. They are not continuously "led by the Spirit of God," and so are not the (grown up) "Sons of God" (Rom. 8: 14). They are as the "heir" in a state of childhood, who differs nothing from a bondservant though he be lord of all; but is under guardians and stewards until the term appointed of the father (Gal. 4: 1, 2, R.V.). Jacob partly trusted God, and partly trusted himself, he partly sought the glory of God and partly his own interests. God could not have trusted Jacob with the tests to which he could call Abraham. While Abraham carried out God's purpose, voluntarily, and at a cost to himself, so manifesting God's likeness in his walk and conversation—Jacob served God's purpose in spite of himself by showing forth the faithfulness of God to his covenant, and his patience and forbearance in bearing with one who understood and honored him so little.

Just as a wayward, heartless son who sets himself against all the tender, holy influence of a godly mother, nevertheless serves God's purpose in educating that mother, and so giving him the opportunity to manifest his grace in her trying circumstances, so Jacob did.

Jacob had obtained the birthright from his brother, but how should he get his father's consent to this shameful transaction? Once off the lines of true rectitude, a child of God must meet with all kinds of hindrances. God is against the way which he takes. Knowing that God had foretold to Rebekah, his mother, that he should take precedence of his brother, Jacob, nevertheless, had not confidence enough in God to trust him that he would accomplish this purpose, unless he himself had a hand in bringing it about. In the depth of his heart he trusted himself more than God. How far may his mother have been responsible for this! It was a pitiable step for a mother to take when Rebekah made her plan for her darling son to deceive his blind and aged father. She was sowing the seed in her son for a life of crookedness; she was saying to him practically: "God is not to be fully trusted; by foul means, if fair means will not succeed, we must secure to ourselves what he has promised."

Thus the mother and the son dishonored God by unbelief, and sowed want of confidence in the heart of Isaac, who could never again trust his wife as he had done before. They set the example of duplicity before their household, and showed that people who believe in God, and set a value on his word of promise, can yet be double in their dealings! They made the conversion of the high-spirited Esau almost impossible, and they broke up the peace of the family.

God must interpose when his children thus wrong him. Such things could not go on unrebuked; God hates sin while he loves the sinner. The love was strong between the mother and son, and it was just on this point that trial must come. Esau, unconverted as he was, despised and hated his brother Jacob. Inconsistent believers are held in the utmost contempt by those of the unconverted who have something of natural nobility about them. It was a sad time for this family. The father had sought his own way and not God's in giving the blessing, and God had thwarted him in the most painful way; all the three who were on God's side had failed, and the apparently most righteous in the family was the unconverted son. How often this happens where God's children are not of the true Abraham type, not fully entering into God's purpose to make man like himself and so they hinder God's work!

When You Look in Your Mirror Are You Satisfied?

Any Woman Can Have Good Health, a Refined Face and Good Figure

SUSANNA COCROFT

MANY a woman has surprised her husband and friends by giving 15 minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to special directions which I give to her for the care of health, face and figure. Over 20,000 women have studied themselves under my direction in the past five years.

Are You Tired of Drugs?

I use no drugs. I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercise for nerves and muscles controlling such organs, bring a good circulation of warm blood which I purify by teaching correct breathing and by prescribing the special diet, bathing, etc., adapted to each individual. I strengthen all your vital organs, lungs, heart, nerve centers and send your blood bounding through your veins as when a child.

I develop or reduce your figure to correct proportions. I teach you to stand and to walk with an ease and dignity which at once bespeak culture and refinement.

Clear Skin and a Good Figure

Every figure can be rounded out symmetrically unless bones are missing or tissues entirely wasted away, and the woman who carries from 20 to 100 pounds of superfluous flesh every time she moves has my sympathy—but she does not need to do so—and surely it is every woman's privilege and duty to keep herself attractive and pleasing.

When you request details about my lessons, I send you free, a booklet showing you how to stand and walk correctly, with a card of correct poise for your dressing table

The following are some of the ailments I correct. For details about my personal instruction, write me which symptoms apply to your case. If you are suffering from any other ailment write me fully and I will frankly tell you, without charge, if I can help you.

Too short
Thin bust
Thin chest
Thin arms
Thin neck
Round shouldered
Superfluous flesh
Prominent hips
Protruding abdomen
Height Weight
Do you stand correctly
Completion
Do you walk gracefully

What My Pupils Say of My Work

I wish every nervous teacher could know what benefit is to be derived from your physical culture.
I have lost 73 pounds, and was never better. I look ten years younger.
My biliousness is entirely relieved.
Just think how I have gained, since I began with you, from 112 to 137½ lbs. in one year.
My catarrh and lungs are much better and my body, which was a bony, crooked structure, is actually beginning to look like your picture of correct poise.
My head is steady, the confused feeling having gone. It is the best money ever spent for myself.
Just think, Miss Cocroft, before I took up your work I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I could digest tacks. I am so happy.

Personal Instructions Write me fully, also letting me know your faults of figure, etc. I will make a personal study of your case and will let you know whether I can help you or not. Your letter will be held in strict confidence. I never publish letters without special permission, though I can send you hundreds of testimonials from women I have helped, who have given me permission to show their letters.

The Fruit of Trickery*

MORE in touch with us, more like ourselves is the character of Jacob than those of Abraham and Isaac. We can understand the man, appreciate his temptations and his faults and his struggles, and can sympathize with his sufferings. The Bible is very frank about him. We know his tricks and his petty meannesses. We realize how unbrotherly he was in bargaining with his hungry brother for the soup; how wicked he was in deceiving his blind old father, and how crafty he was in overreaching his uncle. The man was selfish and unprincipled and was not particular about the means by which he became rich. Well, his type has persisted, and specimens of it are with us to this day. Esau was his twin brother, and it must have appeared hard to him that a few minutes' difference in the time of the birth should make so much difference between the lots of the two.

If by dexterity and craft he could set the apparent injustice right, the temptation to do so must have been strong. Then, too, in his uncle's house, it was "diamond cut diamond." Laban had deceived him and had saddled him with a woman he did not want. During the seven years he was working for Rachel, the sense of injury must have galled him. A man who had tricked him, he seemed to think, deserved to be tricked, and so he arranged his plan to get the best of the flocks.

It was at Jabbok that the change came. In modern language we should call that night of wrestling the time of Jacob's conversion. He was a new man after that. The danger threatening him and his loved ones brought him to pause. He did not know whether on the morrow he might not lose his own life and those of Rachel and Joseph. The danger was very near, and very terrible, and Jacob knew that his own tricks had brought it upon him. He learned then that his own strength and shrewdness had prospered, but had yielded an awful harvest.

The struggle that ensued taught him a lesson. Not his thigh alone was out of joint. His pride, his shrewdness, his self-confidence fell, and he rose no longer Jacob, the Supplanter, but Israel the prince whose power was in his God. He was a new man, but the old man had sown the seeds that the new man must reap. His sons were tricky as he had been, and they deceived their father as he had done. When he wept over Joseph's bloody coat, he must have remembered his own sins. The end was peace, but who can tell what he suffered before it came? A troubled life in which we see sin bringing its fruits in sorrow and sadness.

What One Old Woman Did

IN the far-off isles of the sea there lived not so many years ago a little old Filipina woman, of whom it can truly be said, "She hath done what she could." This woman, like many others of her race, had been helped from heathenism into a certain degree of enlightenment by the Spanish friars, who occasionally visited the town, or barrio, in which she had her dwelling-place. She knew something about the Saviour of the world from their teaching, but only in the most meagre way, and the mother of the Saviour meant just as much perhaps to her as did the name of the Saviour, for they are taught to give her reverence and to worship her and to think of her as almost, if not altogether, divine. While she believed as she was taught and did her best to be satisfied with the little learning she received, yet she longed for a better realization of the true life.

In the course of events, the Philippines fell into the hands of the Americans and missionaries were soon at the front, bringing with them some copies of the Bible, printed in Spanish. Hardly a day passed without some natives being arrested for different causes and it happened that the son of this little old Filipina woman was so unfortunate as to be among the number. From his native town he was taken to the penitentiary at Manila, at which place his mother was allowed to visit him occasionally. During one of her visits to the capital, she became the possessor of one of the Bibles which had been translated into Spanish and she soon learned that she had "the priceless gift." It was entirely new to her and with great joy she read it at every opportunity and upon her return home carried it with her.

Being a true disciple of Christ, she preached him and began at her own Jerusalem. She lived in a small and poorly-constructed house, but this was her home and to it she invited her friends and neighbors and to them she read the Word and taught the people as best she knew how and they heard her gladly. The meetings grew and soon her home was too small to accommodate the number that nightly gathered there. They contributed enough money to build a small chapel, in which services were regularly held, over which this brown-skinned Filipina woman presided. The people came from far and near and it was not very long until the chapel was too small. About this time a missionary had been sent to them, and what was his surprise to find a chapel with a large congregation and this in a place where a Protestant missionary had never set foot! It soon became necessary to build another chapel in a nearby barrio for the accommodation of those living at a distance from the "home church."

This woman left the place for a while. She went into another province where the Word had never been taught. Immediately upon her arrival she began to teach and to preach. A church was soon established and is now in a flourishing condition and supplied by a missionary. From the original church in the town in which this woman lived, there have grown up three other churches and many souls have been converted and saved for Christ. Not long ago the woman who accomplished so much was called to her reward.

God in Christ*

IN the early history of Christianity there was no subject so hotly and vigorously disputed as this of the Incarnation. Endless were the theories broached, some making Jesus all divine, others representing him as wholly human with merely a divine inspiration. Others made a division of his nature, representing his spirit as divine, and his mind, or brain as human. Some contended that in knowledge he was only man, while others insisted that he had divine knowledge. Some argued that he knew only the science of his time, while others held that he anticipated the discoveries of scientists to the end of time. Profitless discussions, all of them, engendering bitterness and attempting to explain the unexplainable.

At the end of nineteen hundred years, we are still incapable of rationally explaining the Incarnation. A few there are, who have a pigeon-hole in their minds for every theory, and profess to know exactly what Christ's nature was, but the more devout and modest are content to leave it among the mysteries that will not be solved until we have the quickened faculties of heaven itself. On the one hand they hold the statement of Christ himself (John 14: 9), "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." And on the other, the same authority (John 10: 36), "How say ye of him whom the Father hath sanctified and sent into the world. Thou blasphemest because I said, I am the Son of God?" Between the two statements there is the widest room for all worshipful faith and for the charity that does not quarrel with our brother who differs from us.

Setting aside intellectual difficulties, the Christian's part is that of devout thankfulness for the revelation itself. We could not have comprehended the nature and character of God without Christ. He revealed God to us in his own person. We see God in him. The pure spirit which we know God to be, is inconceivable to us; but since Christ came we have learned to love God, to call him our Father and to believe that in worshiping Christ we worship God himself.

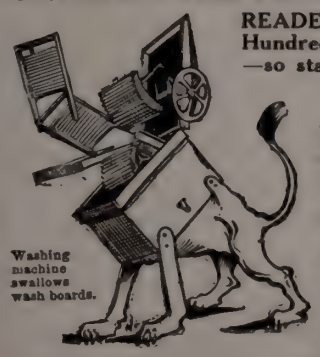
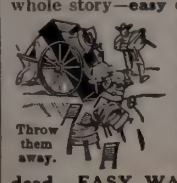
SOMETHING'S HAPPENED! FOR WOMEN'S SAKE. SOMETHING KILLED!

READERS LISTEN SHARP, DON'T MISS—BEST THING EVER HAPPENED!
Hundred years coming, here at last full grown—so startling will say it's impossible—but wait, don't worry. LADIES, THERE'S NO MORE WASH DAY! IT'S DEAD! LAID AWAY! WIPED OUT FOREVER.



Washing machine swallows wash boards.

The world's watched for the man to cut wash day in two. He lives—taken more than half—left only minutes—cut so much wash day's all over, changed—there's new way cleaning clothes—different from anything known—new principles, ideas, methods, EVERYTHING NEW. Wonderful, but true, family washing cleaned with no more work than getting a simple meal, less time—no rubbing, squeezing, pounding, packing, pressing, no injury—no drudgery—that's past. Good-by wash boards, washing machines, laundries—throw them away—the EASY WAY is here to bless humanity. Women have prayed for death of wash day—for clean clothes without rubbing—ruining health, looks—when they could wash, get dinner, see friends, indulge in recreation without fatigue—when women thought no more of washing clothes than to get a simple meal. That glorious day has come. The world's full wash boards, so-called washing machines, yet wash day same as ever—still long, dreary day—no easier, no shorter, no better. Use wash board or washing machine, it's drudgery, long hours, hard work—backache—a day no woman forgets. Invention that killed wash day named EASY WAY—name tells whole story—easy on clothes—easy used—kept clean—handled—easy on women—makes washing easy—easy to buy and sell. Not called a machine—powers inside concealed—caution the way it gets dirt—has awful appetite for dirt—increases more it gets—goes after all the dirt in all the clothes at same time—little, but mighty—silent, but powerful—uses no spirits, yet works in darkness. OPERATED ON STOVE—move knob occasionally—that's all—scarcely anything to do but wait between batches—child can do it. All iron and steel—always ready—sets away on shelf. Entirely unlike old methods. Verily, wash day is dead—EASY WAY settled that—woman's joy and satisfaction. Less than an hour cleans washing which before took all day—cleans all clothes, finest laces, curtains, etc., in about one-tenth time without rubbing, squeezing, packing, pressing—without chemicals to injure goods. Saves 52 days drudgery yearly—makes woman's hardest work easiest household duty—saves clothes, labor, fuel, health, looks. Surprises all—sounds strange, is strange, but listen, it's no experiment, going on daily. You can do it.



Throw them away.

Blessing the Inventor.

J. McGEE, Tenn., writes:—"One young lady cleaned day's washing by old method in one hour with EASY WAY. Another in 45 minutes. Everything as clean as could be." E. Questions and Answers

NOTICE

FROM this date, our undertaking to answer by mail, letters in which ten cents are enclosed for reply, is withdrawn. Letters asking for information of general interest will be answered in The Mail-Bag as speedily as possible. In some cases where, in our judgment, good may result from a personal answer, we will reply by mail. We cannot answer inquiries of the nature of conundrums nor those written for the purpose of argument.

F. R., South Jacksonville, Fla. Who is the American Minister to Colombia?

John Barrett of Oregon. You can get the report mentioned in your letter by writing to the Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

J. M. S., Santa Monica, Calif. 1. What was the length of the period from Adam to Christ? 2. Do the Greeks and Italians speak the ancient languages?

1. By reckoning the ages of the patriarchs as given in Genesis 5, and later generations as given in Chronicles and elsewhere, Biblical students have arrived at the conclusion that there were about four thousand years between Adam and Christ. The estimate, however, carefully as it has been made, is unreliable for various reasons. 2. No; modern Greek and Italian differ widely from ancient Greek and Latin.

Dr. B. T. Jones, Shuqualak, Miss., writes, apropos of a recent communication in THE MAIL-BAG:

Don't you think this has been the mildest winter we have had in years? Not a flake of snow have we seen this season, nor ice but once; and that as thin as a wafer. Thermometer has averaged about fifty-five in shade.

In most of the middle and northern States, the winter, on the contrary, has been exceedingly severe, with the heaviest snowfall in many years.

Iva G. C., Salem, Ore. An editor here, in an article on plagiarism, said that even Christ had borrowed the Lord's Prayer from the sacred writings of the Hindoos. Is there any truth in the statement?

Such a charge cannot be substantiated. It is, however, admitted by commentators that the Prayer is based upon expressions and sentiments already familiar to the Jews, and that parallel phrases may be found in the Talmud, but this does not detract from its beauty and originality as a whole.

Nella S., Ruffsdale, Pa. How many foreigners came into the United States during 1906, and did not the largest percentage of them come to Pennsylvania?

1,100,735 immigrants came in last year, of whom 880,036 came through New York, 54,064 through Baltimore, 23,186 through Philadelphia, 62,229 through Boston, and the remainder through other United States ports and through Canada. It is not clear that the majority went to Pennsylvania, and we do not think it likely, although many may have gone to the mining districts in that State.

Sophie E., Ventura, Calif. 1. Should religious appeals be addressed to the reason or the emotions—to the heart, to use the common phrase? 2. A young minister tells us that we should dwell more on Christ in the life, his example and teaching, than on his suffering on the cross. Is that right?

1. Religious appeals should be addressed to both the reason and the emotions. There is excellent ground for appealing to both. Some people, according to their nature, yield more readily to one than the other. There are some who are convinced and know what they ought to do, but do not do it until the heart supplies the motive force, and then they enter in with enthusiasm. On the other hand, a convert moved only by the emotions is liable to fall away when the impulse passes, unless he is shown that his new life is right and reasonable. The office of the Holy Spirit is not limited to quickening emotional life but to convincing the world (John 16: 8). 2. Such a minister must ignore much of the teaching of Christ and his apostles. Jesus said: "I lay down my life for the sheep" (John 10: 15). "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish" (John 3: 14). The epistles are full of the Cross. Peter is very emphatic: "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree (1. Peter 2: 24). Christianity without the Cross is ineffective, as your friend will find.

W. E. M. 1. Where did we get our surnames from? 2. How came there so many nationalities?

1. Surnames did not come into use before the tenth century A.D. Before that time people usually carried a given name with the name of their occupation or residence attached. 2. As a result of many political causes. Within the period of written history many nations have appeared, flourished for awhile and then lost their nationality. Several nations belong often to the same race. If you refer to races in your question we refer you to any good encyclopedia.

Subscriber, Gouverneur, N. Y. In what part of the Alps is the "Weghorn"?

You probably mean the Weisshorn, which is one of the highest peaks in the Pennine group, the great chain which includes Mont Blanc and Monte Rosa. The Weisshorn's altitude is 14,804 feet.

C. M. J., Seattle, Wash. Can you help me learn the origin of the expression "drawing the long bow," as applied to a story whose truth is doubtful or much exaggerated?

It probably originates in that many of the longest bows of this sort have been drawn about bows and arrows. It does not of necessity imply the telling of a falsehood, but of a story so marvelous that it is a decided strain upon modern credulity. Virgil tells of four archers shooting for a prize, the mark being a pigeon tied to a mast. The first man hit the mast, the second cut the cord, the third shot the free pigeon and the fourth created such a friction with his shot that he set the feathers on fire. The stories told of Robin Hood's archery are astounding, and many others justify the dubious use to which the term "drawing the long bow" is put.

A. C., Chicago. How long did it take Thomas Jefferson to write the Declaration of Independence. Did anyone assist him?

Jefferson, as chairman of the committee appointed for the purpose, wrote the first draft of the Declaration of Independence. Franklin and Adams, as associates, suggested two or three alterations, which were made, so the document stands substantially as Jefferson wrote it. No one knows how long it took him to prepare it.

Th. V. M., Pasadena, Calif. Where did New York get its name and what is its derivation?

It was named in honor of the Duke of York, afterward James II., after the English took possession in 1664. In the old Latin deeds it is called Novum Eboracum. "York" is derived from the Saxon Eurewic, meaning "a town on the River Eure." The Romans Latinized Eure into Evora or Ebora and wic into vicum, but the Saxons afterwards restored the older form of the word.

F. C. T., Chambersburg, Pa. I should like information upon the subject of "Scotland's Maiden Martyr." I have recently heard a fine recitation bearing the title, but could not decide whether she was a character in fiction or history.

She was a noble character of history. On May 11, 1685, the "two Margarets" of the poem—one a widow, the other a maiden of eighteen years—suffered death for their faith under the cruel persecution of James II. of England. They were sentenced to be drowned, and were tied to stakes in the sand at a point between low and high water mark, which was overflowed by the Solway twice each day. The elder Margaret was placed nearer the advancing flood, in the hope that the contemplation of her last agonies might reduce the maiden to submission. But the courage of the survivor was sustained by as lofty an enthusiasm as any in the history of martyrdom. AMERICA'S FIRST PEACE CONGRESS

SUNDAY next, April 14, will be a memorable day in peace annals, as it will witness the assembling of the first National Arbitration and Peace Congress ever held in America. Although the Congress is called by Americans, for the purpose, among other objects, of choosing American delegates to the Hague Peace Congress which meets in June, it will, to a very considerable extent, be international in its personnel and in the character of its work. Among those who will bear a prominent part in the historic Congress will be many who are eminent in various walks of life: legislators, educators, jurists, high public officials, and distinguished divines. It is expected that President Roosevelt; Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada; Secretary of State Root, Ambassador Bryce and Baron Descamps of Belgium, will be present; Mme. Van der Poorten-Schwarz, the famous Dutch author; Presidents Butler of Columbia, Hadley of Yale, Eliot of Harvard, Jordan of Leland Stanford, Woodrow Wilson of Princeton, and a host of similar literary and educational celebrities. Congressman Richard Bartholdt of Missouri, an ardent peace lover, will be there, as President of the American Interparliamentary Group, and so also will Senators Bacon of Georgia, Burrows of Michigan, Warner of Missouri, Newman of North Carolina, Foraker of Ohio, Knox of Pennsylvania, and others. From the House of Representatives, too, there will be an able and eloquent contingent. All the Governors of the various States and the Speaker and President of each State Legislature have been invited. The Judiciary Committee of the Congress will include Justices Day and Moody of the United States Supreme Court, and the leading Judges of the Supreme Courts of the various States, and through this committee, invitations have been extended to many other judges in the lower courts.

The Carnegie Palace of Peace at the Hague

M. Cordonnier, of Lille, France, has just been appointed to superintend its construction. The illustration is from the architect's drawing

Besides the foregoing, there will be present representatives of patriotic societies, commercial bodies, and religious and ethical organizations. Nor will the interests of the women of America in the peace movement be overlooked, for Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, Mary E. Wooley, Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, Mrs. Florence Kelly and other talented ladies will have an opportunity to speak. The foreign contingent will include many distinguished men, among them Sir William Turner, Principal of Edinburgh University, W. T. Stead, Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, of France, Theodore von Moeller, of the German Privy Council, Dr. Reinhold Koser, Chief Director of the Prussian State Archives, and others.

There are many questions of urgency connected with the progress of the peace movement which the Congress which meets in Carnegie Hall next Sunday will probably consider. The opening session will be largely devoted to religious services. Addresses will be delivered by Bishop Potter, Bishop Vincent, a Catholic archbishop and a Jewish rabbi. While this programme is being carried out in Carnegie Hall, all the churches in Greater New York at the same hour will conduct peace services.

At the sessions of the next three days, the following topics will be discussed:

1. The establishment of general arbitration treaties between all nations.
2. The establishment of a world congress, advisory in character.
3. The preparation of a code of international laws for the adjustment of all international differences by an approved court.
4. The question of gradual disarmament.
5. The Nicaragua-Honduras-Salvador trouble may also be considered.
6. The proposition for the establishment of an international police system.
7. An educational peace propaganda, to apply to schools and other educational institutions.
8. The appointment of American delegates to the Hague Congress which meets in June.
9. The establishment of a permanent American peace commission with suitable headquarters, and with the special purpose of spreading peace principles throughout the Union.

Within a few weeks, an organization, which will no doubt be represented in the Congress, has been formed in New York. It is called the Association for International Conciliation, and Andrew Carnegie and Hon. Andrew D. White are honorary presidents. Its object is to co-operate on an extensive scale with a parent body of the same character now

Morning Scenes

TEXT: GENESIS 21:14

"And Abraham rose up early in the morning"

GOD had promised Abraham that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, and for a long time Abraham's unbelief gave him trouble. His brain was puzzled by the problem as to how God could fulfil his promise. His first thought was that he would have to fulfil it through Eliezer, his steward and heir, if he died without issue. In chapter fifteen God speaks in vision and says: "Fear not, Abraham: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." Abraham's reply shows that he is fearful about the promise, for he says: "Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?" God had said, "I am thy exceeding great reward," and yet Abraham asked, "What wilt thou give me?" He is not quite satisfied with God himself as a reward; he wants something from him. The gift is in mind rather than the Giver.

Abraham's Mistake

Abraham had not yet learned the great fact revealed in Hebrews 11: 6, that "God is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him;" seek him, not his. God delights to give all he has to those who desire only him. The promise is repeated to Abraham with the assurance that his own child and not his steward's shall be his heir, and that his descendants shall be like the stars of heaven for multitude. Abraham believed in the Lord, and "it was accounted unto him for righteousness," and yet there was in him unbelief enough to lead him to ask of God a token; he desired more than the bare word of God. When told that he would inherit the land on which his tents were then pitched, he replied, "Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" In answer to this question Jehovah sends him the vision of the divided carcass. "And, lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him." Unbelief always brings a horror of great darkness, and God's goodness leads him to make the darkness so dense that we are oppressed by it, and made to cry unto him for deliverance. As Abraham is so anxious to see God's method of doing things, he lifts the veil of the future and lets him behold the suffering his posterity will endure on account of the very kind of unbelief that is now filling him with a horror of darkness.

Though God renews his covenant, Abraham is still troubled about his ability to fulfil his promise, knowing as he does that Sarah has passed the time of life for child-bearing. So he and Sarah decide that the only thing for them to do by way of helping the Lord in the matter is to adopt the polygamous customs about them. Hagar, the Egyptian maid, is near at hand, and Sarah suggests her as a suitable second wife. The whole arrangement was born of the sin of unbelief, and the results could not fail to be disastrous. Within a short time there is a family quarrel, and the gentle Sarah is turned by jealousy into a fury, treating Hagar so cruelly that she flees from her presence.

When the child of promise is born, Abraham and Sarah see the awful blunder into which unbelief has led them, and now they must meet its consequences. At the great feast on the day of weaning, Ishmael, now about fourteen years of age, mocks and persecutes little Isaac, and Sarah insists that mother and child shall be cast out of their home—not taking the matter in her own hands as she did once before, but casting the responsibility upon Abraham where it belonged.

Hagar Cast Out

This brings us to the early morning scene in which Abraham, obeying the voice of his wife which God approved, with kindness, gentleness and forethought, and yet with great firmness, thrust the mother and child out into the wilderness. "And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a bottle of water, and gave it unto Hagar, putting it on her shoulder, and the child, and sent her away, and she departed and wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba." It is a morning of retribution. He is reaping the harvest of the sin which he and Sarah sowed when they, prompted by diplomacy rather than by faith, broke the law of God by taking a second living wife. And sin never fails to bring its harvest of retribution. "Be sure your sin will find you out." It is a persistent detective that tracks sin to every hiding-place, and finds us when we least expect it. It disturbs all the relations of life, turns music into discord, and delights in breaking hearts and ruining homes. No sooner have we made it our ally than it becomes our enemy.

Sin's Harvest of Sorrow

Sin broods a thousand sorrows. It pours its inky blackness into every crystal cup of joy. It corrodes the metal of any character. Promising a garden of delights, it gives a desert of grief. It poisons every spring of comfort and muddles every stream of pleasure. And back of every sin, as with Abraham, is unbelief. If there were no unbelief there would be no sin.

The early morning hour is a good time for facing the fact of sin, and doing what God tells us to get rid of it. The refreshment of body and vigor of mind which come with sleep help us deal with it unflinchingly. The result of our sins in the past cannot be ignored. To overlook them is to leave fire in the midst of combustible and, it may be, explosive material.

The black cloud of retribution in the early morning has on it the rainbow of an obedient spirit. Abraham has no disposition to fight against God. To turn out Hagar and Ishmael according to the demand of Sarah was grievous in his sight, but when God expressed his approval there was no hesitation. He permits the spiritual to rule the natural, and the will of God is supreme. There is no appeal from his authority, and Abraham desires none.

Have we learned the secret of doing disagreeable things because they are right? Is there joy in pleasing God while we crucify the flesh? Has our inner consciousness been brought into subjection to the Spirit of God? Is our conscience regulated by the Word of God rather than by our desires? If not, it will pay us to rise early in the morning and let God deal in faithfulness with us. Open your Bible and let the light of his truth fill your soul, while the light of the sun enters the window. The need of the broom, suggested by the dust revealed in the clear morning sunlight, may make you realize that there are some things in your heart which need to be swept out. Keep before God in prayer until he shall subdue the stubborn will. Ask him to give you grace to cast out every Hagar and Ishmael that robs you of peace and prevents you from living the obedient surrendered life.

The New Testament Type

In order to get out of this morning's scene all there is in it for us, we must turn to Gal. 4: 28. "Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless, what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free. Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."

Hagar represents the carnal, sinful nature, always under the condemnation of the law which enslaves us if we yield to it, while Sarah represents the spiritual nature, always under grace, the supremacy of which makes us free. Ishmael is the child of the flesh in conflict with Isaac, the child of the Spirit. Ishmael was the child of unbelief, Isaac of faith. Ishmael and Isaac cannot agree; one or the other must be cast out. The flesh and the Spirit are forever at variance; they cannot be reconciled. Ishmael always will persecute Isaac. He must be displaced from his position as heir, and Isaac given his full rights. The new birth is the birth of Isaac into our souls, and Ishmael, the older nature, begins at once to oppose. "The flesh warreth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh." If, therefore, we would stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, we must be liberated from the dominion of this old nature, while the new nature which enthrones the Son of God and yields to his Spirit, reigns within us. With this experience da the morning of true liberty in the soul.

Now let us turn to another morning in Abraha life. This also is a morning of testing.

"And Abraham rose up early in the morning, saddled his ass, and took two of his young men w him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for burnt offering, and rose up, and went unto the place which God had told him." Gen. 22 : 3.

And yet in the following verse we are told that "the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes and saw place afar off." He went to the place early in morning which he did not really reach until three da afterward. The journey was virtually made before left the tent. He lived over the day while the sun w rising. In the early morning hours we often feel t burdens and cares of the day that is to follow. In ima ination the battle is fought before we reach the enem In our consciousness the burdens press upon us befo we get under them. Many a man has risen in the mor ing with the feeling that the day is to be one of gre trial or joy, and the trials come to him before he go to them. He journeys to Mount Moriah with his b for sacrifice before they have started on the journey.

The Test of Faith

There is in this early hour's experience a testing faith, and we are told in Rom. 4: 24 that "Abraha staggered not at the promise of God through unbelie but was strong in faith, giving glory to God, and bein fully persuaded that what he had promised he was ab to perform."

One of the most pathetic things about this chapter the fact that the name of Sarah is not mentione Abraham bore the burden alone with his God. H would not break his wife's heart by telling her of th trial through which he was going, and he did not e pect to break her heart in the evening by returnin without Isaac. In Gen. 22: 5 we read that he sai to the young men, "Abide ye here with the ass, and and the lad will go yonder and worship and come agai to you." "I and the lad will come to you." He e pected to bring the lad back with him. The explan tion of this is given in Heb. 11: 19, where we are tol that Abraham believed that God was "able to raise hi up, even from the dead; from whence also he receive him in a figure." God had promised that in Isaac a the families of the earth should be blessed, and Abraha believed that this promise would be fulfilled, though i required a miracle.

Physicians place their patients on the table and giv them anesthetics which virtually kill them for hours a a time. They do this because they have faith in scienc founded upon the laws of nature, and they expect th patient to recover from this temporary death. Abraha believed in God as able to raise from the dead just a implicitly as the physician believes in the law of Go which, through the anesthetic, produces temporar death. He did not try to explain how it might b done; all that belonged to God. He simply believe that God could do the humanly impossible for those wh trust and obey.

Obedience Tested

There was also in this early morning hour the testing of obedience. God had commanded a thing that wa revolting to a father's heart; though, if Abraham re garded human sacrifice as no sin, he simply shared the prevalent belief, but he regarded God's will as supreme His standard of right was the will of God. He believed that it was right simply because God willed it, for the infinitely holy God could not do wrong. God knew that Abraham would stand the test, and that the result would be just as it was; and, instead of encouraging human sacrifice, he thus won Abraham entirely from this practice of the age, by teaching him that the living child, thoroughly devoted to Him, was what he desired rather than the killing of the body. The substitution of the ram suggested the great principle of substitutionary sacrifice which would come by and by on Calvary. Abraham "by faith saw that day and was glad."

Along each entrance are a line of small chapels in which are found images to the Virgin and other popular and paying saints. Most of these images are decorated with costly adornments of silver, gold and other vestments. In line with the columns are two rows of confessional boxes, around which are grouped numbers of devotees awaiting the opportunity to pour their sins and griefs into the ears of the confessor. Around the high altar, elevated some four feet above the floor, are four-and-twenty beautifully carved choir seats for the liturgical service and the accommodation of the canonigos and the archbishop; the whole is a very fine sample of old Spanish wood-carving. Rising from the choir is the host chamber with a crucifix over it, and above this a picturesque dome, supported by delicate, gold-coated pillars in which is an image of the Virgin and the child Jesus in her arms.

Let us leave the building by what is called the "Jewish Gate." Here pictures of heretics and Jews condemned by the terrible Inquisition were, until quite recently, on exhibition in this doorway.

In a country which does not enjoy religious liberty and before such an array of monks and churches it is easy to understand that the restrictions and persecution imposed on native Protestants are worthy of the days of the Middle Ages. Indeed, Rome still claims to be the same relentless foe of human liberty and intellectual freedom. How long Article IV (which prohibits the public exercise of any other religion but that of the Roman Church) will stand as an article in the political constitution of Peru we cannot say; but we know that the country's free, democratic basis must ever be in opposition to a system which strangles every claim which may be set forth by the people to think for themselves about God's revelation to humanity.

We are thankful to note that the daily experiences of the Bible colporteur of the British Bible Society, as he offers his books on the streets and church squares of Lima, prove that the liberal element of the country recognizes the fact that progress and civilization have always gone hand in hand with religious freedom, and when the colporteur is harassed by the priests in the streets, a majority of the audience will always vote for the colporteur against the monk. We could multiply incidents of this character, but one which was photographed and published in one of the leading popular dailies of Lima will illustrate public sentiment.

In the historic square of the Church of San Augustin, in Lima, our men were surrounded by a large crowd to whom they offered the Scriptures, after faithfully and clearly expounding the contents of the Bible. A popular monk of the order of the Barefooted Friars, pushing his way to the centre of the crowd, began to refute the Bible being sold by our men, basing his authority on a wrong interpretation of Article IV of the Constitution. With a torrent of fiery Spanish eloquence, he overbore the policeman who ordered him to move on and leave the colporteurs free to sell their Bibles.

The Chief Inspector of Police now appeared on the scene, and invited our colporteurs to sell in another part. The majority of the crowd of people protested against this measure, saying it was the priest, and not the Bible-sellers, who made the disturbance. The Inspector explained, though quite aware of this, that he had made the suggestion only to avoid further disturbance in this busy thoroughfare.

What a blessed privilege to bear the Bible to the people in any land; but how much greater is that joy to those of the land of the Incas who are living in gloom and superstition, and without the light and life of the Book through which God speaks to mankind of sin and death, redemption and eternal life.

Callao, Peru. A. R. Stark.

t the test of obedience was in the fact that the and contradicted the promise. How can God the families of the earth through Isaac according promise, if Abraham is to sacrifice Isaac accordthe command? The sturdy hero of faith does oncern himself about the promise. That is God's nsibility and he has nothing to do with it. He is rned only with the command which imposes nsibility upon him. He will obey implicitly and God to fulfil the promise in his own way. In our the command and the promise may seem to be in ct. The promise says, "My God shall supply all need according to his riches in glory by Christ ," while the command bids us be honest, faithful, whatever be the loss or gain.

re is a man with a family of eight children; he small income; he does not see how these children e reared and educated. One day a proposition is to him that he sign a certain document, and the will be $50,000 in his own pocket. That amount ney will make him easy in his circumstances, and e him to educate his children, but to sign his name to that document would be a dishonest act. He does not even stop to consider it. He says, "If I give my children no education, and leave them not a dollar, they shall have at least the heritage of an honest, truthful father." Men are often tempted thus to do wrong on the right side. They would help God take care of them by adopting the maxims and methods of diplomatic dealing in the business world, and, while they make money, they lose character. Usually God's promises inspire us to obedience. There is reward in doing his will. But in the case of Abraham the promise discouraged obedience, for it looked as if there could be no fulfilment, if obedience resulted in the death of Isaac. It is ours to obey, and God's to fulfil the promise. Let us do our part, and God will never fail to do his.

There is again in this early morning hour the testing of love as it is seen in the spirit of sacrifice. It ought to be easy for anybody to give up sin which pollutes, poisons and kills. When we find sin in our lives, we should hasten to take God's side against it, and in his strength cast it out; but the testing which tries our love for God comes when we are called upon to give up what we know is good. There was no harm in Abraham's preserving Isaac as the son of his love, but now God requires of him his most precious treasure and there is no hesitation. With a readiness that seems almost more than human, he consents to lay on the altar the one whom he and Sarah love above their lives. He expects to receive him back, but the test of giving him to sacrifice is still severe.

We believe that all we give to God will come back to us in God's way, and yet we shrink from the ordeal of laying everything upon his altar. It is easier to cast out the Ishmaels that give trouble than to give up our Isaacs in whom the heart delights. The fact is, Abraham laid himself upon the altar with Isaac: it was the day of his death and resurrection. And the strong young man could have resisted the old father and escaped, but when he was told that God would furnish a lamb, he yields without a murmur. He is himself willing to be placed on the altar in obedience to God's command, and he comes from that altar as from a Calvary of Sacrifice, beyond which is the resurrection life. The night of testing is followed by the morning of joy.

Hurrying Forward the Work of Filling the "BUFORD" with the Life-Saving Grain—She Goes Direct to the Centre of the Famine

THAT "all things work together for good" to those who are earnestly striving to serve God and humanity, has been illustrated in a most remarkable manner ever since the beginning of the present Chinese Famine Relief campaign. And now, close upon the heels of the generous grant by our government of an army transport, to convey the cargo subscribed by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers and their friends throughout the country, we are enabled to announce that Messrs. Edward H. Harriman, of the Union and Southern Pacific Railways, and Marvin Hughitt, President of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, have donated to the Fund the splendid gift of free transportation over their lines from Minneapolis to San Francisco of 1,000 tons of flour, which has been purchased there to form part of the steamship Buford's cargo. This gift by these two railway magnates is equal in round figures to $15,000—equivalent to the saving of 15,000 famine sufferers from starvation.

Famine Sufferers Lined Up for Relief Distribution at Nanking

These 1,000 tons of flour, filling two trains of twenty-five cars each, are now on the way to the Buford's dock in San Francisco. The balance of the cargo is being purchased in San Francisco, through the Commissary-General of the War Department, and paid for by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. The entire cargo will be consigned to United States Consul-General Rodgers, at Shanghai, as the representative of our State Department. That official is now making all necessary arrangements for its reception and distribution. He cables, under date of March 25, to the State Department:

"Request Transport Buford will be ordered direct to Chinkiang for discharging cargo. Time, expense, trouble saved in so doing." In the same cablegram, Consul-General Rodgers acknowledges the receipt of the $50,000 cabled last week by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of which $25,000 goes to the Missionary Committee at Chinkiang, the balance to the Civic Committee in Shanghai. This considerable sum, together with shipments of American foodstuffs from other sources, will keep the relief workers supplied until the great cargo itself reaches Chinkiang.

On its arrival, the hardest, most energetic, yet most hopeful work of the campaign will immediately begin. Arrangements will be made for systematic and extensive distribution in the territory along the banks of the canal, by the use of native junks, each of which will be under official supervision. Distributing stations inland now in operation will be supplied by carriers, and new stations opened wherever needed. Both Relief Committees are working harmoniously in preparing for the big cargo, and the local authorities are ready to offer every facility.

In a cable message to this journal, dated March 28, the editor of the North China Daily News says:

"Destitution is taxing Relief Committees in the absence of proper governmental machinery, but the missionaries are responding nobly. Everything is proceeding smoothly. Rioting has not yet been serious. American relief contributions are two-thirds of the total thus far received."

The famine has now spread to a sixth province, Kiangsi, the southernmost of the group of provinces. This no doubt explains in part the statement in the cable message just quoted that the extent of the destitution is "taxing the Relief Committees." Between 15,000,000 and 20,000,000 are now affected by the famine, and the difficulties of transportation and distribution must be largely increased. However, it is hoped that the foodstuffs now in hand and on the way, together with the $50,000 remittance forwarded last week by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will enable the work of relief to go on uninterruptedly until the arrival of the Buford with her big cargo at Chinkiang. The rioting referred to in the cablegram may be due either to the general distress or to the efforts of seditionary societies to foment rebellion, or both. In either event, the arrival of a great relief cargo cannot fail to act as a palliative. It will not only save many thousands of lives, but in the opinion of well-informed observers in China, who are in touch with our State Department, it will g... far toward checki... disturbances and re... order. The Peace Congress

HOW important the Peace Congress, which will commence its sessions next Sunday in Carnegie Hall, New York, may be, no man can estimate. It may exercise an influence on the approaching Conference at the Hague that will be felt in every nation in the world. As will be seen from the descriptive article on another page of this issue, there will be men in attendance whose ability and influence give them the right to speak on the subject—men of sound judgment, wide knowledge of international affairs, and the purest motives. There should come from such an assembly thoughts that will influence the deliberations at the Hague, and tend to make its conclusions practicable and effective.

It is most earnestly hoped that the Sunday session, at which doubtless the message of the Prince of Peace will be impressed on the delegates, will exhaust the doctrinal and theoretical tendencies of the Congress. The world does not need to be told how dire an evil war is, nor to be taught the blessings of peace. All too long has this poor world been convinced of this by sad experience. It has seen its harvest fields torn up by the tread of armed men, its buildings blown to pieces, its families robbed of fathers and brothers, and its finances crippled for generations to pay for cannon and ammunition, and it does not need to have orators and statesmen declaim on the evil. It is slaying the slain, threshing out old straw to do this. The duty to be done is practical, and we look to these men of wisdom, who are coming from all lands, to show how the duty can be done. They will not be hampered by the rules laid down by the Czar for the guidance of the Hague Conference. They may speak their minds freely and without fear of offending this or that potentate.

It is possible that this Congress may even prepare a definite programme for presentation to the Hague Conference, which that body may consider and accept, or amend, without prejudice. The problem is not so difficult as it might appear. Two highly placed men sitting on thrones get into a quarrel and, as in the days of Frederick II. of Prussia, seven years of war follow to decide whether he or the Empress of Austria shall hold Silesia. Or, as in the days of Napoleon I., all Europe is trodden down and men die by the million, before his ambition is controlled and he is safely caged up. The business of the Hague Conference is to discover a way in which such men may be restrained and prevented doing public mischief, as we restrain lunatics and bullies in private life. But it may be a little delicate in a conference in which every nation represented is a sinner, to devise such methods. This, however, might be done in a free Congress like that in New York. The delegates at the Hague might really be glad to have such work done for them and might cheerfully accept a programme that comes to it from a disinterested source and one without prejudice, save against men who want to trouble the earth. If the New York Congress will do this, it will do a useful work that may exert an influence that will be felt the world around.

Luminous Generosity

WHEN the history of the current famine in Northeastern China is written—as written it surely will be and by native historiographers—two names will be luminous by reason of prompt and princely generosity. The names are those of E. H. Harriman, head of the great Union, Central and Southern Pacific Railway systems, and Marvin Hughitt, President of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway.

When the efforts of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to secure from the United States Government a vessel for the trans-Pacific carriage of a cargo donated by this paper to the starving Chinese, were crowned with success, and the army transport Buford was assigned, the question arose, "How shall railway transportation of the 1,000 tons (10,000 barrels) of flour, bought in Minneapolis, from the Mississippi to the dock at San Francisco, be arranged for without a serious drain upon the funds set apart for purchasing additional food supplies?" Railway freightage on the thousand tons meant an expenditure of nearly $15,000, and $15,000, if applied to food purchase, meant the salvation of fifteen thousand lives.

In this dilemma, it was decided to appeal to Messrs. Harriman and Hughitt, whose roads form a connecting line between Minneapolis and San Francisco. Frankly and simply the facts in the case were put before these rulers of the rail and as frankly the query presented, "What will you, what can you, do to help?" Response was instant and far in excess of the highest hopes. "We will take the thousand tons free," was the reply.

By this action Messrs. Harriman and Hughitt and the roads they represent have earned full meed of gratitude, high accord of honor. Big men themselves and apt in the handling of big affairs, they did a big thing quickly, simply, effectually, without haggling, without possible hope of reward, save the approval of their consciences and the approbation of good men and women throughout the world. In the broad sense, and to those possessed of imagination, it is well-nigh impossible to gage the greatness of the results this generous gift shall aid in securing.

The Upward Look

IT is very beautiful, that lily of the field. But whence are the beauty and glory in which it is arrayed? The answer is simple: They are the equal product of the earth and the heavens. Round its roots is a rough, dark substance that soils the fingers. But overhead is the sky, with its light and the blue air and the soft dews; and the beauty of the lily is something in which heaven as well as earth has a part. The lily needs more than the earth, it needs the sky.

This is a parable homely enough, but is it not one that we need to learn? How many people are trying to achieve moral beauty without a sky—without a heavenward outlook! They say, "The earth is good enough for us; life and love are enough; what do we want with heaven?"

A man had a pet eagle, which he caught young and brought up like a domestic fowl. After some years, the owner, who was about to leave home for a long absence, decided to give the eagle its freedom. He brought it out of the enclosure and turned it loose. It walked about quietly and seemed to have no thought of flying away. The man was disappointed. He took up the great bird and set it on the garden wall. It stood there for a few moments, and then looked up toward the sky. Suddenly it seemed to remember that it was an eagle, whose home was amid the cliffs and the crags. It lifted one wing, then the other—a moment more and it was gone, soaring away into the blue sky.

What a desecration of life it is to live in the dust when we were created for the heights, noble and divine! Let us lift up our eyes to the hills. We were made for God; we were made to fly. Earth cannot make us perfect; we must enlist the heavens. There is no beauty without the upward look, no fine achievement of character without the sense of God, the choice of his light and his home.

The Joy of Service

THAT the spiritual life has its attractive and even romantic side, is well known to every Christian who has made any substantial progress in that life. It affords experiences that have no parallel in the worldly life. When we have laid our selfish desires, our indulgences, and our follies upon the altar of sacrifice, and have disciplined our minds and accustomed our bodies to service as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, then we begin to realize the true joy of service. And our hearts overflow with gladness as we feel that the loving offering is acknowledged and made a means of blessing to others.

Seldom has this condition been more happily illustrated than in the biographical sketch of a Christian business man, which we publish on another page of this issue. His first experience in service was in personally supporting native missionary teachers and preachers in the foreign field—the same service, in fact, upon which many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are now entering, in connection with our plan of personally supported native missionary substitutes. This, with our merchant, was merely the entering wedge. It has led to a long life of full, joyous, fruitful service, marked by a faith that is noble and a consecration that is complete. How he opened a ledger account with "The Lord's Fund," and gratefully set aside an even half of all his increase to be expended "for the glory of God and the benefit of humanity," and how the divine blessing rested upon this spiritual partnership, is a story which deserves to become an object lesson and an inspiration for Christians everywhere.

Yet it should not be forgotten that much of the joy of such service lies in the absence of all self-seeking and personal glorification. The faithful servant does not seek worldly aggrandizement. With a heart filled with love for the Master and yearning with a passion to win souls, he is ready if need be to lay everything altar of service. He knows that the treasures of are not as the treasures of heaven, and that the su man's real, abiding riches is his spiritual posse And so he plods on in humble service, but w great joy in his soul, as he remembers that "the turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars f and ever."

The Counter Drift

A LESSON might be learned by those disconl ones who have tired of life in the country, two classes of people who live in the city, if they to come for a while from their healthful surroun and mingle with those who have fought the worl lost and those who have fought the world and wo the lesson were well studied, the student of social ditions would again set his face homeward, happy his home was where the sky was really blue, inste a thick covering of factory smoke, and where ther more green grass than a few discouraged shoots a base of a statue in a city square.

The young men and women are coming in an eve creasing stream from the farms to the large cities, the impression that only in the latter is life really the living. They find that while they are endeav to get in, there is a counter current of thousands t to get out. If they strike the level of the "discourag they will find them longing for a chance to be sent t country, where they know that the blackness of the ments may be forgotten in the work in the fields they strike the level of the prosperous, they will find trying to decide where to buy their homes in the cou where they can renew their health and spirits in roundings that make life really worth the living.

Those who have become tired with the bleak, months in the country, and who feel their blood stir the impulse of spring, and who intend, with the ac of the pleasant weather, to leave the home nest and their fortunes in the cities, would do well to study counter drift. They may find that a fortune comp of good health and the certainty of employment is b than a small gambler's chance of success where thous have tried and failed.

Why not stay where those who are considered fav of fortune and those who are bankrupt in spirits pocket, are endeavoring to come?

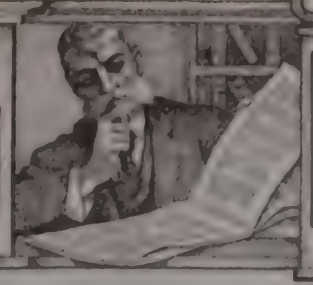
THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER



Before Moses

UR readers will be pleased to see the photograph on this page of one of Egypt's Pharaohs, who, as a boy, may have known Joseph in his old age. The excavators, under the superintendence N Theodore M. Davis, the American archæologist, oeen busy with pick and shovel for some years, and nearthed the mummies of many of Egypt's most s kings and queens. Among them is that of the f Seti I., the father of the great Rameses II., who he oppressor of the Israelites. The Bible says arose a new king who knew not Joseph." This oken of Rameses, son of Seti. Perhaps if Seti had seen Joseph, the spectacle of the aged statesman ave made little impression on the young Egyptian , and that he did not communicate to his son, who ore knew not Joseph.

neses reigned over Egypt for over sixty years, which he enslaved Jacob's descendants, who had e so numerous that Rameses dreaded their power. odus we read his argument. If Egypt should be d by foreign foes, or if civil war should occur, and aelites, as clannish and compact a race as they w, should join the enemy, the Egyptians would be ad case. His remedy, never a wise one on the f any monarch, was to oppress them. We know quel—how, in spite of his precautions, Moses sur- and was taken into his own house as the adopted f his favorite daughter. It is the body of that grandfather, embalmed and mummified, which has found and photographed for the first time, thirty- undred years after his death. The body of his powerful son had previously been found and been in an Egyptian museum for any one to stare at. he old monarch shares the same fate. His features more repose than those of his son, more dignity, rocity and cruelty, though they do not attain the y of the bas-reliefs executed of him by the courtly ors. There is, however, no doubt of his identity. gyptians always took care that there should be no ke about their deceased kings. They inscribed on rcophagus in which they were laid and on the in which their bodies were wrapped their first , their royal names and their Ka names by which were known. He may have been as handsome as s-reliefs indicate, for we see only his mummy, the and shriveled presentment of his living form.

e of the strangest temples in Egypt is that of Abu- el, a picture of which, by Messrs. Underwood, ap- on this page. It is in the Nubian district, and is seen from a boat on the Nile. The tic statues which adorn it, some of over sixty feet high, overwhelm the r who enters it. They are cut in the rock and must have required a long d to execute. It is thought that it cut by some king of the fourteenth sty, that is, about five hundred years e Rameses; but that monarch, jealous y glory attaching to a predecessor a rival, is believed to have had the of the builder chiseled away and ve taken credit for the temple him- This is not the only instance in h the unprincipled old man did this . If the grotto-temple was really the of Rameses, some of the cutting may been done by Hebrew slaves, under whips of his relentless task-masters. treasure cities they built for him, m and Raamses, have now been un- red. Thus, in a time when confirma- of the Scriptures is needed, it is ght to light, as the inspired poet said: th shall spring out of the earth (Ps. 85: 11) appeal from a Surrogate's Court in a of northern New York has been red on behalf of a young lady who plains of a broken promise that the r court declines to recognize. It ap- s that a wealthy merchant and his being childless proposed to adopt a girl whose father was dead and the ner scarcely able to support her. The ner was very reluctant to part with her , but, reflecting that it would be for girl's advantage, and that she would better cared for and educated in home of the rich childless couple than under her own care, she consented to the adoption. The child went to her new home and her mother came to New York to earn her own living. The child was duly educated and her foster parents promised to leave her all their property. But, like many procrastinating people, they let the years slip by and neglected to make a will, and when the old man and his wife died recently their adopted daughter, now grown to womanhood, found her claims ignored. She is now bringing witnesses who know of the promise that was made to her. No such difficulty can ever confront those who become the adopted children of God. Their heritage is secured to them by his love and his promise.

Ye have received the spirit of adoption, and if children then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ (Rom. 8: 15–17).

Wrecked by a Wreck

A steamer of the Hamburg-American Line which arrived at New York last week, brought the crew of a barkentine which had been rescued near Hogstye Reef on the Bahamas. The Captain, a seaman of long experience, said the wreck of his vessel was the most mysterious he had ever heard of. He had kept careful reckoning, and according to his compass and chart he should have been a long distance from the reef. Suddenly, and without the slightest warning, the vessel smashed broadside on the rocks. He was completely at a loss to account for it, until he and his crew struggled through the waves and reached the reef. Then the mystery was explained. A large steamship laden with steel rails had been wrecked on the same reef some weeks before. The vast mass of steel had fallen on the reef when the steamer broke up, and its influence was quite strong enough to affect any compass that came within a short distance. On the reef at about fifty yards' distance was the wreck of a large schooner. Thus one wreck leads to others. It is frequently so in the moral and spiritual world. No man is wrecked for time and for eternity without exercising an influence over others. It ought to be an influence of warning, but too often it is one of attraction.

Be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren who trespassed against the Lord God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation, as ye see (II. Chron. 30: 7).

On a Crumbling Ledge

A press despatch from Los Angeles, Cal., describes the rescue of a New York tourist from a position of extreme peril. The tourist had worked his way down a steep cliff, with the object of reaching a bathing place at the mouth of an unfrequented canyon in the vicinity of Catalina Island. He reached a narrow ledge, when he felt, to his horror, the rock crumbling beneath his feet. He tried to go back and to go forward, but every step seemed equally insecure. His only resource was to get as close to the cliff-side as he could, and wait for rescue. Afraid to move a step, lest the entire ledge should fall, he crouched for two days and nights on the only part that appeared solid. He saw several boating parties pass far beneath him and shouted to them, but none heard him. Hungry, thirsty and almost dead for lack of sleep, he at last attracted the attention of a party of fishermen who went to his relief. He had no sooner reached solid ground than he swooned from weakness and nervous strain. In the moral sphere men are frequently less wise than he. Though they know the path is crumbling under them as they tread the paths of sin they struggle to deliver themselves or go on to destruction instead of stopping and waiting for Christ to rescue them.

Their strength is to sit still (Isa. 30: 7)

A New Use for Convicts

At a meeting of the Maryland Medical Association, recently held in Baltimore, one of the physicians made a novel suggestion. After dwelling on the value of antitoxines as a remedy for certain diseases, which he said had been clearly proved by actual tests in the practice of himself and other medical men, he deplored the fact that the sources from which they could be obtained were so limited. They could be obtained from animals, but there are very few animals that are susceptible to the worst diseases to which human beings fall victims. Besides which the serum obtained from animals is uncertain in its operation, and varies considerably and without the knowledge of the physician in its power. The physician can only guess in many cases at the strength of the antitoxine he uses. The best and surest of this class of remedies is obtained from human beings. He suggested, in view of the reluctance of men to be inoculated with the horrible diseases, so as to yield the needed serum, that convicts be used for the purpose. He thought that a law might be passed giving persons convicted of heinous crimes the option of undergoing severe punishment or of submitting to inoculation, and he believed that in that case many convicts would choose the latter. He thought the public was not yet prepared for making inoculation compulsory on a convict. A convict condemned to death might consent to submit to inoculation as giving him a chance of life, but it is doubtful whether others would do so. They usually shrink from injuring their bodies, though they are indifferent to injuries to their souls that involve infinitely greater suffering.

Fear not them who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body (Matt. 10: 28).

ROUMANIA'S PEASANT WAR

SEVERAL years ago a well-known war correspondent complained that the "Balkans refused to balk," when he was sent to report conditions in the States along the Turkish border, at a time when a serious conflict seemed impending. Within the last few weeks, however, the news that has come speeding over the wires from Bucharest, capital of Roumania, has been of a nature to satisfy the most inveterate seeker for excitement. The first dispatch announced in three lines an uprising of the peasantry in a remote part of the country. In a week the rising was an insurrection of such proportions as to tax all of the powers of the Roumanian government. Roumania has been constantly progressing since the people freed themselves from the overlordship of the Turk, and it was supposed that such uprisings were a thing of the past. King Charles, brave soldier and able statesman as he is, has made himself greatly beloved by all patriotic Roumanians, and it is not against him that the revolt is directed. The peasants have been struggling with increasing fierceness against the present system of land tenure. On the one hand, the disturbances are declared to be purely agrarian, irrespective of race feeling; on the other, it is pointed out that the landlords in Moldavia do not live on their lands, but rent them to the peasants, and they have been constantly growing more and more oppressive through their hired agents. For a number of years three Jewish families, Fischer, Costenai and Juster, have formed a gigantic trust for the leasing of half the cultivable land in Moldavia. At last their exactions started the revolt, the peasants soon attacking all Jews, and then, as they became intoxicated with success, Christians as well. It was an anarchistic, rather than an anti-Semitic movement.

A Roumanian Peasant

In an incredibly short time all of the peasantry of Upper Moldavia were on the march, a march that resembled those made in the Peasants' War in Germany, where prosperity smiled before them, and ashes, burning houses, and mutilated bodies marked the trail behind. Within a few days three hundred estates had been plundered and the houses given to the flames.

Here and there across the hilly landscape, the military patrols that were hanging on the flanks of the insurgents could see at night the red glare of farmstead and castle, and hear the distant crackle of the flames, and the murmur of a thousand voices as the plunderers gathered in their loot. But looting was not the worst. The tales of the peasant excesses would melt the stoniest heart. Women and girls butchered on their own doorsteps, and little children tied into sacks and thrown into wayside streams, were some of the stories that were brought in by wounded refugees. Among the estates that were sacked were a number belonging to members of the Roumanian Cabinet, some of the higher nobility, and even one of the King himself.

There can be but little doubt that the strength of the uprising was due to the machinations of unpatriotic politicians, who took advantage of the peasant's discontent over the land tenure system, and turned it to further their own selfish ends. The government felt that it must act quickly if it were to maintain its present respected position among the European states. The reserves were summoned to their colors, and regiment after regiment clanked out of Bucharest, and by forced marches reached the small detachments that had been worsted in their first encounters with the insurgents. At Bascu the peasants and the troops clashed and the former were forced to retire. Before the troops arrived at Berlad the place was surrounded by over seven thousand blood-stained rioters, and many small villages in the locality were utterly destroyed. Some of the troops unfortunately were not entirely trust worthy. About seventy per cent. of them were new recruits and were found wanting when called upon to withstand the sustained attacks of the well armed peasants. Many of the insurgents were old soldiers who had whipped the peasantry into some military shape and made a body to be feared by any force not perfectly confident of its ability to cope with a daring adversary.

In the Vlashka district the peasants barricaded themselves in three villages to await the coming of the soldiers. The field-pieces were trained on the houses and soon knocked them to pieces. The peasants lost heavily, and finally came out and threw down their arms. There were numerous skirmishes in the Dolj district. Both rioters and troops fought desperately, coming repeatedly hand-to-hand with pikes, s[illegible] and bayonets. Here again the rioting peasants, [illegible] looting the country, and driving out the peaceat[illegible] clined, barricaded themselves when they heard [illegible] approach of the troops. In one place the [illegible] trained their field pieces on the houses and soon kn[illegible] many of them to pieces. The peasants swarme[illegible] and charged against the infantry which they outnumbered six to one. The soldiers were nearly borne off their feet by the rush but managed to hold their ground.

The second week of trouble the old cabinet gave up and a new liberal cabinet was formed, greatly to the relief of King Charles. He promised that new land laws would be passed taking away the almost unlimited power now enjoyed by the absentee landlords, and also providing that a large part of such lands would be under the immediate control of the government, and rented direct to the tenants. All parties in the Roumanian Parliament agreed to lay aside their differences and work for the suppression of the disorders. Two members of the ministry went to the front for the purpose of dissuading the peasants from their campaign of plu[illegible]. The new premier and his most bitter adversary s[illegible] hands amid the applause of the deputies. Deputa[illegible] of citizens and students marched to the King's pa[illegible]. When the sovereign appeared he was wildly cheere[illegible]

Much anxiety was felt in the capital when it [illegible] reported that the insurgents were within sixty m[illegible] and strong bodies of troops were sent to the six [illegible] forts that girdle Bucharest. A[illegible] the proclamation of agrarian [illegible] forms Northern Moldavia bec[illegible] more quiet, though fighting [illegible] curred at intervals. In the st[illegible] of one city there was a fi[illegible] encounter in which the bu[illegible] master, or mayor, was killed. [illegible] one battle the infantry and [illegible] alry again and again charged t[illegible] insurgent ranks, but were un[illegible] cessful until the artillery be[illegible] to play upon the peasants, w[illegible] they sullenly retired. The [illegible] turbances at this writing h[illegible] spread into Wallachia, and [illegible] government has secured f[illegible] Parliament a bill authorizing [illegible] declaration that the country i[illegible] a state of siege. It is to be ho[illegible] that before this strikes the ey[illegible] the reader the government [illegible] have been able to check the [illegible] orders that threaten to set b[illegible] the progress of a promising yo[illegible] nation for a generation.

'was then that the city in all its wonder and terror burst upon the little girl's frightened eyes. Everywhere were cabs, cars, carriages, people d automobiles; everywhere were noise d confusion. A fire engine dashed r the avenue a block away, and in the rong rush of many feet toward it, rret was swept along with the crowd. otuntil she was completely out of breath l e find herself flung to one side against g brass railing of a store window. e with a frightened cry she turned and e o go back by the way she had come. "e seat, the seat! I must get back e seat in the big tall room, or t'r'll never, never find me," she ed, as she stumbled along.

B the "seat" and the "big tall room" r not so easily found. The very first r Margaret made was a false one, and e step after that carried her farther d arther away from the station.

and on hurried the little girl, pling, falling, and picking herself up n. The black silk coat grew soiled dumpled, and the wide-brimmed hat ped forlornly over one ear. The ds grew narrower and dirtier, and the e on them more noisy and rough. It almost dark, too, and Margaret was ning to feel hungry. At last, exed and thoroughly frightened, she ped down on a doorstep and began y.

"I don't care, I don't care," she sobbed. father was a little girl all alone he'd ven if he was a soldier."

Margaret raised her head in astonish. Before her stood a boy with very freckles and a very small nose.

"I say, what's up, kid?" he asked n.

"My name is Margaret," returned young person with some dignity, try very hard to force back the tears. To was one thing, but to cry before ge little boys was quite another.

"Well, Mar-ga-ret, then," jeered the good-naturedly. "What's up? What ryin' for?"

"I'm not crying," choked Margaret. father was a so-so-soldier!"

he boy took a step forward. His showed a lively interest.

"Whar 'bouts? Did he git killed?"

argaret stared without speaking.

"I say, did he git killed?" repeated boy. "Is that what makes ye cry—se he was a soldier?"

was the boy's turn now to be amazed, the little girl on the steps sprang sudy upright and stamped her foot.

"I tell you it's 'cause he was a soldier I don't cry. Soldiers' daughters er cry," she stormed wrathfully. "I ld think you'd be 'shamed to say they

But I guess if you couldn't find the tall room nor the seat, nor mother, anything, and if you hadn't had anyg to eat for ever and ever so long, you'd cry, even if your father was a soldier!" And down fell the soldier's daughter in a forlorn little sobbing heap on the bottom step.

For a moment the boy stared in blank surprise; then he gave a low whistle.

"O, my!" he exclaimed. "You're a spunky little thing, anyhow, an' I like ye. Come, tell us all about it." And he dropped himself down at the little girl's side.

"Whew!" he cried frowningly, after he had heard Margaret's story. "I bet ye 'twas the Gran' Central whar she left ye. I bet ye two cents 'twas!"

"Oh, do you know the place? Can you find it? Will you take me?" panted Margaret, springing to her feet. "Come, let's hurry!"

"Slow up, slow up," cautioned the boy with a grin. "'Tain't no picnic gittin' thar. It's a mighty long ways. You know how fur 'twas comin' here."

"I know, I know," acknowledged Margaret, fairly dancing up and down in her eagerness to be off; "but you see there's mother at the end of it this time. Come!" And at the word the boy, too, sprang to his feet and turned his face toward Forty-second Street.

"Mumsey, look at what I bringed home!"

CHAPTER III

IT was dark when a barefooted boy led into the Grand Central Station a little girl in a rumpled black silk coat. The walk had been a long one for weary little feet unaccustomed to such journeyings; but it was taken by a soldier's daughter and with a loved mother for a goal—hence its final accomplishment.

For a minute after entering the waiting-room the lights were blinding; then Margaret led the way straight to her old seat. She had no trouble in finding it, for she had sat there so long she knew its exact location. The seat was empty.

"Why, she hasn't—come—yet!" faltered Margaret.

The boy noted the quivering chin, and tightened his grip on the small hand.

"Bo! she's jest a-settin' somewhar's else; that's all," he comforted cheerily. "We'll take a look an' see whar she is. Now some girls'd cry, an' I hain't no use fur them kind of girls; but you bein' a soldier's daughter so, I hain't got ter worry 'bout that; have I?" he finished.

"Certingly not," assured Margaret, gulping back the sobs that would rise in her throat. "Come; we'll go find her. She probably preferred to sit somewhere else."

In and out the rows of seats trudged the two children, scrutinizing every woman's face, being themselves, meanwhile, utterly unconscious of the many curious glances cast in their own direction by those who wondered at the ill-assorted pair.

"She had on a bootiful blue dress, and she said she was certing she wouldn't be gone but a minute," murmured Margaret, plaintively, after a time. "She said 'twas just down a little way across the street."

The boy stopped abruptly and pulled his companion to one side.

"Did ye say 'blue'?" he asked in a curiously strained voice. "Did ye say a 'blue dress'? an' did she go 'cross the street?"

"Yes, yes," nodded Margaret.

The boy dropped the girl's arm and fell back a step. He turned his gaze away from the wide-open blue eyes so earnestly questioning him. It seemed to him that they must see in his own eyes the reflection of the dreadful thought that had come to him; that limp form lifted into the ambulance a few hours before in front of this very station—was that the solution of the mystery? He had seen the whole thing—and the woman was dressed in blue!

"Look a-here, we—we better be goin'," he stammered feverishly, again catching hold of Margaret's arm. "I—I don't reckon she's comin' no more ter-night, anyhow. Come, come home with me."

To do this, however, Margaret stoutly refused; and not until the boy hit upon the plan of leaving a note in the seat for the mother did the child consent to stir from the place. Then, hungry, frightened, and so tired she could scarcely walk, she suffered herself to be led out into the warm June night.

"Ye see it's the only way," soothed the boy, as they trudged along. "Yer ma ain't thar, an' she ain't a-comin' ter-night, I'm jest sure. We can give ye somethin' ter eat—that is, if dad ain't 'round; an' I reckon he won't be—he ain't due sober fur two days yet. Besides, thar's the letter, ye know."

The boy was proud of that "letter." At the same time he was a bit ashamed. It seemed a shabby thing—this taking advantage of such innocence; on the other hand, if he had not taken advantage of it, the poor little thing at his side would even now be back there in the station waiting for the mother who would never come—the boy was very sure the mother was dead.

The note had been written on a torn scrap of brown paper with an old lead-pencil stub, which the boy had abstracted from among the strings, marbles, nails and cigar-stumps in his pocket. It had been written at Margaret's dictation, with an occasional remonstrative "I say, ain't thar anythin' smaller?" from the boy when a big word threatened ignominious defeat to the speller. As the note—half printed, half written—finally stood, it read:

"My darling Muther. i have gone with the Boy 2 git somethin 2 eet. i prefured 2 remane here but my Stomak refuzd 2 stay. i kan not go 2 yu but yu kan kum 2 me so kum pleze. yuer effeckshunate (blurred with much erasing) dorter

"MARGARET."

It was after what seemed to Margaret a very long time that the boy turned into a dirty hall and began to climb the stairs.

"Thar, here we be," he called back cheerily. "Come right on up."

"Yes; I'm coming," sighed Margaret, dragging one foot after the other up the stairs, and hoping that her voice did not show how very unpleasant she thought this little boy's home was, with its hallways so dark and ill-smelling. "My stars!" she panted at the bottom of the fourth flight. "What a 'markable place for a parlor—'way up in the attic so!"

The boy did not hear. He had clattered up the last flight and burst open the door.

"Mumsey, look at what I bringed home this time!"

"Dear me, Bobby, your sick dogs an' mangy cats 'll be the death o' me yet," returned a tired-sounding voice. "I told ye last week I shouldn't let another one—Bobby McGinnis!" broke off the voice, sharply, as Margaret came into the shaft of light from the kerosene lamp. "Where did you get that child?"

"She's lost, mumsey, an' she's awful hungry. I bringed her home ter git some grub. Her ma left her in the Gran' Central, an' she got—" Bobby crossed to his mother's side and finished his sentence under his breath so that the little girl by the door should not hear.

"Oh, Bobby!" cried Mrs. McGinnis in a horrified voice, as she darted over to the child and drew her gently into the room. "But, Bobby, there's your father!"

"Pooh! Don't ye fret none 'bout him. I see him Sat'day down ter Little Mike's, an' he was with that long-haired anarchist feller, an' ye know he always gits the biggest kind of a jag on when he's with him. He won't come botherin' 'round here yet awhile. Like enough he's jugged anyhow by this time," finished Bobby, hopefully.

The woman shivered a little, then turned to the child at her side.

"What's yer name, dearie?"

"Margaret."

"Margaret what?"

"Margaret Kendall."

"Where do ye live?"

The little girl hesitated and looked distressed.

"I mean, where is yer home, dearie? Where do ye live?"

"In a trunk, please."

"In a—wha-at?"

Margaret looked still more distressed.

"A trunk. I—I don't 'zactly understand it myself, you see, but that's what mother said last night. She said, 'Sweetheart, it's been travel, travel, travel for a whole year; but next month we're going home. We've been just living in a trunk all the time.'"

To Clean Fine Linen Handkerchiefs and Delicate Laces:

Soak in Ivory suds, work up and down with the hands (when they are very delicate it is better to shake them in a fruit jar about two-thirds full of suds), then rinse in clear water.

A pinch of gum arabic dissolved in hot water and a little bluing should be used to dip the pieces into before drying.

Stretch on a marble bureau top, a pane of glass, or wind tightly about a round bottle with smooth surface, and allow to dry. The wrong side should be against the marble or glass surface.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

We kneel—how weak; we rise—how full of powér!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

ARCHBISHOP TRENCH.

M. B. W., Maine. "Please report answered prayers from a mother heart."

Mrs. G. H., Iowa. "God has wonderfully answered my prayers in converting my husband and boys."

Mrs. L. H. S., New Hampshire. "I want to testify to His goodness and great mercy to us for seventy-three years. He ever hears our prayers."

Mother and Daughter, Massachusetts. "'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.' These words express the gratitude we owe our Heavenly Father for another answered prayer."

Mrs. G., Nebraska. "I have my prayers answered without number. The dear Lord has done so much for me I have given all that I am into his loving care. Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

M. B. P., New York. "I was wrecked in the Pacific Ocean forty-five years ago. Helpless upon the deep, I cried to the Lord to save me, and he sent rescue. I shall praise his dear name as long as I live."

Mrs. B. F. A., Massachusetts. "I wish to thank our dear Lord for his gracious answers to my prayers, since my husband left this world for eternity. May my experience help somebody toward more faith in prayer."

Reader, Massachusetts. "For the last twelve months I have needed to depend on Him alone for help and guidance in a way that I have never experienced before. He has never failed me, but is leading gently on. My heart is full of gratitude."

J. W. L., Canada. "The testimonies to answered prayer mean so much to me that I cut them out and paste them in a blank book, reading them often for help and encouragement. Unworthy as I am, I know God answers my prayers, and light and joy and blessing are mine."

E. A. M., Ohio. "A prayer for the restoration of a dear friend to health has been granted. I am praying for my son's welfare, but I know that I must have patience to wait God's own time for changing my cross to a crown. The burdens that are not lifted here will surely be laid down at the gate of eternity."

K. E. D., New Jersey. "Through your 'Answered Prayers' column I wish to testify to God's goodness to me. I was very ill, alone, and far from home. I prayed earnestly that God would let me come back to my boy, who needed a mother's care so much. At this moment I am safe at home, for which I continually thank him."

C. E. D., Maryland. "I wish to register my heartfelt thanks to Almighty God for answered prayers; not once, nor twice, but half a dozen times, when the way seemed closed. Though falling far and often astray, his arm has been a mighty wall of protection round about me, which has safely guarded me."

Mrs. M. A. L., Texas. "In His own time, and often in his better way, he hath attended to the voice of my supplication. During a life of over eighty-one years, I have endured the fires of affliction, and should long since have fallen by the way but for the sustaining power of faith and trust in Him who doeth all things well."

E. C., Connecticut. "I wish to acknowledge through the columns of your valued paper, all praise and gratitude to our heavenly Father for manifold blessings and answered prayers. It is my sincere desire and determined purpose to live in closer personal touch with my Saviour this year than ever before. I am praying for the conversion of husband and children."

Mrs. S. A. W., Oregon. "I am impressed with the duty of adding my testimony to your list. Over fifty years ago my first-born was given back to me from the very gates of death, in answer to prayer. Though he wandered to paths of sin when he grew to manhood, I prayed on, and several years ago I saw him, with his two sons, come into the great Shepherd's fold. 'Praise the Lord, O my soul.'"

Mother, Illinois. "A loved one was drifting away from mother, and there was great sorrow in our home. Alone with Him who never fails to hear, I lifted my soul in agony for my child. Strength and help came in that struggle, and I could say 'Lord, I believe she will be saved.' The answer came, and my daughter is restored. Mothers, never doubt Him 'who sticketh closer than a brother.'"

Amendments affecting the rights of neutrals, the laws and customs of war on land, the manner of opening hostilities, etc.

A new convention relating to the laws and customs governing war on the sea.

Amended laws concerning bombardments, closing of ports, torpedo laying, transformation of merchant vessels into warships, private property of belligerents at sea, the question of contraband, destruction of merchant vessels captured as prizes, and the adaptation of the principles of the Geneva Convention to modern warfare.

In addition to the foregoing, Russia has also stipulated that the deliberations of the Hague Congress shall not deal with the political relations of the several States, nor with conditions that have been established by treaties, nor with any matters that do not come properly within its scope as indicated in the programme. The Czar expressly wishes it understood that the acceptance of Russia's programme shall not be regarded as a bar to free expression of opinion on all matters that may arise. In a word, while employing his prerogative as the founder of the Hague Conference to submit the programme, he wishes to leave that august body an absolutely free hand to deal with all questions that may be considered of vital importance as affecting the world's peace.

Our American delegation to this second Hague Conference will be larger than that which represented this government at the first Congress. It was announced that the delegates would be Gen. Horace Porter, Hon. Joseph H. Choate and Judge U. M. Rose of Little Rock, Ark. The additional delegates may be chosen from names suggested by the Carnegie Hall Congress.

A TRAGEDY OF ENVY

International Sunday School Lesson for April 21

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

FIRST scene. Two motherless boys, one about seventeen years of age, and the other so tiny as scarcely to be able to walk, their names, Joseph and Benjamin, are often to be seen beside the tomb of their mother Rachel. Sometimes they are accompanied by their father Jacob, who is now considerably over one hundred years old. He dotes upon the two lads for the sake of their young and beautiful mother who rests in an untimely grave. The older boy is dressed in a coat of many colors, a special gift of favor from his father.

Second scene. A group of ten men, the grown-up sons of Jacob and Leah and Jacob's other wives, are pasturing their flocks in the valley of Dothan, more than sixty miles away from home. They have rough faces and sinister looks. Perhaps this is why they have not been molested by enemies ever hovering near.

Third scene. A lonely traveler is outlined against the sky, as he appears on the crest of one of the hills surrounding Dothan. He is recognized by the ten shepherd brothers, and they exclaim: "Behold, this dreamer cometh; let us slay him, and cast him into some pit." This they said for envy. Because his father loved him best, they envied and hated him. But there is a division in the council. Reuben, the oldest brother, advises against killing Joseph, and suggests that they put him into a pit alive, as if it were any better to kill him by starvation than by violence.

Joseph Sold as a Slave

Fourth scene. The cruel brothers seize Joseph as he comes among them, and beat him cruelly, notwithstanding that he tells them he has been sent by their father to inquire after their welfare and bring them provisions. They bind him and cast him into an empty well, which is a bottle-shaped affair with a narrow opening at the top, making escape quite impossible.

Fifth scene. A train of camels is seen making its way down the valley. The brothers perceive that it is a caravan of Midianite tradesmen on their way to Egypt to sell their balm and spicery. Judah proposes that they take Joseph up out of the pit, and sell him as a slave. He says: "We should get as much as twelve dollars for him. They can sell him again down in Egypt for twice as much."

Sixth Scene. Joseph is being borne away by the Midianites, bound in the fetters of a slave, and the brothers, except Reuben, have seated themselves to divide the price they have received, and to determine how to explain to their father the disappearance of Joseph.

Seventh Scene. Reuben, not knowing that the brothers have sold Joseph in his absence, goes to the pit, determined upon rescuing Joseph, but on finding the pit empty, indulges in great grief, and then seeks his brothers to find out from them what has become of Joseph.

Eighth Scene. The ten brothers are bringing to their old father Jacob Joseph's coat of many colors, which they have dipped in the blood of a goat they have killed, and they are asking him if he thinks it is his son's coat. The old father recognizes the coat, and seeing the blood upon it exclaims that "an evil beast hath devoured him." Jacob weeps and will not be comforted.

Unpopularity of Informers

Joseph dreamed a dream (v. 5). While Abraham was good for his age, Joseph would be a good man in any age. His excellence as a boy and as a young man of seventeen is set off against the weakness of his brothers in striking contrast. He was more beloved by his father because he was purer as well as younger, and he was envied and hated by his brothers not only because he was more popular but also because he was nobler. His character was developed by high ideals, which God set before him in dreams, promising great future usefulness. Some will criticise Joseph for bringing evil reports of his brothers. This is because of our schoolboy code of to-day, which is a false one, teaching that things against the public welfare, if they are done by our classmates or friends, should be hidden. The Japanese code of honor, known as "Bushido," meaning "the way of the warrior," is superior to the code of the American school and of our army in two points especially; first, in teaching absolute self-control, and second, in teaching self-sacrifice for the general good. This second point, which has been so much neglected because of our excessive individualism, would require a soldier to report his fellows' misdeeds in loyalty to his country, for loyalty implies obedience to law. The same principle applies to the schoolboy in his relations to his comrades. The judge who spared a culprit because he had been a college classmate or fellow soldier, or even because he was a relative, would be instinctively condemned as disloyal to duty. Every one is bound to be as loyal to the public good as if he were a judge on the bench.

Murder's Inception

His brethren envied him (v. 11). Envy is one of the meanest of vices, a seed out of which many other vices grow. It is said that "one never envies what he can equal." This lesson shows how envy grows into a tree of hatred, whose chief branch is murder, which Joseph's brothers committed in their intent, its most essential part. Among the evil fruits of this tree we find not only hatred, but cowardice, evil speaking, cruelty, hard-heartedness, covetousness and lying. The "undertow" of the ocean is the sea-bather's danger. It beats the best swimmer now and then. But there is an undertow of soul which will ruin any life in which it is allowed to run. Such an undertow is envy.

They conspired against him (v. 18). Here we see envy growing into murder, for it is profoundly true, as the New Testament teaches, that "he that hateth his brother is a murderer." In the words of Shakespeare: "Hates any man the thing he would not kill?" Another fruit of envy was the cruelty with which the brothers looked on unmoved as they saw the anguish of Joseph's soul when he besought them not to sell him into Egyptian slavery, and they would not hear. With this cruelty was mingled covetousness that made them accept twenty pieces of silver as the price of their brother's bondage.

We will say an evil beast hath devoured him (v. 20). Here we see envy growing into falsehood, for though they did not in words lie to their father, as they had proposed, they showed the bloody coat, which was an acted lie. An evil beast had indeed devoured him, the evil beast known as envy. In Spenser's Faerie Queen, Envy is pictured riding upon a ravenous wolf. Pollock, in his Course of Time, says of Envy, "His joy was woe—the woe of others." A fitting symbol of envy is the deadly stipa grass of South America, which contains an arrow, and when the plant is ripe this arrow is blown through the air in great numbers, fastening itself in the garments and the flesh of man and beast. Men are able to escape by instantly removing it, but if they fail to do so, it works itself into the clothes and cannot be removed. If it strikes a man's flesh it causes serious inflammation. In the case of the poor dumb sheep it fastens itself into the wool and works into the flesh, producing most serious ulcers. Such is the effect of evil words, the darts of envy as they fly about in a community, causing bitterness, the estrangement of friends where there should be happiness.

Envy Leads to Lying

One of the most striking pictures of envy is the case of King Saul, physically the tallest and strongest of his people, every inch a king. He was also mentally endowed. Because of his intellectuality and spirituality his people exclaimed, "Is Saul also among the prophets?" But he allowed himself to become envious of the character and popularity of David after the lad had

Not one of them can fall in the sea without their Father."

An Inscribed Weather-Vane

The tempest that was raging in the heart of Joseph as he found himself being taken down to Egypt as a slave was no doubt soon quieted with the thought that God would be with him and keep him safe from all harm. An English gentleman, proud of his fine estate, called to him his trusted steward, saying: "Morgan, I wish you would take my guests around the place this morning. I would do so myself, but I have a heap of letters to answer this morning." The guests were taken to the orchid house, and to the grapery, and through the fine gardens, and then to the stables to see the thoroughbred horses. One of the guests noticed the gilded arrow weather-vane shining in the sunlight and pointing to the south: "That is a fine weather-cock," he said. "I never think a place is quite furnished unless it has a vane." "Aye," answered the steward, "and this is a curious weather-cock in its way, too. The master, as ye know, is mighty fond of Scripture. He has mottoes and verses on everything he can put 'em. The text he has around the weather-cock is 'God is love,' for he said: I mean that whichever way the wind blows, God is love. It is not for us Christians to judge when the wind is at its best." Some months after, when death and affliction had come to the home of Mr. Brown, the friend of the weather-cock incident called to offer consolation. He found Mr. Brown bowed down but not overwhelmed. He said: "The weather-cock teaches me the truth I put on it in my prosperity. When the desire of my heart was beside me, and the children my delight, I could say 'God is love' with a thankful heart. He is still love, though his east wind is blowing."

"I'll Send and Pay the Freight on a Basket Washing Machine to any point East of the Mississippi for $3.50."

MAYOR TUNNINGTON.

I believe the "Basket Washing Machine" is the best and cheapest machine in the world to-day, and I am honest in that statement. The reason I believe it, is because there is not another machine made that will do a washing and do it good in so short a time.

Yes, I'm Mayor of Fremont, Ohio.

Am Mayor now; and it is because I'm Mayor that I have taken up this work.

There's no one in a position to feel the pulse of a community as well as that community's chief executive. He hears of the reverses in life, the hardships, the disappointments; he is supposed to be counselor, adviser and able to suggest a remedy for all evils.

Well, I believe that by placing the "Basket Washing Machine" upon the market at $3.50—a machine that will wash as well as any machine made—I've lightened the burdens of more people than by any other method I might pursue. That was my idea in making the Basket Washer. This is an age of reform, square deal, glad hand; uplifting of humanity. We're here to help each other, give each other a fair chance. I am doing it. I know I am doing that every day, for I am daily sending washing machines to every part of the country and paying the freight myself.

You understand, don't you, why this appeals to me? You must see why I know the urgent, pressing need for a high-grade machine at the lowest possible cost. I see it every day. I saw it until I made up my mind that such a machine should be offered to every one, and I shall do that to the limit of my ability.

I don't ask you to keep the Washer if you are not satisfied with it. Send it back at my expense. But I don't believe you will send it. There has never been one returned.

After you have discovered for yourself, by actual experience, that a tub of clothes can be washed in six minutes and less, and be washed clean by either you or your little girl, you are pretty certain to keep the Basket Washer. Then, there is the price, $3.50—cheaper than any other good Washer was ever before offered. And I'll go further: I'll guarantee it for five years, and it'll do a washing every day for that length of time.

WRITE TO ME TO-DAY ABOUT IT; OR, BETTER STILL, ORDER ONE. It is so simple that only a small circular is necessary to describe it fully.

MAYOR TUNNINGTON, Box 514, Fremont, Ohio.

"THE LORD'S ACCOUNT"

A Remarkable Story of Spiritual Experience in a Business Man's Life

A FEW days ago a reader of this journal, a prosperous Western business man, called at the offices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the Bible House, and after a short talk with the editors of the paper, he made a contribution for the China Famine Fund. This gentleman, in the course of conversation, told a most interesting story of his spiritual experience, the substance of which we print below. It is the narrative of a life that has been under God's leading for many years, and it shows, in a remarkable manner, the efficacy of prayer and the results of a fixed purpose to employ one's talents, opportunities and means for His glory and the benefit of humanity.

"When I was a boy of from twelve to fifteen," he said, "following the plough in the field, I received the impression, almost as though a divine voice had spoken, that India, China and Africa were mission fields in which I must become specially interested. Many years afterward, when I came East to attend the funeral of my mother, I was urged to visit an aged aunt in Michigan. She gave me a book, entitled, From Darkness to Light. It treated of foreign missionary work, and it exerted a powerful influence on my life.

"Under spiritual guidance I was led to devote part of my means to missionary work. For twenty-one years past, I have been led to make regular remittances four times a year, for the support of a native preacher in India. Since the fall of 1886, for twenty years past, I have supported a second native preacher in North India. In 1895 I began to support two native preachers in China, and two teachers. These six I have maintained regularly to the present time.

"On January 1, 1897, my wife and I had a little conference about the subject of whether we were doing enough for the Lord's work. After consultation, we arrived at the conclusion that our necessary wants were small, there being only the two of us. We decided that while our income was comparatively small, we could live just as well as we needed to on one-half of it, and that we would just set over the other half into a fund which we would call the 'Lord's Fund.' We keep a ledger account of that fund just as we keep any other account on our books, and whatever the balance of that account shows we consider that we owe the Lord that amount. We hold it as sacredly due to the Lord just as we do what we owe to John Smith, and we keep as accurate account of it as we do with any other creditor. Our experience from that day to this has been, there has always been a balance due from us to the Lord from that account. It is never empty; there is always something due which we are glad to pay over for the support of some missionary work or for some worthy charity or benevolence.

"This money is paid out on requests that are made, but always after prayer about the matter, asking for divine guidance as to how much we should give. We receive very definite impressions from time to time of what it is God's pleasure for us to give.

"At the time of the India famine, one stormy night, the janitor failed to ring the church bell in our town for prayer meeting. Three personal friends of ours came to our house and inquired, 'Why not have a little prayer meeting at home?' We were delighted to have it. The subject of prayer that night was what we should do for the India famine. While on my knees, asking for light, it was made very clear to me that I should pay as my part from $600 to $1,000. Six hundred dollars of this was sent to Dr. Klopsch, and $400 was sent to a State fund that was being raised at that time for the benefit of the famine. Subsequently it was made clear to me at different times what I should do, and the result was that I put $2,000 in the same India famine.

"At another time, in February, 1903, I was impressed with the fact that funds were needed at Guatemala City to purchase the ground for a mission building. $1,650 was sent at that time, and subsequently I made the contribution for that mission $2,500, or over. This was all on the 'Lord's account' and was regularly entered in my ledger, the money being taken from the profits of my business. Between 1900 and 1903 we gave $500 towards a mission building in a Western city, and in the same years $500 or more to a Western Tuskegee, and the like sum to a colored orphanage in a Southern State. Besides these we have been privileged to give to the China Famine Relief work in 1906-7, and to many other charities, and for spreading the gospel light in Africa, China, South America, Central America, and among the American Indians.

"I remember as one of the turning-points of my spiritual life, the advice given me by the late Dr. Gilman, then Secretary of the American Bible Society in New York. I called on him to consult as to the best fields in which to place money for the advancement of the Lord's work, and he advised me to return home and 'pray to God to open the doors.' I did so, and wonderfully has the Lord answered the prayers of my wife and myself, for he has made the open doors appear and guided us according to his divine will.

"One point I would especially emphasize for the sake of others who wish to enter the Master's service in the same way I did, and it is this: even a man of comparatively small means and limited advantages and opportunities for acquiring wealth can find it possible to do much for the Lord's work if he determines to do it. My wife and I were willing to practice self-denial, yet we have not wanted for any of the necessities of life and we have lived comfortably.

"For what we have been privileged to do we take no credit to ourselves; it is done for Christ's sake. We regard our worldly possessions as a trusteeship, for the right use of which we are accountable; and therefore we take every proper opportunity to use them to best advantage for God's glory and the advancement of Christ's kingdom on earth. We hope, God willing, to keep on doing this work, humbly, quietly and unostentatiously, until he calls us home."

Gave All He Had to Help China

Permit me to point out what a "boy" may do, if only willing. A week or so ago there lay on the table your appeal for "China Relief Work." A boy not yet twelve years old, named Francis Atkinson, noticed the appeal, and was so touched that after supper he put his hand into his pocket and pulling out all he possessed, twenty-five cents, said, "I'll give all I have." Turning to his grandma, he asked, "What 'll you give." Then he put the same question to father and mother. Having begun well he started out to canvass the block, and before bed-time had secured several dollars and forwarded, under his own name to you, over $12. Perhaps this fact or instance of sincere effort on the part of a boy might, if brought to the notice of others, be an inspiration. What Francis Atkinson has done all may do. They need only the "will," the "way" will follow.

God's Yearning*

AT first sight there seems to be an inconsistency in speaking of God, who is omnipotent, yearning over humanity. They are his creation; can he not turn them as he will? Can he not compel men to do his will? Undoubtedly he can, but that is not his ordinary way of working. There are extreme cases in which he applies force, but they are rare. Usually he treats men as reasonable beings and respects their right to decide and act for themselves. Why he does so, we do not know. It often seems as if the world would be spared great sorrow and misery by the application of a compulsion which would make every man do exactly right. But it may be that such a world would not fulfil God's design. The father is aware that his boy is not satisfactorily developed when he behaves well under compulsion. He knows that when he dies that boy will run riot in his liberty and will give the rein to his passions. If there is evil in the boy's heart, it must be eradicated if he is to be safe. No boy can be trusted who has been held in with bit and bridle and has never had the chance of showing what he really is. So the wise father cautions him, warns him against evil, reiterates to him that the end is death and tries to so strengthen him that he of his own accord will avoid sin. If after all he does go astray the father tries to woo him back, not by fierce vindictive punishment, but by love and entreaty. Perhaps that is God's way with the world. The end may be a race knowing evil and avoiding it, knowing good and pursuing it.

We can imagine that God takes a deep interest in the process, and watches sympathetically the growth of the good in his children. To return to the illustration of the family: the sullen child is a severe trial to his father. The child has done wrong and has been detected, and he himself knows he has done wrong. What shall be done? How the father yearns over him! If the boy sulks under punishment, how intently his father watches him! What relief to him it is, if the boy should realize his fault and the meaning of his punishment, and should of his own accord go to his father's room and honestly and simply apologize and promise amendment! How gladly his father forgives and rejoices over the return!

8 FINE, HEALTHY ROSE PLANTS FREE

To introduce our popular woman's magazine, THE LADIES' WORLD, into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, we offer for a limited period only, absolutely free with a year's subscription at 50 cents (the regular price), a Set of 8 Fine, Ever-Blooming Tea and Hardy Roses, all choice varieties, as follows:

1 Bridesmaid. A beautiful rich Dark Pink Tea Rose. A very free bloomer, easily grown, and very desirable for summer bedding out-doors.

1 The Bride. A mammoth, ever-blooming Cream-White Tea Rose, of exquisite form and texture. Equally valuable for either summer or winter flowering. A strong, healthy grower, and a constant bloomer. One of the largest white roses known, the flowers being very double.

1 Wellesley. A grand New Hybrid Pink Tea Rose. A very vigorous grower, free flowering, and possesses fine keeping qualities when cut.

1 Clothilde Soupert. A superb White Tea Rose, whose flowers are borne in clusters all over the bush, being large, full and double, and deliciously sweet. Noted for its compact, vigorous habit and profusion of bloom. Grows rapidly and is loaded with flowers during the entire season. Perfectly hardy.

1 Philadelphia Rambler. The most magnificent Crimson Climbing Rose in existence. Blooms earlier than Crimson Rambler, with color deeper, flowers larger, and perfectly double. Very free in both growth and bloom. Flowers borne in clusters covering the whole bush. It is perfectly hardy.

1 Star of Lyon. A lovely Yellow Tea Rose which blooms in the greatest profusion, and each bud is a perfect gem. The flowers are large, double and very fragrant. It is perfectly hardy with ordinary winter protection.

1 Silver King. An ever-blooming pure Snow-White Tea Rose. A vigorous grower, with heavy foliage—a free bloomer, the flowers being large, perfect and double, and very fragrant. Valuable for out-doors. Hardy with protection.

1 Mrs. Ben R. Cant. A brilliant Red Tea Rose. Flowers round, full and double. Remarkable for its robust habit and profuse manner in which it blooms from early summer until late fall. A garden rose, especially fine in autumn.

The eight rose plants described above, comprising our Premium Collection, are grown by one of the largest and most reputable rose growers in the United States. They are not cheap, common roses, but well-known, standard varieties. We send strong, healthy, well-rooted, 1-year-old plants, warranted true to name and color. They are carefully protected in the packing, and are shipped, prepaid, from the greenhouses where they are grown, directly to our subscribers, thus receiving but one handling, and are guaranteed to reach their destination in good order.

THE LADIES' WORLD

is through and through a woman's magazine; clean, wholesome and up-to-date, and is recognized as an authority on all matters pertaining to the domestic life of the home, dealing in a practical way with every subject in which women are vitally interested. It is edited by CHARLES DWYER (for the past 20 years editor of the Delineator). Its Departments, comprising THE HOUSEHOLD, HOME SERVICE BUREAU, ARTISTIC NEEDLEWORK, GOOD LOOKS, THE OBSERVANCES OF SOCIETY, FASHIONS AND DRESSMAKING and ILLUSTRATED FEATURE ARTICLES, are all conducted by experts in their respective lines. It publishes the very best Poetry, Serial and Short Stories, and numbers among its contributors for 1907 such high-class authors as F. HOPKINSON SMITH, FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY, JULIA TRUITT BISHOP, RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, GRACE BARTON ALLEN, MARY STEWART CUTTING, CAROLYN WELLS, ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE, ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL, ZONA GALE, and many others equally well-known. It is profusely illustrated by artists of reputation, and its handsome colored covers are a special feature. Each number contains from 36 to 48 large pages, 11 x 16 inches in size. It stands very high in its class, and gives more for the money than any similar publication. It is popular everywhere, and is conceded to be the best magazine published at 50 cents per year, comparing favorably with many magazines of double its subscription price.

OUR SPECIAL OFFER—To any lady who will send us 50 cents in payment for a subscription to The Ladies' World before May 15th, we will send the Magazine for one year, and in addition will send free the full Set of 8 Fine Rose Plants above described as a premium, both fully prepaid.

Our offer is remarkably liberal, and every lady who is fond of flowers should take advantage of this unusual opportunity to secure a fine collection of choice rose plants absolutely without cost. Address all orders:

How Aunt Hannah Helped China

"OH dear! Another famine," said Aunt Hannah, as she dropped into my kitchen one day, "and in Chiny, too, where folks has so little sympathy for a poor Chinee. But 'tain't shiflissness that brought this on and they hain't a shifliss set as I can see. They're good to work and too savin', willing to eat rats and mice, some folks say; but they can't get enough of even that kind of food out there, and so in some places they kill and eat little children.

"Isn't that horrid! Yet I'd rather have a child killed in a merciful way than to have it sold to a fate that comes to many of the little girls in Chiny, where they sell for a higher price than boys do. I've read how mothers with starvin' babies in their arms and little children clingin' to their skirts, what they had left on them, who had come a long ways, were holdin' out their bony hands for food, and findin' nobody to give them any. Oh dear, I wish I could give them the leftovers from my table that I give to the pigs and hens. When Injy and Chiny had their famine before I managed to give them five dollars apiece, and—"

"Why, Aunt Hannah!" I cried, "I didn't think you were forehanded enough for that!"

"Well, you see, I had to plan ways and means and do without a lot, but I done it and I've always been glad of it."

"I should like to know how you did it."

"Well, one time I made a barrel of soap, and then I got a chance to work for the dressmaker to pay for makin' my new gown, and I cooked dinners for the men to work on the bridge close by my house, and other things I've forgot. I went without a new bonnit, too. I had quite a tussle with my folks about that, so I asked the milliner what one would cost. She showed me a bunch of fuss and feathers with a dead bird on top and asked five dollars for it. I said, 'No, ma'am! I don't believe in killing birds in no such way. If I needed feathers I should have been able to grow 'em myself.' So I went without till my sister in the city sent me one of hers, that just suited me. Then I went without sugar in my tea and allowanced myself on butter and other things, and raised the money each time. This time I'm going to try and raise it by subscription. If I do, I'll call and let you know."

I handed her a dollar and did not see her for several days. One morning she dropped in, a trifle worn but triumphant.

"Well, I've done it, but the next famine I'll go out washin' and house-cleanin' before I'll try to collect the money. I called at Square Pratt's office first, and he said, 'We better help our neighbors instid of sendin' money across the world.' I told him they was our nearest neighbors, reckonin' down through—you might say their land joined ourn. He laughed and said he hadn't time to argue and tossed me fifty cents. Then I called on Mis' Neal. I traded at their store for years. She said charity began at home and why didn't I get somethin' for Widder Smith, who'd lost her cow and had four children to do for. I was ready for her and took out my paper with some names already on it. She was fairly cornered and handed me a quarter.

"Then I called at Dr. Burns, and by persistent urgin' I got fifty cents. Then I called at the elegant home of the Reeds. Everything spoke of wealth, but Miss Reed said, 'When folks was so poor they was usually to blame.' I told her they wasn't to blame for the flood that killed their crops for forty thousand square miles, and they were just starvin'. She handed me a quarter and I hastened away.

"Next place I went to was Lem Jones. They urged me to stay to dinner and Lem joked and quizzed me about why I didn't marry Ben North with his broad acres. I told him 'twas when I was raisin' five dollars for Indy, and I'd told Ben about it and asked if he didn't want to send somethin' too. You ought to have seen his face. He had a coughin' spell come on and said he'd see about it and that's the last I see of him.

"Lem laughed till he nearly choked and tossed me out a dollar and a half. Miss Chapman said I might put her down for a dollar, but if I ever get it I shall earn it. The Widow Ellis, who supports herself and invalid daughter by sewing, gave me a dollar. I told Deacon Stowe I must have fifty cents from him and he paid it on the spot. He knew he might as well first as last, for I meant to have it. Now I've got enough and I'll see about that cow-money next."

MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

AN EVANGELIST'S PERIL

EVANGELIST Lew G. Broughton relates this incident, which occurred during his religious work in a Southern city. A saloon-keeper, the worst in the city, had lost his license through the influence of the revival meetings, and he threatened to attack the evangelist on sight. Mr. Broughton tells the rest in these words:

"One morning, a very cold morning, I stepped into my study of the church, and as I opened the door, who should I find sitting before the fire but this man. I tell you I had some serious thoughts. I said, 'Good morning.' He grunted 'Good morning.' Said I, 'Pretty cold this morning,' and he answered, 'It's hot in here.' I was thinking a thousand thoughts a minute. I didn't want that fellow with me.

"'I expect you have heard something about me,' he said.

"'I heard what you were going to do to me,' I answered, and he continued, 'That's what I am here to talk to you about. I was as mad as ever a man was, but there was something or other that held me down. I intended to call you out and beat you dead; but something held me down, and I don't know what it was. Last night, after I went to bed, I felt the presence of my sainted mother. Did you know my father was a preacher? My mother was the best woman in the world—now she is in heaven—and as I lay there on the bed, with her conscious presence, I heard her say, "Son, think of it! Think of it! That you, your mother's boy, bearing your father's name, have gone so low down that a minister will dare go before the city council and make the charge that you are not fit to run a dive in hell, and, worse than that, the city council believes it, and refuses to give you a license." It overcame me, and I cried all that night long, and I have come up to ask you if you think there is any salvation for me. Can you account for the way this thing has come about?'

"'Get down and tell the Lord,' I said. 'Talk to God as you do to men.' He dropped on his knees, and said, 'God, I don't know how to pray; teach me how to pray. I am a poor sinner.'

"After a while I felt his big arm around me, and his hand drop by my side, and then he pulled me to him, and we broke out in praising God together. Then he said, 'I have three friends who have been with me in this business—I want to reach them.' We began this morning, Monday, and on Wednesday night of that week we baptized in that church this man and his three friends, the most notorious dive-keepers, gamblers and blacklegs in our city."

Concerning Sunday School Teachers

"Many a poor teacher," writes Marion Lawrence, "is helped by encouragement: by placing in his hands a book on the subject; by inducing him to attend Sunday School conventions or institutes or summer schools. Sometimes a transfer to another class gives new impetus. Sometimes teachers fail not because they cannot teach, but because their week-day duties prevent them from maintaining that close touch with the scholars which is essential to success. Sometimes the class is too large, or sits in too public a place. When you have done all you can, and the desired results are not reached, it is better to lay the matter before the teacher in a kind, loving way, without fault-finding, and suggest that the teacher take up some other kind of work in the school. Perhaps that teacher can keep the records, assist in the library, do house visitation, help in the home department, play the organ or hold some other office. There is a place for every one, and there is some one for every place. Success is fitting one to his work."

Books and Readers*

IN view of the extent to which reading enters into our modern life, the right way of reading becomes an important matter. It is important as to selection and important as to method. There must be restriction and selection, if the young student desires to avoid waste of time and effort. Let him look through the catalogue of some great library and realize how few, how small a portion he can read. We might go further and say how few it is desirable that he should read. There is, especially in these times, a large quantity of literature shoveled out to the public that had better have been sent to the flames. Among the novels, not one in ten, perhaps not one in a hundred, deserves to live. Of those conveying wicked or immoral lessons, the student instinctively is on his guard, and with them there might go many that are frivolous, conveying no lesson at all. The young man, aware of how much there is to be learned from books, will not, if he is wise, spend his time on books of this type.

He would not be wise to neglect fiction altogether. The good novel is a mirror of life. The novels issued in the reign of Queen Anne teach us what the life of that time was like, better than do the histories. Our own time and that of the past generation are photographed more vividly in the pages of Howells, Hawthorne, Dickens and Thackeray than in any historical record. The student would miss much of value in his mental development if he failed to read fiction. But it is the confectionery of literature, which finds its place in the mental diet better after the more solid food. The student may take his novel with advantage after hard study. He should avoid the habit of reading merely to pass the time. Reading should have an object, which is not attained by the mere cursory survey of a book. "I am so fond of reading," says one who could not give an intelligent idea of the contents of even the last book he has read. If a book is worth reading at all, it is worth reading carefully. Reading while the mind is wandering on other subjects is worse than useless, for it begets a bad habit of inattention. In this, as in all else, success comes by attending to the matter in hand.

Lincoln University's Progress

LINCOLN MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY is doing a great work for the boys and girls of the Tennessee mountains. Gen. O. O. Howard writes:

"We have the largest enrolment in our history, an aggregate of five hundred and sixty students. Last year we sent out fifty to teach during summer vacation, and they had an average of more than sixty pupils each. Eager pupils they were, too.

"In these mountain schools the young people get a taste of knowledge, and then they are anxious to go where they can get more. This leads them to our University, which was founded to help just these youths. Some of them travel long distances on foot, or in farm wagons, to get to us. Some of the boys meet a part of the expense of their board and tuition by working on the farm, in the mills and in carpenter work, and some of the girls (though not so many) by helping in the kitchens, etc. We hope to make arrangements soon, so that the girls will have an equal chance with the boys, and if we do we are sure larger numbers of them will come.

"We shall not be able to receive all who apply. We have no place to put them. We have recently lost one of our buildings by fire, and the others are crammed full. We must have more room. We are trying to raise money to put up a large building, which will meet our needs for a number of years. We already have several thousand dollars towards it, and we expect help from a few rich people. But rich people cannot do everything; they have a great many calls; and really we don't want them to do it all. This Lincoln Memorial University is meant for the common people (our charter provides for that), and so we expect them to help in building it up. And now I make an appeal for help from everybody. Let those who can, send us big checks — checks for thousands, for hundreds, and those who have less, checks for tens and twenties and fifties, and let those who are only able to give a little, send us that little, no matter if it do not exceed a dollar or part of a dollar. We shall appreciate every gift, however small, and when the building is completed each glad contributor will say, 'I helped to erect that fine building.' "

All communications should be sent to Hon. Darwin R. James, Treasurer, 384 Washington Street, New York.

In the Foreign Field

DR. BEATTIE, founder of the Leper Children's Home, at Canton, China, is on a furlough in the United States. The missionaries in charge have recently opened a new home to be used exclusively for girls. The former building will be turned over to the boys' department. There are many more girls who are untainted with disease, living in the leper village, and the lack of accommodations is a cause of anxiety to the missionaries who are anxious to rescue these unfortunates. During the winter rice was distributed to 650 of the poorest lepers. Native Christians in Canton have been denying themselves all luxuries to help the work with money.

The following interesting letter has been received by Dr. Klopsch from the Scandinavian Alliance Mission at Pueotoo, Shansi, China. "Ours is the work of rescuing the cast-away orphan Chinese. One never heard of such awful massacre of babies—with some exceptions all girls—as is now going on here, year after year and day by day. Many are put to death just when born; some are thrown out to die in a back street or open space, or outside the city wall. It is these latter we are trying to save. How cruel these parents are, we had an opportunity of knowing, some weeks ago, when a newborn babe was found not far from our station. We asked the mother to nurse it, allowing her a monthly payment, but she refused. It is needless to say that when these rescued girl babies are grown up and are married, they will make a splendid factor in forwarding the kingdom of Christ, as they, from their tenderest years, will be brought up under Christian influences."

Lieut.-Col. Yamamoto, who is a veteran of the Japanese Army, has retired from the military service to devote his life to the spread of Christianity. He has a government pension. He has a church in the suburbs of Tokyo, and is making an impression on the people of the district. In order to be able to do more efficient work he is attending a theological school. He wishes to become an evangelist in order to come into contact with greater numbers of his countrymen.

Rev. H. Loomis sends interesting notes on the progress of the Gospel in the Mikado's Empire: "Hon. Mr. Shimada, of Tokyo, was recently invited by the principals of the various schools in Kofo to speak on the subject of religion, and at every meeting there were thousands present. When he went to the same place but a few years ago there were but a few who would listen to a Christian address, and the general sentiment was against the presentation of such a topic. Now things are quite different, and Christian addresses are welcomed in all parts of the country."

Miss Gertrude Howe of Nanchang, China, writes: "Your enclosure of $20 for our work here is just received. I have decided to use it toward the furnishing of a girls' day school here."

FIND OUT

The Kind of Food That Will Keep You Well

The true way is to find out what is best to eat and drink, and then cultivate a taste for those things instead of poisoning ourselves with improper, indigestible food, etc.

A conservative Mass. woman writes:

"I have used Grape-Nuts 5 years for the young and for the aged; in sickness and in health; at first following directions carefully, later in a variety of ways as my taste and judgement suggested.

"But its most special, personal benefit has been a substitute for meat, and served dry with cream when rheumatic troubles made it important for me to give up the "coffee habit."

"Served in this way with the addition of a cup of hot water and a little fruit it has been used at my morning meal for six months, during which time my health has much improved, nerves have grown steadier, and a gradual decrease in my excessive weight adds greatly to my comfort." He served s also for possessions of flocks and nd then Laban ten times changed es. This is the history of all children who are occupied with l things more than they are occu- th God. God gave to Abraham cob labored hard to obtain. We at we sow.

dealt with Laban on human stead of divine; he tried to lay nder an obligation to him by his bor; but after all it amounted to le, and had no influence upon the eart of Laban. Abraham, wher- was, was honored; but there was that Laban acknowledged such ity in Jacob, nor have we any o suppose that his life had been a n Laban's house as Abraham's n in his father's house, or as Jo- erwards was in Potiphar's.

God's purpose—was it abandoned ended? No, Jacob was God's eaven had been opened to him; he r with Abraham and Isaac of the omise (Heb. 11: 9); and through life of failure, God's wondrous ness shines out, so that every fail- made to work together for good festing what God is, and how true o his promises. Astonishing but True—Time-Tested—Proven Facts—Circulars Give Startling Details—Overwhelming Evidence.

NO SUCH STOVE SOLD IN STORES—UNLIKE ANYTHING YOU'VE SEEN OR HEARD OF

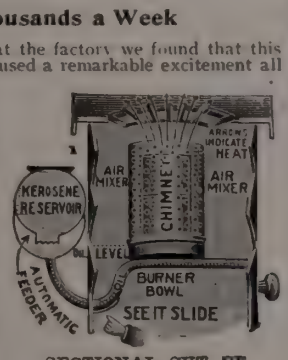
A genius of Cincinnati has invented a new, scientific oil-gas generator that is proving a blessing to women folks, enabling them to cook with gas — relieving them of drudgery. Makes cooking and housework a delight and at the same time often saves ⅛ to ⅓ in cost of fuel.

How often have many of the lady readers remarked that they would give anything to get rid of the drudgery of using the dirty coal and wood stoves — also the smoky oil wick stoves and their gasoline stoves which are so dangerous and liable to cause explosions or fire at any time.

Well, that day has arrived and a fine substitute has been discovered and every family can now have gas fuel for cooking, baking and heating and not have their kitchens a hot, fiery furnace in summer, and be carrying coal and ashes—ruining their looks and health.

Thousands a Week

Upon calling at the factory we found that this invention has caused a remarkable excitement all over the U. S.— that the factory is already rushed with thousands of orders and evidently the Company's representatives and agents are making big profits as they offer splendid inducements.



SECTIONAL CUT OF GENERATOR

As will be noticed from the engraving, this OIL-GAS GENERATOR is entirely different from any other stove — although its construction is very simple—may be easily and safely operated and is built on the latest scientific principles, having no valves, which is a marked improvement, as all valves are liable to leak, carbonize, clog up or overflow.

By simply moving a knob the oil is automatically fed to a small, steel burner bowl or retort where it is instantly changed into gas, which is drawn upwards between two red hot perforated steel chimneys, thoroughly mixed with air and consumed, giving a bright, blue flame — hottest gas fire, similar in color and heating power to natural gas.

This invention has been fully protected in the United States Patent Office and is known as the HARRISON VALVELESS, WICKLESS, AUTOMATIC OIL-GAS GENERATOR—the only one yet discovered that consumes the carbon and by-products of the oil.

The extremely small amount of Kerosene Oil that is needed to produce so large a volume of gas make it one of the most economical fuels on earth and the reason for the great success of this Generator is based on the well known fact of the enormous expansiveness of oil-gas when mixed with oxygen or common air.

Oil-gas is proving so cheap that 15c. to 30c a week should furnish fuel gas for cooking for a small family.

Kerosene oil from which oil gas is made may be purchased in every grocery — is cheap and a gallon of it will furnish a hot, blue flame gas fire in the burner for about 18 hours and as a stove is only used 3 or 4 hours a day in most families, for cooking, the expense of operating would be but little.

In addition to its cheapness is added the comfort, cleanliness — absence of soot, coal, dirt, ashes, etc.

What pleasure to just turn on the oil — light the gas — a hot fire ready to cook. When through, turn it off. Just think; a little kerosene oil—one match—light—a beautiful blue gas flame—hottest fire — always ready — quick meals — a gas stove in your home.

It generates the gas only as needed—is not complicated, but simple—easily operated and another feature is its PERFECT SAFETY.

Not Dangerous Like Gasoline

And liable to explode and cause fire at any moment. This stove is so safe that you could drop a match in the oil tank and it would go out.

The Oil-Gas Stove does any kind of cooking that a coal or gas range will do — invaluable for the kitchen, laundry — summer cottage — washing — ironing — camping, etc. Splendid for canning fruit — with a portable oven placed over the burner splendid baking can be done.

Another Important Feature

Is the invention of a small Radiator Attachment which if placed over the burner makes a desirable heating stove during the fall and winter so that the old cook stove may be done away with entirely.

While at the factory in Cincinnati the writer was shown thousands of letters from customers who were using this wonderful oil-gas stove, showing that it is not an experiment but a positive success and giving splendid satisfaction, and as a few extracts may be interesting to our readers, we produce them:

L. S. Norris, of Vt., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Generators are wonderful savers of fuel—at least 50% to 75% over wood and coal."

Mr. H. Howe, of N. Y., writes: "I find the Harrison is the first and only perfect oil-gas stove I have ever seen—so simple anyone can safely use it. It is what I have wanted for years. Certainly, a blessing to human kind."

Mr. E. D. Arnold, of Nebr., writes: "That he saved $4.25 a month for fuel by using the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove. That his gas range cost him $5.50 per month and the Harrison only $1.25 per month."

J. A. Shafer, of Pa., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Stove makes an intense heat from a small quantity of oil—entirely free from smoke or smell —great improvement over any other oil stove. Has a perfect arrangement for combustion—can scarcely be distinguished from a natural gas fire."

Mr. H. B. Thompson, of Ohio, writes: "I congratulate you on such a grand invention to aid the poor in this time of high fuel. The mechanism is so simple—easily operated—no danger. The color of the gas flame is beautiful dark blue, and so hot seems almost double as powerful as gasoline."

Mrs. J. L. Hamilton, writes: "Am delighted — Oil-Gas Stoves so much nicer and cheaper than others — no wood, coal, ashes, smoke, no pipe, no wick, cannot explode."

Hon. Ira Eble, J. P., of Wis., writes: "Well pleased with the Harrison—far ahead of gasoline. No smoke or dirt—no trouble. Is perfectly safe—no danger of explosion like gasoline.

ALL SIZES

Chas. N. Bendeke, of N.Y. writes: "It is a pleasure to be the owner of your wonderful Oil-Gas Stove— no coal yard, plumbing— ashes or dust. One match lights the stove and in 10 minutes breakfast is ready. No danger from an explosion—no smoke—no dirt—simply turn it off and expense ceases. For cheapness it has no equal."

Agents Are Doing Fine---Making Big Money.

WONDERFUL QUICK SELLER

Geo. Robertson, of Maine, writes: "Am delighted with Oil-Gas, so are my friends — took 12 orders in 3 days."

A. B. Slimp, of Texas, writes: "I want the agency — in a day and a half took over a dozen orders."

Edward Wilson, of Mo., writes: "The Harrison very satisfactory—Sold 5 stoves first day I had mine."

J. H. Halman, of Tenn., writes: "Already have 70 orders."

This is certainly a good chance for the readers to make money this summer.

Hundreds of other prominent people highly endorse and recommend oil-gas fuel and there certainly seems to be no doubt that it is a wonderful improvement over other stoves.

The writer personally saw these Oil-Gas stoves in operation — in fact, uses one in his own home — is delighted with its working and after a thorough investigation can say to the readers that this Harrison Oil-Gas Stove made by the Cincinnati firm is the only perfect burner of its kind.

It is made in three sizes 1, 2 or 3 generators to a stove. They are made of steel throughout — thoroughly tested before shipping — sent out complete — ready for use as soon as received — nicely finished with nickel trimmings and as there seems to be nothing about it to wear out, they should last for years. They seem to satisfy and delight every user and the makers fully guarantee them.

HOW TO GET ONE

All the lady readers who want to enjoy the pleasures of a gas stove — the cheapest, cleanest and safest fuel — save ⅛ to ⅓ on fuel bills and do their cooking, baking, ironing and canning fruit at small expense should have one of these remarkable stoves.

Space prevents a more detailed description, but these oil-gas stoves will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and satisfactory properties.

If you will write to the only makers, The World Mfg. Co., 6481 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and ask for their illustrated pamphlet describing this invention and also letters from hundreds of delighted users you will receive much valuable information.

The price of these Stoves is remarkably low, only $3.25 up. And it is indeed difficult to imagine where that amount of money could be invested in anything else that would bring such saving in fuel bills, so much good health and satisfaction to our wives.

DON'T FAIL TO WRITE TO-DAY

For full information regarding this splendid invention.

The World Mfg. Co., is composed of prominent business men of Cincinnati, are perfectly responsible and reliable, capital $100,000.00 and will do just as they agree. The stoves are just as represented and fully warranted.

Don't fail to write for Catalogue.

$40.00 Weekly and Expenses

The firm offers splendid inducements to agents and an energetic man or woman having spare time can get a good position, paying big wages, by writing them at once and mentioning this paper.

A wonderful wave of excitement has swept over the country, for where shown these Oil-Gas Stoves have caused great excitement. Oil-Gas fuel is so economical and delightful that the sales of these Stoves last month were enormous and the factory is rushed with thousands of orders.

Many of the readers have spare time or are out of employment and others are not making a great deal of money, and we advise them to write to the firm and secure an agency for this invention. Exhibit this stove before 8 or 10 people and you excite their curiosity and should be able to sell 5 or 8 and make $10.00 to $15.00 a day. Why should people live in penury or suffer hardships for the want of plenty of money when an opportunity of this sort is open?

NOTICE

FROM this date, our undertaking to answer by mail, letters in which ten cents are enclosed for reply, is withdrawn. Letters asking for information of general interest will be answered in The Mail-Bag as speedily as possible. In some cases where, in our judgment, good may result from a personal answer, we will reply by mail. We cannot answer inquiries of the nature of conundrums nor those written for the purpose of argument.

J. McA., Croy, Oregon. 1. What makes the ocean salt, when all the streams that flow into it are fresh? 2. Is there a cable laid under the Pacific Ocean? 3. Does a ship cut through the top of the waves or ride them?

1. One theory is that the ocean bed contains innumerable salt springs. 2. There is a cable from San Francisco to Manila that connects with one from Manila to Shanghai, China. 3. Cuts through them; at the same time rising and falling with the waves to a certain extent. The bottom of the lightest flat boat is submerged two to four inches.

S. L. W., Mitchell, S. D. When was the salary of the President of the United States raised to $50,000, and who was the first President to receive the present salary?

Previous to 1873 the President received $25,000. President Grant was the first to receive $50,000.

J. J. M., Rahway, N. J. What is the total aggregate wealth of the United States at the present time and how does it compare with our wealth a decade ago?

According to the Census Bureau's latest figures, the present wealth of the country is, in round figures, $107,104,192,410. In the ten years from 1850 to 1860, it increased $180 per family; from 1870 to 1890 the increase was $184 per family, and from 1890 to 1904 $182 per family.

Reader, Hayden, Colo. In traveling around the earth to the west, would a person gain or lose a day?

A person would lose a day going westward, and gain a day by traveling east. See International Encyclopedia, under "International Date Line," for full information.

J. E. H., Acme, Pa. Where is the country of Croatia?

Croatia with Slavonia and the "Military Frontiers" forms a province in the Southwest of the Austrian dominions in the Hungarian portion of the monarchy. It is partly bounded by the Adriatic.

W. P. D., Farmington, Me. Is there any difference in the height of the water-level of the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans?

There is none. The waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific flow into one another, and any difference in one level would be at once corrected by the inflow from the other.

Fred. M., Petersburg, O. Did no one have a second name in Bible times, as they are all called by their first names only, as Paul, John, etc.? If not, when and how did the custom change?

The introduction of "surnames" (or the family name after the given name) cannot be traced further back than the latter part of the tenth century. Before that time, men used their father's name after their own, as Abraham ben Levi (son of Levi), or the name of their estate or birth-place (as John of Gaunt). In very ancient times also they probably were distinguished in this way.

L. B., Hampton, Conn. 1. Is it possible for any person to want to be a Christian and strive to be one, yet have no power? 2. Are any people sent into the world cursed, destined to perdition, and who could not be saved, no matter what they did?

1. Yes, that is quite possible. Most Christians at times have felt their own weakness in greater or less degree. The failing is so common that the Holy Spirit has been provided to meet the difficulty. God promises the Holy Spirit to all who ask him in sincerity (see Luke 11: 13). There is, therefore, no reason for any one to fail through lack of power; all power is accessible. 2. The offer of salvation is made freely. Do you suppose God offers with one hand what he holds back with the other? Our business is to accept his offer and not to worry about election and foreordination. An illustration may show you our meaning. Suppose a philanthropist makes the announcement that every night, at a certain hour, he will give away a loaf of bread to every one who applies. What would you say of a person who did not go for it, but sat at home and said, "The philanthropist did not mean me; I am not chosen"? You would say, "That person is not hungry, or is too proud to go. What he says is only an excuse, inasmuch as the philanthropist said every one who came would receive."

One of His Little Ones, — —. Is a presbytery or an ecclesiastical court justified in telling a woman guilty of heinous sin that she need not confess? Is not the gospel rule confess; forsake; repent?

We do not believe that open and public confession is required of the sinner. He must confess to God from whom alone he can receive pardon. It is too much the custom to make the public confession a matter of pride and boasting, which is disgusting. The ecclesiastical court has no right to listen to a confession in which it can do nothing. It cannot forgive. Let the sinner go to God with his story saying, "Against thee, thee only have I sinned and done this evil in thy sight." Let him renounce and forsake his sin, and plead for strength to resist it in the future. Then God will forgive him.

F. H., Wynantskill, N. Y., and others. Is not Amundsen the discoverer of the North Pole, according to your sketch on Nov. 21, 1906?

No; the geographic North Pole and the magnetic pole are two different things. We say, in a general way, that the needle of the compass points to the North Pole, but in fact it is pointed some distance away. The North Pole is a fixed point on the earth's surface. The magnetic pole is variable, several hundred miles from the North Pole. It would probably be now some distance along on its path from the point at which Amundsen discovered it some time ago. Commander Peary has got nearer the North Pole than any other explorer.

E. A. P., Rockland, Mass. Is there any difference between speaking and acting in the sin against the Holy Spirit? I have heard it stated that a man who persistently resists the Holy Spirit commits that sin.

We think he does not. The offense to which Christ referred was a direct insult to the Holy Spirit. The nearest approach to it possible in our day is, we believe, in connection with revivals. If a man witnessing the operations of the Holy Spirit in conviction, and seeing men and women in the agony of sorrow and distress over their sins, ridicules them and says they are under miserable delusions, or that they are under Satanic power, he comes as near to the sin as he can come. The man who persistently resists the Holy Spirit may become hardened and find it difficult to seek God, but if he does seek him will be accepted. There is no sentence pro-hibition against him as in the othe case. The phrases often used, that "a m has sinned away his day of grace"; th his "opportunity is gone"; that "he let alone," are delusions which Satan u to keep him away from Christ. Tho a man has resisted for fifty years, if will lay aside his opposition, submit an seek pardon, he will surely be receive and welcomed.

J. R. B., Fruitland, Md. 1. Was Joseph of Arimathæa buried in the tomb in which Christ was laid? 2. May a minister baptize his own child its mother being dead and no one being present but the child's grandmother? 3. What is the use of a godmother? 4. Are there ever two full moons in the month of March?

1. The tradition about Joseph is that he traveled far and died and was buried a long distance from Palestine—some say in Britain. 2. We know of no reason why he should not, if he believes in infant baptism. Witnesses are not necessary. 3. If you will refer to the baptismal service of the Protestant Episcopal Church, you will see what are the functions of a godmother. 4. There necessarily must be, when a full moon occurs on the first or second days of March as full moons occur every twenty-seven and a half days. Any almanac will show when it happens.

The Armenian Earthquake

Bitlis in Ruins, its Population Homeless and Camping in Deep Snow—Missionaries Cable the Story of Disaster

MENIA, the land of suffering and persecution, whose native Christian population, descendants of a once great race, have endured ess barbarities at the hands of Turks and Kurds, en visited with a new calamity. On March 30, e dispatch was received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Rev. Dr. Peet, representative of the American of Foreign Missions in Constantinople, which s follows:

"Severe earthquake at Bitlis. Most houses amaged. Americans and their people in missions endered homeless. Snow twenty-five feet deep. f possible, cable relief. (Signed) PEET."

later cable dispatch from um, which lies north of and near the Russian r, says the first shocks oc- l March 29 and were very t. Fortunately, there was forewarning, which en- most of the people to flee the buildings before the er shocks. The greater f the vilayet was affected e earthquakes and there een much loss of horses cattle. The British con- was damaged. Nearly all ouses are unsafe. Only lives were lost, as far as n, but the number of in- d is considerable. The c k s continued as late as 2. "Almost all the in- ants," says the dispatch, camped in the snow, and act that sleet is falling in- ntly adds greatly to the ss, especially among the r classes."

ssionary Royal M. Cole, ead of the Bitlis Mission, pril 3 cabled this descrip- of the earthquake, giving the whole terrible situa- in a few brief sentences:

At ten o'clock in the forenoon, March 29, there upon us unannounced the worst earthquake wit- d in forty years in these or the Erzerum volcanic ns. Such was its force that our city seemed to be e jaws of some monster, who would shake us into ls, as a mastiff does his game. Down came the ering, the furniture was overturned, cracks were ed in strong walls, roofs were shattered and rain ed in. During the first day, there were fourteen ks and they still continue. There have been alto- er twenty-eight shocks.

"Of the four thousand houses here more than three hundred have fallen and half the remainder have been seriously damaged, about $50 to $500 being needed to repair each house. The officials report that eight persons were killed by falling walls. Many persons were wounded and many churches, mosques and government buildings were damaged. The surrounding villages sustained heavy shocks, but it was in the day time, and so there was no great loss of life. Famine prices prevail and there is great poverty and extreme suffering."

General View of Bitlis, Scene of the Earthquakes

Bitlis is the principal station of the Eastern Turkey Mission of the American Board. The Board Mission workers on duty there are Rev. Royal M. Cole, Mrs. Lizzie Cole, Miss Nellie A. Cole, Miss Charlotte E. Ely, Miss Mary A. C. Ely and Dr. Herbert L. Underwood.

The Bitlis Mission Station was established in the ancient city in 1859. It is in a valley in the heart of Kurdistan, in a wild, mountainous, volcanic region, 5,000 feet above sea level, and subject to earthquakes. Not far distant is the vast crater of Mount Nimroud, one of the largest extinct volcanoes in the world. Intense heat in summer and almost arctic cold in winter mark the variableness of the climate, yet Bitlis is regarded as exceptionally healthful. Of the thirty thousand population some ten thousand are Armenians, the majority being Turks and Kurds. Practically all the houses are built of volcanic stone.

In the valleys, the snow is so deep, and lies so long, that horses are frequently kept in their stables for months in unusually severe winters, like that now closing. A letter from a native Armenian of Ismidt to a relative in New York says:

> This winter has been a most unusual one—the severest within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. No one was prepared for such extreme cold and heavy snow-fall; and fuel, both coal and wood, became exhausted early in the season. From village to village the people trampec, searching for charcoal burners who had not been able to market all their coal on account of the depth of snow. Even the little procured in that way was soon exhausted, and great sickness and many deaths have resulted from the cold and exposure. It looks to us as though even nature was against us in the struggle for existence.

No later news of the earthquake has yet been received, but it can readily be understood from the missionaries' appeal for help that their situation is a deplorable one. Their buildings wrecked, they themselves with their mission attendants and children are dependent upon others for food and shelter. Their friends, the Armenians, are the poorest of the population and the most persecuted and despised. At the time of the great Armenian massacres, in 1896, Bitlis was a scene of ruthless slaughter, hundreds of Armenian Christians being butchered and their homes plundered by fanatical Moslems. Oppression has kept the survivors poor ever since. Little sympathy for the missionaries might be expected from the Turks or semi-savage Kurds. In their sudden plight, deprived of their homes and all their belongings, and it may be escaping the great peril not wholly unscathed, they naturally looked to the homeland for succor and sympathy. One can imagine the sending out of the messenger to wire for help; the dangerous journey in inclement weather until a telegraph station was reached; the sending of the message of appeal to Mr. Peet at Constantinople, with the request that he forward it to the one quarter from whence unfailing help had come to Armenia in her former distresses—to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Those good missionaries at Bitlis,

The Sower and the Reaper

TEXT: JOHN 4: 37

"One soweth, and another reapeth"

CHRIST is here describing a group of workmen going forth to their labors. Each laborer carries upon his arm a bag full of seed. They fill their hands with the seeds, and begin to scatter them far and wide. Finally one of these laborers turns, and says to Christ, "Why, Jesus, for what am I planting these seeds? I will never live long enough to gather the harvests in this world." "No," answers Christ, "I know it. But the coming generations will gather the harvests of your seed-planting. As your ancestors planted seeds from which you are to-day gathering harvests, so you must plant seeds that your children and children's children may gather their harvests." In other words, the great lesson of this text is that "We ourselves may die and be forgotten, but our works shall live on, and other men may get the credit of the work." Come, let me read to you the text in full: "And herein is that saying true, one man soweth, and another reapeth."

The Seed of Electricity

Every generation builds upon the tombs and the catacombs of previous generations. This fact is emphatically true in both the scientific and the industrial world. It is true of the houses in which we live, and the railroad trains and steamboats in which we travel, and the food that we eat, and the clothing that we wear, and the electric lights by which we see, and the books that we read. It is true in almost all the industrial developments of life. It is also true that the men who made these industrial developments possible, themselves, as a rule, got very little reward out of their inventions or improvements.

When Benjamin Franklin was making his electrical investigations, people used to laugh at him. One day he produced the proof that lightning and electricity are identical. Then the people again began to sneer and say: "Well, even if that is true, what is the good of the discovery?" "What is the use of a child?" answered Franklin; "it may yet become a man. This truth is now only in its infancy. You cannot foresee how it may be applied, and into what power it may yet be developed." Did not the "child of electricity" grow into amazing strength? Long after the sage of Philadelphia was buried, Galvani and Volta and Oersted and Joseph Henry and Faraday and Sir Humphrey Davy and Gramme and Morse and Edison and Cyrus Field got to work, and with this far-reaching truth discovered by Benjamin Franklin as a basis, they developed power to run our street railways, and power to turn the wheels of factories, and power with which to scatter the darkness of the night, and power with which to send our messages under the seas. Could Benjamin Franklin awaken now from his grave, truly he would not recognize the face of his "child of electricity." He planted the seed of electrical development, but others have garnered the harvests. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

The Sower of the Cotton-Gin

Many years ago a poor Yale student, who had a tendency to consumption, was living in South Carolina, in the home of the widow of General Nathaniel Greene. While there, he met some Southern planters who were bemoaning the fact that the chief profit of the cotton industry was lost, because no machine had yet been invented which could separate the cotton seeds from the cotton. Young Eli Whitney, for that was the Yale student's name, went to work and labored on month in and month out. He perfected the cotton-gin, but before he could get a patent upon the invention, the barn, in which he had his workshop, was broken open, and the machine was stolen, and his ideas were patented by other men. Eli Whitney, the man who has made millions of dollars for the South, the man who has doubled and quadrupled and infinitely increased the earning capacity of the Southern plantations poor Eli Whitney himself never got a dollar from his cotton-gins, save the poor pittance of $50,000 granted him by the legislature of South Carolina. Like Robert Fulton with his steamboat, like Morse with his telegraph wires, like Watt with his steam engine, like George Stephenson with his locomotive, like R. A. Holden the agriculturist, and Burbank the wizard of flowers and vegetables, these men have been seed-planters. They have made millions of dollars for other men; but like Agassiz, they have not had time to make money for themselves. "One man soweth, and another reapeth." One generation plants the seeds of the industrial world and another generation reaps the harvest.

Have you ever stopped to think how magnificent is the heritage in the industrial world you as a child fell heir to when you were born? Have you ever stopped to think of all the well-built roads and the railroad tracks and all the lighthouses and aqueducts and sanitary developments which have come to you through your ancestors? How you have been served by the wise men and the greatest heroes of the world? Child of the twentieth century, how rich is the heritage on which you have entered! Men have thought and studied and toiled, and you are enjoying the fruit of their labors. Do you not realize that when John Gutenberg invented printing he was inventing it for you, and that when Columbus sailed across the seas he was discovering America for you, and that when Cyrus W. Field stretched his cables he was laying them for you, and that when Galileo developed the telescope he was developing it for you, and that when Isaac Newton discovered the law of specific gravity he was discovering it for you? All these men were seed-planters. They were the giants who laid the foundation-stones upon which the superstructures of our industrial prosperity have been erected. They themselves received very little personal benefit out of their seed-planting. But they made millions of dollars for other men. The next generation reaped the harvest of their seed-planting. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

A Relic of the Past

This fact was powerfully illustrated in the life of one of my friends. In my Pittsburg church there was a family which for generations had produced bridge-builders and contractors. The first member of that family who came to the western part of Pennsylvania was a contractor. His grandson, whom I knew well, was also a contractor. Some years ago this grandson of the first pioneer had a contract to build over or reconstruct a railroad bridge. As he dug down into the foundations to relay some of the old stones, much to his surprise he found there a tool-chest marked with his own initials "R.S." That tool-chest could have belonged to but one person, and that his own grandfather, after whom he had been named. One of his grandfather's men had forgotten and left his tools there when his grandfather built the original bridge. So when we begin to dig down into the foundations of our modern industrial prosperity we always find that our modern industrial life has been built out of the inventions and the discoveries of the generations that are dead and gone. Like the coral-reef, we have been growing in a temporal sense. Our industrial prosperities are built upon the catacombs and the tombs of our ancestors. These former generations may have received but little personal benefit from their seed-planting. We have reaped the rich harvest. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

What is true of the industrial life is emphatically true of the political and the social life. The flag under which we live and breathe and have our being was not designed entirely by a Betsy Ross. It was not woven by the fingers of a Martha Washington. That flag is a combination flag. It was dyed red on the bloody soil of many a hard-fought battlefield. Its white stripes were cut from the sainted robes of many martyrs. Its many stars represent the States added one by one to the great family. The men who followed it when it was first unfurled, and who made it glorious by love and sacrifice, reaped but little personal advantage in this world. But these noble patriots were seed-planters. The present generation and all coming generations will gather the plenteous harvest of their sowing.

Political Sowing

Do you for one instant suppose that even there we are at the beginning? There would never have been a Declaration of American Independence, unless there had first been a Magna Charta. Why, those stern-faced, iron-fisted, unrelenting English barons, who gathered about the "Round Table" at Runnymede in 1215, and compelled King John to grant them personal liberty, unconsciously fought as much for American independence as they did for their English ri Washington and Samuel Adams and Jefferson Patrick Henry would not have been possible these patriots of seven centuries ago had first dar challenge the doctrine of the divine right of kings. you suppose there would ever have been a Con tion of the United States, unless there had first a Bannockburn, or a Beverly Manor House? Witherspoon was only a reincarnation of a Sir Wil Wallace. Miles Standish and Israel Putnam have lived two or three hundred years apart, but were twin brothers. Governor Carver and Gove Bradford spoke in the Continental Congress thr the lips of John Adams and Franklin. A man seem to die, but his spirit never dies. It has its incarnation, then its reincarnation, and then it liv thousands of other lives. You see displayed by men of all races in these national c far apart in time and place. It is made up of the binations of thousands and tens of thousands of he men who when they lived did not or could not dr of a country like that in which to-day we are liv These patriots in their own time received little pers benefit from their sacrifices. They were governme seed-planters. But the present generation and succeeding generations shall be the gatherers of harvest which they sowed. "One man soweth, another reapeth."

Many patriotic martyrs have died deaths of ig miny, but that does not prove that they lived and in vain. No. From the blood-soaked planks of French guillotine has been lifted the glorious Fre Republic. From the sacrifice of human life at Val Forge, Bunker Hill and other fields has been evol this mighty government of the United States to-d under whose constitution we now live. In Rome th sleeps the immortal dust of one who has the follow sad words for his epitaph: "This grave contains that was mortal of a young English poet, who on deathbed, in the bitterness of his heart at the malic power of his enemies, desired that these words engraved on his tombstone: 'Here lies one wh name was written in water.'" That is the grave of immortal John Keats. Did John Keats ever die? As an inspiration of his pen there have come forth t mighty poets, who studied him intently as th model: Robert Browning and Alfred Tennyson. lives. John Keats will always live in song. So th has been many a martyred patriot who thought he di an abject failure. But out of the death and the pat otic sacrifice of these heroes of the past has be evolved an ideal of conduct for all patriots of this a other nations. These patriotic martyrs gained little no personal benefit. They were the seed-planters. T present generation and succeeding generations will co tinue to gather in their cumulating harvests. "O man soweth and another reapeth."

The Seed of the Martyrs

What is true of the industrial world and the politic life is true of the Church and of our ecclesiastical a spiritual blessings. When the fire grate is always fu of coal, and the cupboard is always full of food, and t wardrobe is always full of clothes, most of us acce the luxuries of life as the ordinary commonplaces. The we wonder why any person will grumble about bein cold or hungry. When we are born under the shado of a church spire and are baptized at the church alta and we are sent to her Sunday Schools and ar invited to sit at her communion tables we are ver apt to believe that the Church is like an indigenou plant that has always been here and that always will b here. Now, my friends, I want to tell you that th Church of the Lord Jesus Christ was never planted any where successfully, unless it was first planted there i blood-soaked soil. The planters of the Church of th Lord Jesus Christ were the heroes who were alway looking for the harvests of the future and never living for their own personal benefit and reward.

Where did the American Church come from? Did once asserted that in his work he was surrounded eat cloud of witnesses. As we gather about our altars to-day cannot we see the faces of the lf-sacrificing missionaries who have made such a service as this a possibility? Are they not above this pulpit to-day? An eye-witness clared that the most beautiful part of all Father

's ministry was his intense realization of Christ's
e. The things he would say and do might have reverent in another, but in Taylor they seemed idence of His reality. Sitting one Sunday at the able to administer the Communion, he concealed
. Then in deeply solemn tone he said: "Chil-bring you a gift from Jesus, something to you of him." Then, his voice breaking, he said:
"It is the wine of the Covenant, His own blood shed for you, and he bids me say, 'Drink ye all of it,' and he brought forward the cup, and looking at it he wept. Yes, all the good we enjoy has come to us as that wine by sacrifice. They lived their lives of sacrifice to give us this gospel sanctuary. We are to-day gathering in their ripened harvests. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

But we do not have to go alone into the past centuries to find the sowers. All those who have planted harvests for their fellow men are not to be found alone in the damp, dark cells of a Savonarola or a Huss. You remember well a seed-planter who never wore a monk's cowl. Her face was wrinkled and her hair was white and her hands very thin when you last saw her. Her throne-room was the nursery and the kitchen. Her realm was the old home of your boyhood. The world at large never thought that she amounted to much. She never had a large harvest. She was always sowing. She was sowing her life in the heart and brain of this child and that child and the other child. She had a good second in her sowing. That other sower was the husband who stood by her side. Indeed, they had so little that they always lived in a plain house and dressed in very plain clothes, and ate very simple food and never went anywhere outside of their own little town. One day some years ago, you began to be ashamed of their shabby clothes. The neighbors seemed to have so much better than they. You sharply said, "Mother! why don't you get a better dress? Why does not father move into a better house?" You remember just how she looked as she said, "Well, son, this dress is warm enough, and I guess the old house will do for pa and me. We cannot afford much better clothes and give you children all the education you ought to have. We are willing for you children to gather the harvests of our life's work. We do not care so much what becomes of us, if you boys only turn out well. We are sowers, just humble sowers. You, my son, can reap, but your father and I will just keep on our sowing."

And can you not say those two old folks sowed well? Is not the result of their seed-planting being reaped to-day in rich harvests by you and your brothers and sisters? All you are and have are the fruit of that home husbandry. Why did all your sisters and brothers turn out well? Shall these brothers and sisters get all the credit for the harvests they have reaped? "No, no," you answer. "We are nothing. We are merely the result of the seed-planting of the two Gospel sowers who lived and labored for us children back in the old farmhouse." In heaven to-day they are getting the rewards for the harvests you and your brothers and sisters are garnering. Your parents were sowers, glorious and triumphant sowers. You are gathering in the harvests that have come from the seed they sowed long ago. "One man soweth, and another reapeth."

Now, my friends, as others have sowed for you, are you also sowing for your children? As the glorious men and women of the past have been seed-planters that you might gather their harvests, are you willing to be seed-planters that your friends and your loved ones and your children and your children's children may gather the fruit? In other words, are you willing to so submerge your life in Christ's that you will find your joy in the joys of others and your gospel triumphs in their salvation, although on earth your name may never get the credit or be linked with the harvests of those whom you have blessed? Are you willing to be a sower for the Master, and like him to leave the fruit of your service and sacrifice for others to reap? Have you learned the meaning of those words in which he compared himself to a corn of wheat which brings no fruit until it is cast into the ground and dies? Are you ready to give yourself to service or to sacrifice to lay down all for Jesus Christ, who himself was a seed-planter and himself died in order that you might live?

Missionaries at Bitlis and their Families

lis, although known only to modern times as a commercial city, is rich in historic legend and tradition. Near the city is a romantic gorge or pass thirty miles in length, which is still pointed out as the retreating route of Xenophon's Ten Thousand, after the slaughter of the Greek leaders by Artaxerxes, about 401 B.C. One of the most ancient landmarks in the city is a castle or fortress 150 feet high, which may have been built in early Roman days, although it is said that Alexander the Great was the founder. Four valleys lead from four different directions through the centre of the city. Through three of these valleys flow streams known as the Hamba, Aveklon and Khosrovan. These in turn flow into the Abi Bitlis (river Bitlis), which is a tributary of the Tigris. At one time the city contained 25,000 houses, but a great famine in the seventeenth century caused a large migration.

In a quarter called the Avel Meidan (the "Market of Abel"), are the missionary headquarters and the British consulate. Not far distant are the bazaars and principal buildings. The Turkish officials have opposed missionary teaching among the Mohammedan population, and the Armenians, among whom the missionaries have labored freely, have become the most intelligent part of the population.

The ancient name of Bitlis seems to have been Baghesh. This story is told in explanation of the change:

"The King of Macedon was impressed by the advantages of the site as he journeyed past it at the head of his army. Detaching one of his generals who was called Lais, or Lis, he ordered him to erect a stronghold at the junction of the two streams and to endeavor to complete it against the return of the royal forces. The general executed these commands to the very letter; and when the King retraced his steps to the valley which had excited his admiration, he found it defended against his entry by a formidable fortress. After in vain employing all the arts known to the besiegers of his day, he contrived to possess himself of the person of his revolted subject. When that rebel was introduced to the royal presence, he defended his action against the vehement reproaches of his master in the following brief but pointed speech:

" 'My lord ordered me to build him a strong castle, the strongest which should yet have been constructed. How could I better convince my lord of the obedience of his servant than by successfully resisting in that castle the greatest warrior of the world?'

"Alexander was pleased by the words, but playfully observed in the Persian language that Lis was a very bad man, bad Lis. The epithet adhered to the name of the general and survives in that of the town to the present day. . . .

"The population of the town appears to have increased during the present century. In 1814 (writes Lynch in his book on Armenia), it was believed to consist of not more than 12,000 souls, one-half Mussulman, and the remainder Armenian. Brant computed the number of families in 1838 at 3,000, or from 15,000 to 18,000 souls. Of these, two-thirds were Mussulman, and one-third Armenian, besides 50 families belonging to the Jacobite persuasion. In 1868 Consul Taylor speaks of 4,000 families, of which 1,500 were Christian, that is to say Armenian. In 1900 the population of the town probably amounted to close on 30,000 souls, 10,000 Armenian, 300 Syrians or Jacobites, and the rest Mussulman Kurd.

"The official figures for the population of the town and caza, comprising Tadvan and the head of Mush plain, showed a total of just over 44,000 inhabitants, including about 15,500 Armenians. If we would equalize the number of the females to that of the males, 15 per cent. must be added to these figures."

Our China Relief Cargo Ready

It Cost, Complete, $110,000--Will be Loaded on the "Buford," which Sails April 30--"Thousands are Perishing," the Missionaries Report by Cable

WITHIN two weeks from this date, the good ship Buford, Army transport, wafted by the prayers of a countless multitude of God's people, will be steaming across the blue waters of the Pacific, on her way to China. Her entire cargo has now been completed, the purchase of the flour, in addition to the thousand tons previously bought in Minneapolis, having been made through Major Krauthoff, Division Commissary, U. S. A., at San Francisco, under instructions from Commissary-General Henry G. Sharpe, of the United States Army. The entire cargo cost $110,000, for which amount Dr. Klopsch, in behalf of the contributors to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund, has sent a certified check to Gen. Sharpe.

If to this sum representing cargo value be added $15,000, representing the gift of free transportation to the coast from Messrs. Harriman and Hughitt (of the Union and Southern Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern Railroads), and $25,000 as the approximate value of the Buford's charter, generously contributed by the government, this princely gift from the people of Christian America to the famine sufferers represents a total of $150,000, in addition to the sum of $150,000 already cabled at different times to China for immediate relief. The grand total of the help given to the sufferers, up to the moment when the Buford weighs anchor, will therefore have reached $300,000.

But the actual amount expended by the Fund in the purchase of the cargo will represent probably less than half its value when it reaches Chinkiang. In the present condition of affairs in the famine provinces, we are assured that the Buford's welcome gift of life-saving food will be worth not less than double what it cost to purchase here. With favoring weather, she should make port within a month.

A cablegram to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Secretary McCrea of the Missionary Committee, gives the present condition of affairs as follows:

"CHINKIANG, March 31.

"DR. KLOPSCH: Reports of famine abatement unfounded. Relief work saving many, but totally inadequate. Thousands are perishing. Missionaries in famine area are unanimous as to urgent need of relief until June.

(Signed) "MCCREA."

From the same source we have the following letter by the latest mail, which affords a glimpse of the splendid work the Missionary Committee is doing:

"DEAR DR. KLOPSCH:

"Our Committee asked me to send you a copy of the report which I have just made to them. It gives the receipts and disbursements to date. The missionaries in the various stations will give us later reports of the actual distribution to the people.

"We are unable to express to you and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD our gratitude for this generous response to our appeal for help. While the missionaries who compose our Committee are distributing the money raised by the Shanghai Committee, and appreciate greatly the fine work they are doing, we nevertheless are very happy to have a fund with which we can give help to the people in the name of Christ.

"Conditions at Tsingkiangpu are now such that no relief works can be started, and the missionaries distribute food and money directly to the people. All your money is going to Suchien, Hsuchowfu, and Tsingkiangpu.

"Conditions in the famine area are becoming frightful. Brigandage and piracy are rife. The wives and children of the missionaries are preparing to leave the stricken section. We can only hope and pray that conditions will not become so bad that the men too will have to leave. Quite a number of missionaries have gone up to the famine area to help the brethren there in the relief work."

A correspondent of the North China News and Herald writes from the famine districts:

"We are in desperate straits here. The people are starving and freezing to death and are becoming truly desperate. Our gate is thronged all day and night with the most pitiful specimens of starving humanity. When we go out we are besought for help and clung to until we can hardly get through the crowd. The clothes sent by the ladies have all been distributed. We were almost mobbed by the crowd wanting garments, but with the help of the local police we got through safely. It is a fearful state of affairs and I am not sure how long we shall be able to bear the strain, to say nothing of the disease with which we are surrounded."

Another correspondent of the same paper says of Cheng Yang Kuan, in Anhui province: "Things are bad here. Many of the people are dying for want of bread and clothing. Crowds patrol the streets crying for food. Things are exceedingly dear; the price of everything is abnormally high." Relief has been afforded, but not in measure to keep pace with the advancement of famine and destitution.

From Chinkiang, under date of March 1, comes this hopeful statement: "The supplies of American flour and money are being received by the starving people with the utmost appreciation. The first consignments have arrived at all the centres, and have already been largely distributed to the people." It can readily be understood what a blessing the Buford's cargo will mean to the starving multitudes. It will drive back the wolves of hunger from countless homes and save hundreds of thousands who must otherwise perish. The Chinese government, aroused to the emergency, is now exerting itself to check the progress of the famine, by providing a system of public works which will employ the able-bodied. This will be a great help; but the official plans mature slowly, like everything else in the Orient. Meanwhile, but for the aid from abroad, and more especially from America, which has contributed two-thirds of the foreign help thus far, death would reap a frightful harvest in the six famine-swept pr

Mr. W. T. Ellis, correspondent of this journa ing from the famine field, states that up to the time there has been no danger to missionaries eigners. Reports of such danger were circula Chinese officials in order that the Shanghai Con might be induced to place the distribution of funds in native hands. This ruse failed, howev as already stated in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, all relief contributions are distributed through the m aries alone. Among the Protestant denomi working in and around the famine districts are ern Presbyterians, Southern Presbyterians, Meth Baptists, Quakers and Disciples, besides several bers of the China Inland Mission.

That the suffering in China has touched Am hearts very deeply is evident from the thousa sympathetic letters that are received daily b CHRISTIAN HERALD. From every State contrib are pouring in from those who are eager to share in this great work of benevolence.

Distributing Relief to Famine Sufferers at Suchou, China

Many churches, Sunday S and religious societies are sented among the contributors many hard-working men and w who, from their very scanty m have still found opportunity something for China.

Rev. Wm. Yost, Treasurer, sionary Society of the Evang Association, writes from Clevelan

It gives me great pleasure to forw you an additional check for $500 f China Relief Fund. The good people church, the Evangelical Associatio doing grandly. You have now alre ceived through me $2,267, and the not yet.

"My Sunday School class o Westminster Presbyterian Chu writes Bessie Williamson, Salt City, "when they heard of the fa in China, asked to give $5 of money toward this Fund."

The letters abound in expressio deep, kindly Christian sympath hope this ($5) may prove 'the c cold water' to some poor sta soul," writes a "Friend" in dolph, Vt. Through Mr. Elliot L john of New Haven, two go hearted old ladies send a loving of $10. "I trust you may ha generous response from all C tians," writes E. T. E., Danville ($1). An invalid family at S wood, Calif., whose mother is ridden, sends $2 as "a tiny pitt to help." Counselor J. H. Str of New York forwards $6.25 at request of seven generous-hea children, who raised the money very clever little parlor enter ment. An inmate of the Home fo Friendless at Scranton, Pa., send "widow's mite" ($2), the fruit of self-denial. Pasto G. Beaird, of Tipton, Ia., has forwarded at different t $10, the gift of the Cedar County Sabbath Sc Association. The Junior Guild of the Church of Epiphany, Atlanta, Ga., sends $8, per A. E. Mi Secretary. Mrs. A. B. Royall of Arcadia, T writes: "Enclosed $12 to help feed some poor Chin $2 I give and the $10 I raised among friends in Arcad Rosa S., St. Louis, writes: "I told my little granc last evening about the China famine. This morn the little fellow of his own accord handed me ten ce saying: 'Grandma, please send this for me to Ch I have only twenty cents and can give no more.' gave half of his earnings. May the rich childre New York do likewise." The brave little fell name is David G. Loth.

Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter

In this issue, three pages are devoted to acknowledgments of contributions to the China Relief Fund. In doing this, we are not encroaching upon the rights of our readers, as these pages are given in addition to the usual number which constitute the regular issue of the paper.

The "Buford's" Cargo

THE completion of the cargo of our Famine Relief ship Buford, marks an important stage of the life-saving work in China, in which our readers have been engaged during the last two months. This great benefaction of thousands of tons of sound, wholesome American flour, which will reach the famine field at the most critical period of the suffering, cannot fail to produce a radical change in the situation.

It is gratifying also to learn that the relief operations under both committees in the field are proceeding with unexampled smoothness, and that the system under which our missionaries are working reaches the very centres of suffering. Yet, notwithstanding all that is being done by the Imperial Government and foreign relief, the Chinkiang Committee cables the sad news that "thousands are perishing."

We can imagine the eagerness with which the workers look forward to the arrival of the great food cargo from America, and the earnest prayers that Heaven may speed the ship. She will sail April 30.

The Warnings of Sin

SOLEMN warnings against sin and worldliness do not always come from the pulpit. We remember shuddering at Thackeray's description of a London woman of fashion. "The rush from entertainment to entertainment; the fiddle-faddle of the milliner's boxes; the lying down at two o'clock at night; the prayerless awaking to a godless to-morrow." What could be more descriptive?

The poet Gray, whose beautiful "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" cannot be forgotten, once said that the greatest wish of his life was to "lie on a lounge and read French novels." The desire was gratified; but alas! he mourned bitterly over wasted time and misspent hours. No other great poem followed the Elegy. His days were a stagnant sea wherein were sunk the treasures of an intellect.

Whoever has read Charles Lamb's Confessions of a Drunkard can never forget the bitter pang of remorse, the gay evening with its flashes of wit and humor, followed in the morning by heavy head, throbbing as he bent over the desk where he earned his daily bread; the shame, the sorrow. He faithfully wrote it all down, seemingly as a warning. Over De Quincey's Confessions of an Opium-eater dance the corpse-lights of insanity. No one can call the lurid flame merriment. The fearful pictures which the present use of morphine is painting are only reflections of his testimony.

In private life the witness is as strong. You see on a train a company of actors and actresses. The face of one woman impresses us. The soured glance, the gathering lines on cheek and brow, the sharp voice. Oh, to see such a page written on a woman's face! The fresh youthful look of a young man is commented on. There sits another about the same age, with heavy lines under his dark eyes and about the mouth. When the remark is made he lifts the heavy lids and says: "It is because he has lived that kind of a life; if he had lived the other, it would have left its mark on him."

These are the testimonies of those who have tried the pleasures of sin.

The Danger Line in Present Fiction

A GLANCE at the novels offered to the public at present is somewhat disconcerting. In contrast with the fiction in vogue in middle Victorian days, much that is written for our amusement or instruction, now deals frankly and unreservedly with themes of passion and with illicit relations on the part of both married and single folk. Any work by Charles Dickens or William Makepeace Thackeray or Sir Walter Scott or Jane Austen or Anthony Trollope is a safe ibook to put into the hands of youth. The books written by those great authors may be read aloud in the family, or discussed without a blush in a group of refined people of both sexes.

This can hardly be said about three-fourths of the novels that we read and discuss in the twentieth century. Some of them boldly advocate independence of marriage; many of them take for granted the easy dissolution of the marriage tie; the majority insidiously teach contempt for religion and exalt human desires at the expense of conscience and divine authority. Even authors of acknowledged genius and power deal openly with primitive and elemental passion, in a way that must be dangerous to the immature mind.

The real danger in fiction of this type is the same danger that has hurled itself upon us in recent newspaper publications of marital infelicity. It may be a brutal report of a murder trial, or a cunningly conceived plot and development of a modern romance, but equally if primitive passions are laid bare to no moral purpose, there will be a withering effect on the minds of readers, delicate sensibilities will be blunted and emotions will run riot over principle. None of us would proffer a cup of deadly poison to one dear to us. Why should we tolerate insidious poison in our books? What we formerly called the sensationalism of the dime novel has found its way into finely bound and printed volumes on both sides of the sea. Danger signals are in order.

Broad-Minded Beneficence

ONE of the last acts of Mr. James J. Hill as president of the Great Northern Railway Company was to agree to transport, free of freight charges, 1,000 tons of flour—part of the relief ship Buford's cargo — from Minneapolis to Seattle.

Indisputably, Mr. Hill is in the fore-front of constructive, enlarging, beneficent industry. Few, if any, are his peers as authority on questions of economical transportation. By written and spoken word, as by enduring accomplishment, he has taught truth to the world in the matter of opening new territory and economically administering trans-continental systems of transport. This broad-gauged, busy man finds the day all too short for the performance of crowding duties. Yet his broad-minded beneficence recognized at sight the propriety of the draft made upon it by the needs of China's starving millions, and he honored that draft fully, quickly, unreservedly.

To one of Mr. Hill's temperament the knowledge that he has earned the gratitude of all who contributed to the life-saving cargo of the Buford must be exhilarating. He is a man of large affairs and his gifts are on a par with his undertakings.

In equal measure of beneficence appears the management of the Northern Pacific Railway, which, through Mr. J. G. Woodworth, Traffic Manager, telegraphed quick and full assent to a request from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to transport free 800 tons of flour from Minneapolis to Seattle. To the Northern Pacific as to the Great Northern the commendation of the world of Christian charity is due. It is none the less due and accorded in that the offer of neither road was used. This was owing to the necessity (which transpired after the requests had been granted) for purchasing 1,800 tons of Pacific Coast flour at San Francisco. It was found impracticable to send the Buford to Seattle.

Unhappy Armenia

THERE is an old world tradition, which is still cherished in the Orient, that when Satan had been cast out from the Divine Presence after his rebellion, he took his flight toward the newly-created earth, and the first soil to feel the impress of the foot of the fallen angel was the summit of Niphates, the great mountain of Armenia, now known as Mount Nimroud. Milton, in Paradise Lost, has utilized this tradition in the lines wherein he describes how Satan, having visited the sun—

> Took leave and toward the coast of earth beneath,
> Down from the ecliptic, sped with hoped success,
> Throws his steep flight in many an aery wheel,
> Nor staid till on Niphates' top he lights.

In after ages, but still long before history's dawn, Niphates became a vast volcano, dealing death and desolation over a wide area of that fair land, which tradition further affirms was almost on "the border of Eden."

In whatever light we may regard this quaint old story, preserved in Eastern folk-lore, which tells how the devil entered Armenia, it is pretty certain that for many generations past the forces of evil have been at work in that unhappy country. Probably no cou in the world has seen so much of this bitter antago as Armenia and certainly none has suffered more.

In her latest misfortune, one of her fairest and ol cities has been partially wrecked by a series of ea quakes. It would almost seem (as a letter fron Armenian suggests) that even the forces of nature l allied themselves against that ill-fated land. All remember how she suffered in the great persecutio 1894–96 will sympathize with her in her present fortune.

King of Emergency Benevolences

From the New York Christian Advocate, March 28

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH on Friday last informed the State partment that his telegraphic advices from China sho such an acute condition that he is sending to the Red Cros Washington $50,000, in addition to the $100,000 worth of which he will place on the army transport Buford at San F cisco next month. This is a union of effective missionary w relief and international amity.

Rev. Dr. Buckley, the esteemed editor of The Ch tian Advocate, and the Nestor of Methodist journali has the foregoing kindly comment in his paper, on T CHRISTIAN HERALD's relief work in China. The pro etor of this journal, however, can accept this trib of praise only as the representative of the thousands earnest, noble-hearted men and women throughout t land who, for many years past, have made THE CHRIST HERALD the chosen channel of their benevolences. their splendid generosity is due the present popu movement, which, under divine blessing, will assure result in a great saving of precious lives, and in avert much suffering.

A Vast Calamity

(New York Evening Post)

New Yorkers have been called on so frequently with the past twelve months to aid sufferers from earthquake or fam or flood the world over that any fresh appeal must find many empty purse. And yet those who can afford to give should n overlook THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's appeal for the China fam sufferers. Conditions there grow worse and worse. Every ca brings news of greater destitution and suffering, or tells of t horrors of cannibalism to which the victims have been driv The Chinese have so much reason to believe that we are altogeth hostile to them as a race and as individuals, that this is a p culiarly fitting opportunity to prove to them that the mass of t American people feel for them in their misfortune, precisely they would for any other stricken nation. The vastness of t calamity makes even San Francisco's earthquake seem a sm affair. Moreover, this is an emergency which should appeal to t small givers, since ten cents a day will save a small family, twen cents will sustain life for a week, while five dollars will furni the necessary sustenance for six lives for one month. One hundr dollars will save a whole community. Surely, THE CHRISTI HERALD's appeal should meet with a prompt and generous respon ong the prisoners awaiting sentence e court of Queens County, New York, tly, was a man who made an eloquent for mercy. As he had already served erm in prison, he knew that his sen- would probably be severe, and he sought to get it mitigated by an appeal to the judge's pity. He told the story of his life and described his temptation to commit crime, his final downfall and his good resolves to lead an honest life. Since his liberation from jail he protested that he had been trying to live an honest life and was innocent of the crime for which he was convicted. He then quoted Mr. W. J. Bryan as saying in substance that an ex-convict who honestly endeavored to lead a good, useful life after his discharge from prison should receive the encouragement and aid of all good citizens. The judge said he had given the plea careful consideration, but inasmuch as stolen goods had recently been found in his possession, the proceeds of the burglary for which he had been tried, he failed to see any evidence of contrition or a desire to reform. He therefore sentenced him to the full penalty. The judge took the Scriptural view of repentance, which is that it consists not in weeping and groaning, but in a renunciation of sin and a reformed life.

Ex-Convict's Plea

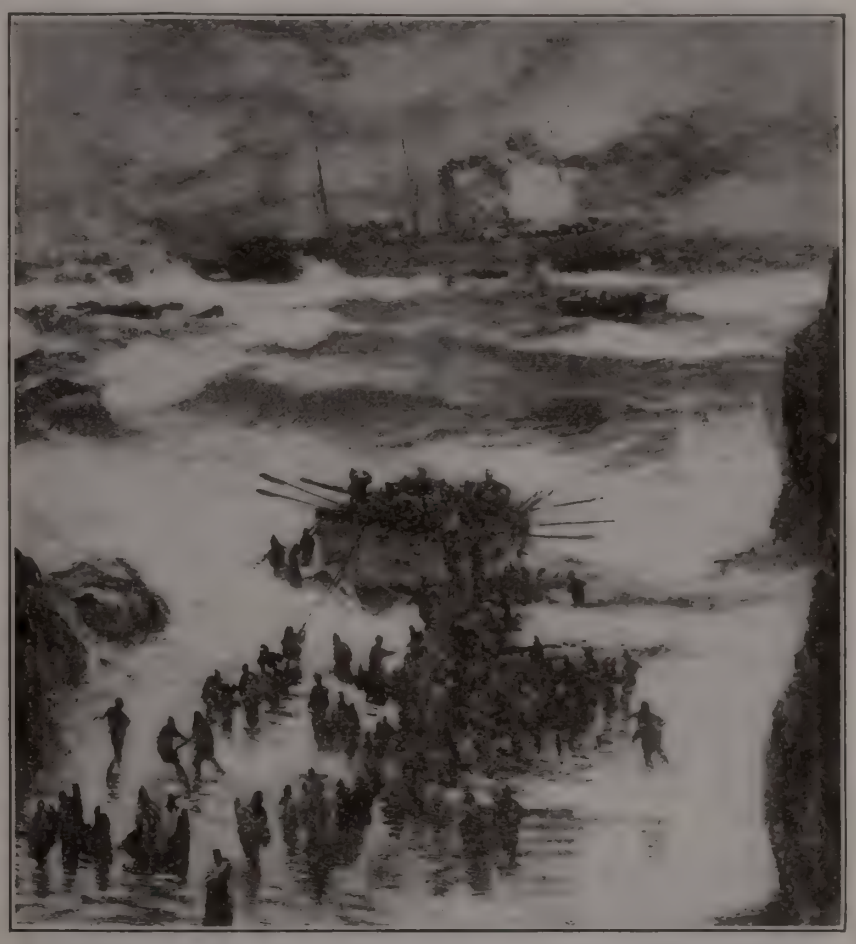
Bring forth therefore fruit worthy of repentance (Matt. 3: 8, R.V.).



Rescue of Passengers From the Australian Liner "Suevic"

Light Through Work

This motto is used by a society in New York to describe the work it is trying to do for the blind. The work as described in the Outlook commenced about four years ago, through the visit of two young ladies to an institution in Italy, where some blind boys were enjoying a concert. Returning to New York the ladies became intimately acquainted with the deplorable condition of the adult blind in the State, and in a quiet way began distributing tickets to the afflicted people for concerts and oratorios. The effect was so beneficial that they continued their work until five thousand tickets had been given away. Out of these efforts grew up an attempt to help the blind in other ways by training them to do work by which they could become self supporting. Basket-making, weaving, knitting and lace-making were the employments first taught, and it was found that the blind boys and girls became adepts, and were brighter and happier for the occupation. It was then suggested that they might learn to be telephone switchboard operators. The telephone companies, skeptical at first, became converts, and report that the blind operators, of whom several are now employed, compare favorably in efficiency with seeing operators. The change in their lives is wonderful. They are cheerful and hopeful, and full of joy. Light has come to them through work, and the society has adopted the fact as its motto. It cannot open the eyes of its proteges, but it alleviates the darkness of their lot. The work is truly Christlike, and is assured of the reward.

They cannot recompense thee, but thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just (Luke 14 : 14).

A Fisherman's Peril

Among the stories told by a fisherman in a daily journal is one of a critical situation in which there was a narrow escape from drowning. He had gone with some friends to a noted resort in New Jersey, but his friends, after a few days' experience, went away disgusted with their failure. One of them, however, who is an enthusiast in the sport, remained after the others left, in the hope of a catch. He had been watching the net for hours, when he saw the floats suddenly swish around under the impetus of a heavy body. He knew at once that a big fish was enclosed, and began to pull in with energy. Just as he had the net well in hand, standing in the front of the boat, the fish gave a heavy lunge and broke away for freedom. The fisherman was taken by surprise, and the sudden jerk threw him off his balance into the water. Happily, a companion saw his predicament and threw him a line, by which he was drawn on board. Then, with the aid of his rescuer, he caught the net with a hook and captured the biggest sturgeon of the season. It was well for him that some one was near enough to save him, otherwise he might have lost his life in securing his prize. There are some who have lost their souls in that way. In trying to gain a fortune, they have been drawn into sin, and have sunk beyond redemption.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction (I. Tim. 6 : 9).

A Real Passover

The celebration of the ancient feast in the Jewish homes of New York this year had special significance for a band of two hundred immigrants on Ellis Island. To every Jew the feast had a symbolic meaning. But to the immigrant it had a deep and vital reality, for had they not been delivered from the darkness and tyranny of Russia, and were they not come into the new Canaan, the land of milk and honey, America? Therefore they drank of tokay, and toasted the Stars and Stripes and the blue star of Zion, and praised the God of their fathers for taking them into the land of freedom. The celebration was planned by the United Hebrew Charities and the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, with the sanction of the Immigration Commissioner. Unleavened bread had been duly provided, and the viands and fruit usual at the ceremony. One of the little boys asked the usual questions prescribed in the Pentateuch, and a chaplain who presided as patriarch chanted the answers. At the close of the feast the chaplain addressed the guests on the new exodus they had passed through, and assured them of a welcome in the land of freedom to which they had come. He pointed out that in every age God renews his deliverances to them who trust in him. Thus was the commandment fulfilled:

Ye shall keep the feast throughout your generations; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever (Exodus 12 : 14).

A Husband's Life-Blood

A remarkable operation took place in Philadelphia a few days ago. A lady, thirty-five years of age, had become a sufferer from anemia, and her physician, being alarmed, had her removed to a hospital. There a consultation of doctors took place and the conclusion was reached that only by the transfusion of blood could she be saved. Her husband was notified and he promptly offered himself for the purpose. There was no time to spare, for the woman was evidently dying. Quickly baring the husband's arm, he was etherized and husband and wife lay side by side, both unconscious, one from the deathlike coma peculiar to the disease, and the other from the anesthetic. The pulse artery in the husband's arm was severed and at the same time the large vein in the wife's left arm was opened and the free end of her husband's artery inserted and the juncture clinched with tiny needles. Every beat of the man's heart sent a stream of the red fluid into his wife's body. As each drop trickled in, the effect was noticeable, and as time passed it was apparent that life had returned to the woman's body. She is now reported to be on her way to recovery. There can be no doubt of her husband's love for her. As we think of it we realize what the love of Christ must have been when he shed his blood for his enemies.

In whom we have redemption through his blood (Eph. 1: 7).

NEW DEPARTURES FOR WOMEN

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

AMONG interesting phases of the modern woman's everyday life, none are more striking than her fearless enterprise in forging ahead along roads hitherto monopolized by man. For example: A few years ago it was exceptional to find women engaged in hotel-keeping and catering; their attempts in these lines being limited to the opening of boarding-houses that were not always well managed. At the present time a number of beautiful and attractive luncheon and tea rooms are carried on exclusively by women for women, or are thrown open to the general public. A charming daintiness pervades these rooms. The food is excellent, the service prompt, the table furnishings home-like, and the atmosphere refined and restful. Orders left at such establishments by householders are punctually filled, and in some cases each lunch room has its own specialty in preserves, pickles, sauces or jellies; a specialty that bears the delicate flavor of individual thought and care. So far from losing money in ventures of this particular kind, the women engaged in them are piling up their gains rapidly; are branching out and extending the business at other points; are buying real estate, and, in short, have stepped upon the train that leads its passengers onward to fortune.

A young woman who possessed the gifts of magnetism and initiative, and who was able to secure a modest financial backing, bethought herself of a novelty. She had observed that women were always in search of unique and elegant gifts for holidays, weddings, birthdays and other anniversaries, and that in looking for them in the large department stores they were obliged to waste much time and strength. She therefore decided that she would open a shop in which there should be a variety of articles suitable for gifts—some of them costly, many of them inexpensive, but all selected with a view to satisfying the most exacting and fastidious taste. She sent her circulars far and wide, not merely to women, but to men, knowing as she did that the latter are frequently helpless when confronted with the necessity unaided of choosing a gift that shall convey pleasure to the one receiving it. In her gift-shop she provided seats, she hung its walls with pictures, and she gave it an air of repose and simplicity. Her success exceeded her anticipations. She had discovered and supplied a felt want.

At several suburban resorts, to which in summer and winter alike tired people turn for refreshment and recreation, there may be found hotels carried on with an attention to detail and a delightful domesticity such as belong to our own homes when the matrons who engineer them are good housekeepers. It was formerly thought that the ability to keep a hotel was confined to the masculine mind, but women have shown that their brains are quite equal to the task.

In a business house downtown in New York, the head of the firm last year complained that one department, requiring especial attention to minute details, and much personal courtesy to customers, suffered because he could not find a man to give it efficient attention. "I have tried," he said, "young men out of college, and young men who have had a business training from boyhood. I have paid liberal salaries. I cannot secure the assistance I need."

"Why not try a young woman?" was asked. The house was one where it had not been the custom to employ women. But the suggestion was entertained and the trial made, the result being that a capable and conscientious woman between twenty-five and thirty, with excellent recommendations as to fitness for any position she was willing to undertake, was placed in charge. There has been no reason to regret the step. The young woman straightened matters out, understood how to treat customers and correspondents with tact and intelligence, and has proved herself able to earn a generous stipend.

Women have developed new fields for themselves in photography. How to get the baby's picture at the happiest moment, how to pose the little daughter of the house so that her sweetness and loveliness shall be caught by the camera, how to obtain exquisite pictures of beautiful interiors have been questions that puzzled many people who were able and willing to pay a good price for the gratification of their fancy. In a town less than an hour from New York, a clever girl has made for herself a large and increasing income by taking orders for photographs of children in their homes and of homes when the residents desired to have cozy corners, pretty chambers or stately drawing-rooms reproduced.

The gist of the matter is that granting skill, pluck and application, granting energy and attention, [illegible] to-day are as successful in any department they se[lect] their husbands and brothers are. If a woman is [fortu]nate as to hit upon a novelty, she is to be cor[re]lated. Witness the success of the woman in Ger[many] who set upon the market the Teddy bears that to[ok] popular heart by storm in the early part of the [year].

Concerning Friendly Books

The excuse for reading books that are hurtful [in] ground that they possess a surpassing distinctio[n] unequaled literary charm cannot be maintained. The[y] and often do possess nobility of sty[le] grace of diction and a keen flavor [of] tained interest, but they have no mor[e] of these qualities. Every month [in] the publishers' announcements we di[s]cover friendly books, intimate books, books that are sure to uplift a household and [to] and strengthen the life of the youth [or] the older reader to whom they [are] Much attention has of late been di[rected] to the exceptionally delightful wo[rks] Mr. Arthur C. Benson, a Fellow of [Trin]bridge University, England. My fi[rst] quaintance with Mr. Benson as an a[uthor] who brought a new and enriching infl[uence] into the common days was made it[h] House of Quiet, which bore on its [title] page only initials, and those mislea[ding]. The story is of a man of wealth and [lei]ture who is suddenly and abruptly [com]pelled to abandon a public career, be[cause] of a disease that has fastened itself [upon] him unsuspected, his only hope for res[tored] health being in a life of rural retire[ment] and complete tranquillity. In the c[ourse] of the story, the history of the soul [is] vealed, and the reader is admitted int[o] secret places and the sanctuary of a [true] man's heart. The Upton Letters, Fr[om] College Window and The Gate of Deat[h] the same author, are fine examples o[f] highest art in essay writing.

Uncle William, an unpretentious [little] book by Mrs. Gerald Stanley Lee, is [full] of sea breezes and bright sunshine [and] clean mirth. The old sailor is a qu[aint] homespun philosopher, and his ch[at] wisdom and wholesome fun will [drive] away melancholy and incite to unse[lfish] living. We are too prone to be mor[bid], and Uncle William will prove a foe a[nd] tonic when the blues are getting the u[pper] hand.

I am not sure that we can ever pay [the] debt we owe to such men as Dr. Wil[fred] Grenfell, for showing us that Christia[nity] at its best carries a gospel of healing [and] help to the downtrodden and the forlorn [and] the neglected. Anyone who has heard [Dr.] Grenfell's simple, straightforward stor[y] the Labrador sea and the Labrador c[oast] will find the literature of Labrador, [and] particularly the stories of Norman Dunc[an] enthralling.

All stories of heroic lives are adva[nce] guards in the battle for better things on [the] old earth, and this is why Ralph Conn[or's] books from Black Rock to The Doctor ca[rry] messages of hope, courage and cheer [on] every page.

What we demand in the books that shall help u[s] vitality. A book that has not something in it of v[ital] outdoor reality will fail to hold the loving attention [or] to enter into the life-blood of its readers. One mistak[e] made too often is to ask at the library or in the boo[k] store for the newest books. New books are always [on] trial.

They may or they may not satisfy the cravings [of] the intellect and the wants of the heart. Old boo[ks], like old friends, may be trusted, since they have prov[ed] themselves true and tried. If a girl reader shou[ld] ask for a list of perfectly satisfying books, refer h[er] to Mrs. Margaret Oliphant, whose stories touched hig[h] water mark in girlish life and have lost none of th[eir] charm. If a boy asks a similar question, send him [to] Froissart.

But that was years and years ong before she had run away with handsome young McGinnis, the "hired man" of the farm.

And as Mrs. McGinnis in the attic room sat thinking, two men in a hospital many blocks distant met at the head of a stairway.

"Has she regained consciousness?" asked one.

"No; and when she does I doubt if it will do us much good—she'll not be sane, I fear."

"And was there nothing about her to tell who she is?"

"Nothing—at least, no name. Her clothing was of the finest cut and texture, and everywhere was the monogram, 'AWK'; but that's all."

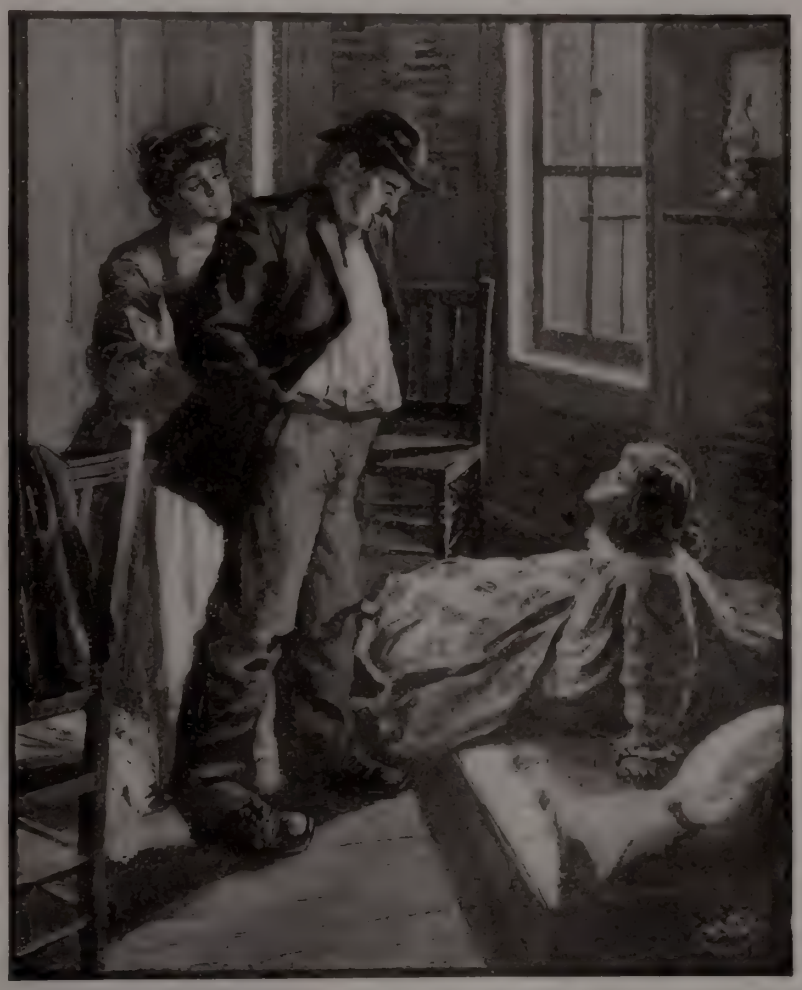
"And there was no purse? no shopping-bag?"

"No. She must have had one, for she had evidently just made a purchase—an insignificant something that gave no clue to her identity. She was a stranger to the clerk who sold it, as we found upon investigating the firm-name on the wrapping paper. The package was still in her hand, but the purse or bag must have dropped as she fell. She was evidently a person of some means and consequence, and I should think would be missed and ought to be easily traced. Still, if she were a stranger in town, it might complicate matters.

"Hm-m; too bad, too bad! I fear there'll be anxious hearts somewhere tonight. Bad case, too—isn't it?"

"Yes; three fractures, a bad cut on the head, and, I fear, internal injuries. It's a question whether she ever comes out of it at all, or not."

"Hm-m; too bad, too bad!" muttered the man again, as he turned away.



"'If you please, I—I'm company,' choked Margaret"

CHAPTER IV

THE gray morning light had scarcely penetrated the little attic tenement when Mrs. McGinnis shook her son's arm.

"Bobby, Bobby, wake up!" she urged in a hoarse whisper. "Run down ter old Nancy's an' see if ye can't borrer a little milk. That baby's got ter have somethin' fit ter eat this mornin'."

Bobby stirred sleepily. The next instant he had sprung to his feet at the sound of a heavy tread on the stairs outside.

"O dear! if it ain't dad!" he muttered, as the door banged open.

The woman did not speak, but she shrank back into the shadows. Over in the other corner a blue-eyed child with rumpled yellow curls awoke, and sat up with a frightened cry.

"Got anythin' ter eat?" snarled the man, slamming the door behind him, and shuffling into the room. "Hullo! Who are you?" he demanded, as his bleared gaze fell on the little girl in the corner.

Margaret was thoroughly frightened. Her dazed brain was just beginning to grasp her surroundings. Then with a rush memory came to her, and she made a desperate effort to be her father's own daughter.

"G— good morning," she faltered. "If you please, sir, I—I'm Margaret."

"Humph!" grunted the man, thickly. "Well, what ye doin' here?"

"Jack, don't!" begged the woman, starting forward. "You're half drunk—let the child alone."

"Shut up!" growled the man with an oath. "Hain't I got a right ter speak in my own house? Come, what ye doin' here?" he added, turning again to the girl.

"If you please, I—I'm company," choked Margaret. "But I'm not going to stay long—truly I'm not! I'm just sure mother'll come after me to-day."

"Well, she will if she knows what's good for her," retorted the man; then his eyes fell on the broad-brimmed hat with its blue ribbons. "Ho, ho! so these are the fine feathers my pretty bird wears!" he chuckled disagreeably, as he caught up the hat and held it on a level with his eyes. "Look a-here," he snapped, turning to his wife with a quick change of manner. "What's all this tomfoolery mean?"

"Why, Jack, it's only a poor little girl that got lost, an' her mother—"

"Here, mumsey, let me tell him," cut in Bobby, going close to his father's side, and whispering a few hurried words in the man's ear.

As McGinnis listened, his face relaxed. A slow cunning came to his eyes and an evil smile to his lips.

"Humph!" he grunted, after a momentary pause; "well, I reckon then there ain't nothin' ter prevent my makin' the most o' these!" And he gathered into his arms the hat, the black silk coat, the dainty little shoes and the pretty white dress.

"Jack, what do you mean? You wouldn't—pawn them!" screamed the woman, darting to his side and clutching at the garments in his hands.

"Wouldn't I?" sneered the man, pushing her off roughly. "Well, you jest wait an' see!"

Character Developed by Adversity

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR APRIL 28—By DR. and MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS*

An Egyptian Fresco of a Butler

At twenty-seven years of age Joseph finds himself an inmate of an Egyptian prison. His being there was not an incident in a career of crime. On the contrary, since being brought into Egypt by the Midianites, who had purchased him of his brothers, he had been an exemplary servant under one master, Potiphar, who was chief of the Egyptian national police. Joseph had been bought by Potiphar of the Midianites, probably for the sum of twenty-four dollars. We know that Joseph's life was fully identified with Potiphar's home, for after five years of service, he received promotion by being made a kind of general steward over his master's entire estate. In that capacity he had served about five years, when he was suddenly degraded and cast into prison. A false charge had been trumped up against him by his master's wife. It was not of being dishonest, or negligent of his duties, but of being too familiar with her. As a matter of fact, it was she who had made love to Joseph, and he had rebuffed her. "There is no fury," says the poet, "like a woman scorned;" and it was true in this case, for she revenged herself on Joseph by concocting a plot for his ruin. She told Potiphar, her husband, that during his absence Joseph had approached her with wicked designs, and that she had struggled with him and taken his cloak, which she showed. Potiphar evidently did not believe her story. If he had, he would have killed Joseph. He had, doubtless, reasons for suspicion of her, so he contented himself with committing Joseph to jail.

The Sympathetic Jailer

The situation seems to have been well understood, but was hushed up for the sake of appearances. Joseph was kept in prison, but as a warden rather than a prisoner. Doubtless, Mrs. Potiphar's character was known, and little dependence placed on her evidence. Joseph remained in the prison looking after the prisoners. One day two servants from the royal household were brought in, the king's chief baker and chief butler. They were placed under Joseph's charge, and a few days later were found by him to be very despondent. They had each had a dream which they believed to be of great import, but no one had been able to interpret it. This Joseph proceeded to do, because he knew the Lord would reveal it to him. First he heard the butler's dream, and he was able to say to him that at the end of three days he would be released from prison and be restored to his position in the king's household. The baker was so encouraged that he then told his dream to Joseph, but alas for him, Joseph interpreted his dream to mean that in three days he should be hanged on a tree, and the birds would eat of his flesh.

When the fateful third day came around, the king sent to the prison and released the butler, but the baker met the sad fate Joseph had described. The butler had promised that he would be a friend at court for Joseph, but he forgot his promise, and Joseph still remained in the prison under false charges, keeping bravely on in all right doing.

Fidelity in Adversity

Joseph was (1) slandered, (2) imprisoned, (3) forgotten, but he was (4) faithful, (5) hopeful, (6) helpful. These were to him the six steps to the throne.

Joseph Slandered. In an idolatrous country and a corrupt household, what courage it took for Joseph to hold fast to his father's God and keep himself pure! Let young men and boys away from home be as true. None of us should be surprised when our good is evil spoken of. Shakespeare has said: "Though thou be as pure as snow, and as chaste as ice, thou shalt not escape calumny." Let us be more concerned about our character than our reputation, for character is what God and the angels know about us, while reputation is only what men are saying about us.

We do not read that Joseph made any effort to contradict the slander which caused his imprisonment. To have done so would probably have broken up Potiphar's household. It was wiser for Joseph to wait for time to prove him innocent. It is a homely illustration, but true, that the way to get mud off a garment is not to rub it off while it is wet, but to let it dry, and then it is easily brushed off. This is quite the way to deal with slanders, and all the while the drying process is going on to live nobly and purely.

Illustrious Prisoners

Joseph Imprisoned. We are reminded of what a noble company are the prisoners of the Lord, of whom Joseph was the first. Into this goodly fellowship of prisoners punished, not for evil-doing, but for doing good, came in due time Jeremiah, Daniel, John the Baptist, Christ, James, John, Peter and Paul, all "blessed," not in heaven only, but also on earth, because persecuted for righteousness' sake. Chains could not frighten them from duty, but how many of us are turned aside, even by a sneer! The lions' den to Daniel, like the pit to Joseph, was only a short tunnel in the path to power. But to James and Paul and Christ, who came from prison to die, it was also in reality the vestibule to a coronation.

In slavery and imprisonment God was only schooling Joseph for his high position. He learned as the slave steward of Potiphar how to be the kingly steward of Egypt. That he might be a just and reforming ruler, he saw the realities of prison life. Thus Daniel was prepared by captivity to be the prime minister of Babylon, and David, even by his dark days at the court of Saul, to become the king of Israel.

"God hath shewed Pharaoh what He is about to do"

Joseph Forgotten. It must have been a real grief to Joseph that the king's butler so speedily forgot the favor Joseph had done him in prison in interpreting the dream which promised freedom. Next to slander there is nothing harder to bear than ingratitude. We often hear Shakespeare's words quoted: "How sharper than a serpent's tooth to have a thankless child!" God has many such children. "Forget not all his benefits," is a watchword that should be ever present with us. But after a while the butler did remember Joseph, and was the means of his being released from prison.

There is an incident that reminds us that we may ourselves forget, as well as be forgotten. A long time ago a boy, living in the most poverty-stricken section of a great city, found his way into a warm Sunday School, and after some weeks became a Christian. One day, long after, one of those sceptical grown-up peo whose hearts are dried up, tried to shake the chi faith in his new-found religion, and began asking puzzling questions. "If God really loves you, doesn't he take better care of you? Why doesn't tell somebody to send you a pair of shoes, or else enough so that you can keep warm this winter?" little lad thought a moment, and then said, as he d himself up straight to look at his questioner: "I d say he does tell somebody, and somebody forgets."

The Lighthouse Motto

Joseph Faithful. It was Joseph's integrity that caus him to be cast into prison. We can but admire Josep heavenly trust and earthly pluck, which together ma his influence positive. The world wants more of trust God, and also more of backbone in man. There i motto on a lighthouse on the coast of Cornwall, in E land: "To give light to save life." And so where Joseph was, he made his presence life and light to around him. Afterward he was light and life to Egypt and the countries round about. Joseph's faithf ness made the prison the vestibule to a palace. Wi such a spirit as he possessed, the cloudy pillar of gr may lead us as safely as the brighter signal of fire.

There is a pretty custom in Japan. On the fifth May there floats from every house in which a little b has been born during the year a fish-shaped flag. every case it is the representation of the carp, which h the peculiar faculty of ascending a waterfall as well leaping down it, and so represents bo strength and courage. The Japanese ha chosen this emblem for their boys th they may express the wish that they m be as strong and brave as the carp in ov coming the difficulties of life.

Joseph Hopeful. Martin Luther wrote Joseph: "He continued in his prayer God for help thirteen entire years, yet t more he prayed, the worse his conditi seemed to become. If Joseph had obtain an immediate response to his prayer, Jac his father would have been saved mu anxiety, but Joseph himself would ha remained a simple shepherd. By the lon continued delay of the fulfilment of it came to pass that God made him rule over Egypt. 'Whatsoever ye ask the Fathe in my name, he will give it you.'" Life i like riding on a railroad: as we sit in th car, and look out, we see no track, bu only the country, and the cars seem to b running without guidance. But we kee our seats, knowing that if we continue, w shall reach our destination. It may, how ever, help us in this good hope and ex pectation to take a look backward out o the rear car, and see the two rails of th track over which we have safely spe along. God's goodness and God's mercy are the two tracks on which we pas through life.

There are three lessons I would write,
Three words, as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light,
Upon the hearts of men.

Have Hope. Though clouds environ round,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put off the shadow from thy brow:
No night but hath its morn.

Have Faith. Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth—
Know this: God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

—JOHANN VON SCHILLER.

Joseph Helpful. How wonderful the opportunity of Joseph to be helpful in the prison, for the keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison, and whatsoever they did there, he was the doer of it. The way in which Joseph took hold of prison life, determined to make the best of it, instead of bemoaning his fate and observing those who had placed him there, was the secret of his helpfulness to others. Idle hands hanging down and a long face do not belong to one who can help others. No man's character has been fully tested until he has been in adversity. It is the way he acts under trial that shows the kind of man he is. If he is weak and cowardly, he lies down and bemoans himself. If he is a true man, he is up and doing, trying to overcome his difficulties and renew the fight.

THE TUSKEGEE CONFERENCE OF 1907

HE dominant note in the proceedings of the Sixteenth Annual Negro erence, which has just d its sessions at Tuske- Ala., was the demand for a complete and efficient co- ation among the churches, schools, and all other or- zed agencies of instruc- for the moral, educational religious upbuilding of the es of the Negro people.

he first day's session of the ference was given up to reports of the farmers. e than one hundred repre- atives of colored schools educational enterprises of ous sorts, from all parts of South, from points as far ant as Texas and Virginia, came to the Conference ake part in the meeting of the "Workers," which the day following the meeting of the farmers.

General View of Tuskegee Institute Buildings

eports indicated that gambling and loafing were on increase in many parts of the country. Perhaps the akest and most emphatic statement of conditions was de by President William E. Holmes, of Central City llege, Macon, Ga. Some one asked Mr. Holmes if he ught there were any more vagrants and criminals long the negroes than would be found among any er race of people under the same condition.

"We cannot afford to do what other races do," said . Holmes. "We haven't a single, solitary man or man that we can afford to waste. It may be that white people, who are so far ahead of us, can afford support a class of people who do not work; but we e too poor to do that sort of thing. Besides, there are good many of us who have the impression that the rld owes us a living and a holiday. I am convinced at at the present time we furnish a larger number of afers than any other race of people on the continent."

In the Farmers' Conference of the previous day, A. Abrams, a farmer from Miller's Ferry, Wilcox unty, had told the Conference about the organization a Reform League among the members of five churches. They directed their efforts to get the white men in charge of the plantations to enforce the laws against gambling and drunkenness in the neighborhood of the churches, and not to "protect" men who were arrested for these crimes.

What this "protection" means was brought out by another farmer, W. E. Robinson, from Hamlin County, Ga. He explained that this protection involved in many cases actual slavery. When a man was arrested, the man who "protected" him would invariably be there to pay his fine. Then the prisoner was expected to work out the fine on his protector's farm.

"Why, it's just like the old slave block," said Mr. Robinson. "I know men who are sold for $150 who before the war would have sold for $1,000. The only difference is, now they sell themselves. A good many white farmers prefer this sort of labor because it is not free, and many of them, as they say, have not learned to work 'free niggers.'"

Robinson's remedy for this evil was public opinion. He thought men who would deliberately sell themselves, men who ought to be in prison, should be ostracized and no longer tolerated in the churches.

R. L. Smith, of Paris, Tex., reported this year that the Farmers' Improvement Association, which he started some eight or ten years ago, now has a membership of between 8,000 and 9,000, and owns 70,000 acres of land, with a tax valuation of $1,265,000.

The work of the Conference was pretty well summed up, at the close of proceedings in the two days' sessions, by the following declarations:

The members of this Conference express their sense of the gravity of the situation brought about in recent years by the existence of a class of idlers and vagrants, particularly in the cities of the South. In view of these conditions, the members of this Conference urge:

1. That our leaders, ministers and teachers take steps to impress upon the masses of the people the seriousness of the situation, and to organize public opinion in their various communities in a way to do away with these evils.

2. That every effort should be made to secure a wise, impartial, but rigid enforcement of the law against vagrancy, gambling and intemperance.

3. That as the class of vagrants seems to be largely recruited from young men and women who leave the country to go to the city, new efforts should be made to improve the condition of the people in the country districts, particularly in relation to their schools, and in their opportunities to buy land and settle permanently on the soil, so that the children of the Negro farmer will decide to remain at home, and take up the work of their fathers and mothers upon the farm.

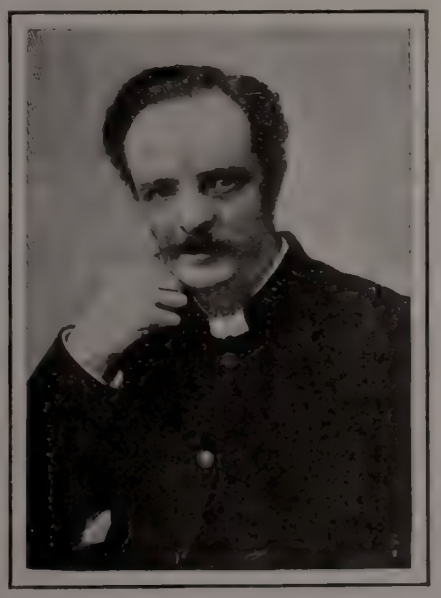
4. That methods be taken to improve the methods of dealing with prisoners, particularly those who are children, to the end that they may be reformed rather than punished, and since the customary confinement in prisons and convict camps, in close association with hardened criminals, encourages in them a disposition to continue in a life of crime after they have served their terms, and so confirms them in a life of crime.

In this connection, we rejoice to hear from the presidents and representatives of the leading institutions here represented that they have no records to show that their graduates have become criminals.

In conclusion, the members of this Conference desire to express their appreciation of the work undertaken by the Colored Women's Clubs of Alabama, looking to the establishment of a reformatory for colored children in this State, and to commend their example to the women of other Southern States. ROBERT E. PARK.

EMPEROR KWANG HSU'S "PINK BABIES"

NE of the most famous and useful of living missionary pioneers in China is just now on furlough in England. Mr. A. W. Cornaby belongs to the same category of accomplished itterateurs in the missionary field as Dr. Timothy Richard and Dr. Griffith John. These three wonderful xperts in the language and literature of the great Oriental Empire are achieving xtraordinary results in transorming the mind of the cultured ection of the native community hroughout the land. Mr. Cornaby is editing two papers in the ative language, and is taking a ost influential part in the proess of introducing Western nowledge amongst educated Chinamen. He has just been iving me some account of his xperiences and some of his iews on the outlook.



Rev. A. W. Cornaby, of Shanghai

Arthur William Cornaby reeived an education while a outh living in London, which ccounts for his remarkable veratility. He was first prizeman t Sydenham College, spent our years in the office of a olonial merchant, then, having ecured practical business skill, tudied chemistry in the School f Mines, graduating in science ith first-class honors. He was ppointed one of the professors f chemistry at Clifton College. visit of Moody and Sankey to ondon exercised converting power on the souls of young Cornaby and several of his companions. When the time ame that he was ready to enter the ministry, he also ntimated his wish to go to the foreign field under the uspices of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society.

Mr. Cornaby gave the following account of the social ystem in China:

"The government rests on a purely patriarchal foundation, with the Emperor as Patriarch or Priest-King, as in the case of Job or Melchizedek, the people being his little children, or 'pink babies,' as the Chinese call themselves to this day in relation to the Emperor as their head. The mandarins are regarded as the 'deputy parents of the people.' These latter dignitaries are supposed to be above the need of any salary. They are unpaid magistrates. The arrangement seems to have worked well in the ideal days of certain early rulers of China, but its working now is a proverb and a byword of contempt, and it is the great drawback to any real progress or real reform.

"I said that these mandarins were unsalaried," Mr. Cornaby remarked; "but, to be precise, a governor of a province (as large, say, as New York State) gets about $5,000 a year, while a county magistrate gets not more than $100 a year. This being utterly inadequate, the rest is made up from taxes, public moneys, presents from parties at law, and 'squeeze' generally. Huge sums of money are thus in many cases amassed.

"A change must come over the whole mandarin system," continued Mr. Cornaby, "before China can really prosper. It will not matter how far the nation may adopt Western methods; there will be no progress worth regarding unless such a radical change is effected. Two things are essential before the world can look on a regenerated China. One is a new system, the other is moral force to work it. This is only another way of saying that the case of China is hopeless without a conquest of the Empire by Christian principles. But let me say right here that the signs of the times are marvelously encouraging in the Far East. Christianity is steadily honeycombing the whole fabric of Chinese civilization and heathenism. The missionaries are regarded to-day with quite another spirit than that displayed before the Boxer outbreak. A few years ago it was very difficult for a missionary to gain any contact with a viceroy, but for the last three years I have had the privilege of saying 3,000 words to the various 'Princes of the Provinces'—viceroys, governors, treasurers, judges—over fifty of them, seeing and talking with some of them week by week, on subjects connected with Christian civilization, international harmony and the supreme lordship of Jesus Christ."

Mr. Cornaby has had twenty-one years of China Mission work, eighteen in the great central cities of Hankow and Hanyang, and then three years in Shanghai specially for Christian literary work. His Chinese editorial work began eight years ago when he had no Chinese writer of adequate capacity available, and no contributors to add to his own material provided in eleven days. The first book he translated into Chinese was the famous work, entitled The Tongue of Fire, by the late Rev. William Arthur.

"Three thousand missionaries," he added, "are now engaged in that vast Empire in ordinary mission work, including the medical and educational departments, but just three or four of us are devoted to a literary mission to the literati and officials—the brain of China and the molders of public opinion. Broad national movements have resulted. One vital matter in hand is the abolition of girl-slavery throughout China, a measure for which the court has been memorialized by H. E. Chou Fu, Viceroy of Nanking. Finally, it is certain that Western civilization is making way. The fact of Western consuls being found in all the treaty ports—upright men whom it is impossible to bribe—has been a wonderful object-lesson, as also has the system of maritime customs inaugurated by Sir Robert Hart. Such influences, together with the work of 3,000 missionaries, Christian men and women, all combine to produce the beginnings of a transformation of a Dead Sea into a Sea of Galilee."

ROMANTIC DEVONSHIRE
The Land Made Famous by Philpotts' Novels

Philpotts has made us familiar with romantic Devonshire, in his fascinating novels, "The River," "Children of the Mist," etc. The characters are very human; the people there drink coffee with the same results as elsewhere. A writer at Rock House, Orchard Hill, Bideford, North Devon, states:

"For 30 years I drank coffee for breakfast and dinner, but some years ago I found that it was producing indigestion and heart burn, and was making me nervous at night. These symptoms were followed by brain fag and a sleepless mental condition.

"When I realized this, I made up my mind to quit drinking coffee, and having read of Postum I commenced to try it. I had it carefully made, according to directions, and found to my agreeable surprise at the end of a week that I no longer suffered from either indigestion, heartburn or brain fag, and that I could drink it at night and get restful and refreshing sleep.

"Since that time we have entirely discontinued the use of the old kind of coffee, growing fonder and fonder of Postum as time goes on. My digestive organs certainly do their work much better now than before, a result due to Postum Food Coffee. I am satisfied.

"As a table beverage we find (for all the members of my family use it) that when properly made it is most refreshing and agreeable, of delicious flavor and aroma. Vigilance is, however, necessary to secure this, for unless the servants are watched they are likely to neglect the thorough boiling which it must have in order to extract the goodness from the cereal." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

TRAINING AS SOUL-WINNERS

FOUNDERS' Day at the Huguenot College, in Wellington, South Africa, is celebrated with much the same ceremonies as are observed by its American prototype, Mt. Holyoke, of the old Bay State. But the hurrying procession of college girls who cross the wide lawns in all the dignity of gowns and "mortar-boards," pass beneath the wide-spreading shade of the gigantic "blue-gum," or eucalyptus trees, instead of the sturdy oaks and graceful elms which belong to our college campus.

"Founders' Day" at Huguenot College, Wellington, South Africa

Most people who become familiar with the life work of Mary Lyon are moved to some high endeavor. In 1874, Dr. Andrew Murray read the history of that noble character, and as a direct result, the next mail carried his letter of appeal for Christian teachers to Mt. Holyoke. The two who immediately responded are still in active service.

The school, whose foundations were faith and prayer, has been wonderfully blessed. Only forty-six miles from Cape Town, it is the only woman's college in Africa, and the young women of that territory—daughters of English and Dutch settlers in humble circumstances—have eagerly seized the opportunity thus offered to become thoroughly equipped for the work God gives them to do in bringing light to the "Dark Continent."

The years between have been wonderful years of development and individual consecration to the broad fields of missionary endeavor. Since the foundation of the college, literally a "great host" have gone out from its halls prepared to do battle with evil in every quarter of the globe. No less than sixty women missionaries in organized work have looked back upon the Huguenot College as their Alma Mater, and many more are letting their light shine in the dark corners to which they have been led. One missionary is in Ceylon, another in Persia, a third doing valiant service in the Salvation Army. Dr. Murray's own daughter is among the pioneers of Christianity in dark Bechuanaland, and a number of the college alumnæ are telling the story of salvation to the Kaffirs in the mines of Kimberly and Johannesburg. There are as many stories as there have been students, few of whom have failed to dedicate their powers, developed by the Christian educational methods of the Huguenot College, to the conscientious fulfilment of God's plans for them.

The expenses of this most laudable enterprise have been borne chiefly by the voluntary contributions and bequests of generous friends. Its directors are struggling toward the acquisition of an endowment which may enlarge its scope of usefulness and relieve them of the financial "thought for the morrow," which so greatly hampers progress.

WORDS OF COMMENDATION

NEW YORK RED CROSS HOSPITAL AND TRAINING SCHOOL, NEW YORK.

Editor The Christian Herald:

There are many charitable or benevolent organizations which ask the public for subscriptions to aid the needy, but the requirement of personnel for collecting, distributing, clerical and other work connected with these, brings to the sufferer only a reduced portion of what the giver expected would reach him. However, it is not my desire to comment upon these methods, though it is my belief that one blessed with earthly wealth should not only hand money, but be personally active in the distribution of it. I therefore cannot refrain from expressing my admiration for the excellent manner in which your collections and distribution of funds are made. In the instance in which I had the pleasure of working with you, and under your personal supervision, I could observe your very able manner and method. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had charge of the collections, and delivered them in full, and no salary of any kind diminished the funds subscribed; thus the entire amounts, or their equivalent, were used in full to give succor to the hungry or starving.

Work such as yours indeed deserves admiration and for that reason I can say it gives me pleasure to send you herewith my personal subscription for $25 for the sufferers in China.

Praying that God may grant you further success in your continuous noble work, I am, etc.,

A. MONÆ LESSER,
Surgeon-in-Chief.

"The Christian Herald" in Burma

The Calendar was received in good condition, and I thank you very much for it. It helps to make my walls bright and pretty now, but will be especially enjoyed during the six months' rains, when all photographs or unframed pictures that one does not care to have spoiled must be put carefully away in a tin-lined box.

After we missionaries have enjoyed reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD it is put in our library, where the teachers and many of the older students enjoy it. We have a teaching staff of seventeen Karens, one of whom was educated in America. One of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sermons by Mr. Sheldon has been translated into Karen and was in the last number of our Karen paper. Many subjects for morning chapel talks have been found in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am glad that I am a life subscriber, for if for any reason the weekly visits of this paper should cease, I would not be the only one who would miss them. Bassein, Burma. CLARA BELDEN TINGLEY.

"But her mother, her friends—if they should find her!"

"Well, as near as I can make out her mother won't be showin' up here yet a while, an' "—

A scream from Margaret interrupted his words at this point.

"You brute!" cried the woman, hurrying across the room and taking the child in her arms. "How could you tell her like that?"

"That's right! Pet her an' coddle her—she's used to it, I'll be bound," jeered the man. "But I reckon she'll find out now quick enough that life ain't all sugar-plums. As for her fine friends—let 'em come. I'll show 'em what livin' is for the most of us. An' as fur this finery here—I reckon a hard luck story about a extra mouth ter feed 'll fix that all right, eh?" he finished with a grin. McGinnis was in better spirits than he had been in five minutes before. He could afford to joke a little. Did he not know that another hour would find him once more at Little Mike's, and with the pleasant jingle of coins in his pocket?

"You are goin' ter keep her, then?" gasped the woman.

"Sure! Why not? She ain't good fur much now—but she's growin'; an' even now I reckon she could sew on buttons an' earn a penny or two fur a poor old man like me. I hear Sullivan wants a couple more kids. I'll speak to him."

"Jack!" shuddered the woman, tightening her clasp on the sobbing little girl in her arms. "You wouldn't put her there! It would kill her! She ain't used ter such work."

"Well, she will be 'fore I get through with her," drawled the man. Then he whined mockingly: "What would ye have a poor hard-working man do, that's jest taken in a extra mouth ter feed?" The next moment, with an oath and a jeering laugh, he was gone.

It was not an easy half hour that Bobby and his mother spent then. There was no quieting the little Margaret until some explanation of the man's words had been given; and at last Mrs. McGinnis was forced to tell her that they feared her mother had fallen ill and would not be able to come for her for some days. It was scarcely better after that, for the child sobbed and cried, and refused to be comforted. Even Bobby's frequent reference to the soldier father served but to make the sobs more prolonged. At last, however, tired nature conquered, and the child forgot her sorrow in sleep.

It was then that Mrs. McGinnis laid her guest gently down on the mattress, and crossed the room to an old bureau. From the lower drawer she took out a faded, carefully mended little dress, valueless save to the mother eyes that had seen it worn by the dear little daughter long since laid away.

"She's just Mary Ellen's size," murmured the woman, with a sob in her voice, "an' I'm goin' ter let her have it, though I thought once I wouldn't never let any one wear it again."

Joseph's Boyhood Trials

By Mrs. M. Baxter

FROM his earliest years Joseph learned to bear the cross; he was chosen "in the furnace of affliction" (Isa. 48: 10), a chosen vessel. His first test had been in the family; there he had begun to learn how to "endure grief, suffering wrongfully" (I. Peter 2: 19); that great lesson of Christlikeness, in which our Lord has left us "an example that we should follow his steps" (I. Peter 2: 21). In this Joseph was in a measure a forerunner of Christ. Being in his own life the best of Jacob's sons, he was treated as though he were the worst, and he had to learn in those early days to take everything from the hand of God, and like Abraham to "walk by faith, not by sight" (II. Cor. 5: 7). His dreams were ridiculed and despised; his faithfulness to his brothers, which cost him so much, when he brought to his father their evil report, was naturally resented.

But the cause of the ill-will which Joseph's brothers bore him did not lie wholly at his door; his father Jacob was in fault, for we read, "Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age; and he made him a coat of many colors." How common, but how dangerous, is the sin of partiality in parents! We shall learn to know no man, not even our own children, after the flesh, if Jesus has full possession of us; and it will be quite out of the question to make marked and visible distinctions, as Jacob did by the coat which he gave to Joseph. Many parents are responsible for a terrible bitterness of spirit in their children because they have been guilty of indulging in some trifling partiality towards one more than another.

Young hearts, in which self is dominant, are intensely sensitive to anything like injustice. "And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than all his brethren, they hated him, and could not speak peaceably unto him." Joseph had an inner life, unknown to his family, which they had no power to understand or to enter into; probably his father understood him better than the others did. "Joseph dreamed a dream." In those days dreams were regarded as communications from God. "He told it to his brethren, and they hated him yet the more." All their natural pride of heart rebelled against this young upstart, who not only went hither and thither clad in the distinctive garment which marked him as their father's favorite, but also set himself up to hold a position of superiority which they did not so much as aspire to.

Now his father puts him to a severe test. His brethren are gone to a distance to find pasture for their flocks. Jacob sends Joseph to seek them, that he may bring tidings of them and of the flocks to his father. A more unpleasant mission, under the circumstances, could hardly have been offered him; but Joseph, without hesitation, says, "Here am I;" and when an opportunity presented itself for his return, without executing his commission, because his brethren were not in Shechem where his father sent him, Joseph proves himself to be no shuffler. He takes pains to find his brethren, and he overtook them in Dothan. But he was hardly prepared for the reception which he met with at their hands. Thoughts of murder were in their hearts, and their first terrible design when they saw him was to slay their brother!

This man of God was passing his standard in God's school. To the flesh it would look to him as though God were on the side of the wicked, and as though wrong prospered more than right. There may have been awful moments of conflict, when his soul was in anguish, and he besought his brethren, and they "would not hear."

READ THIS LETTER FROM MISSOURI:

"Five years ago I took out two policies of $10,000 each in your company. At the time I made a memorandum on my list of life insurance: 'Due 1916, with possibly an additional two thousand as a dividend.'

"When notified a few days ago that a dividend on my two policies, of $1,208.60, was due, and that it was mine for the asking, I was surprised and greatly pleased to discover that the prospects were so good for the two thousand dollar dividend being paid.

"I now regret that at the time I took out this insurance in your company, I had not made the amount double."

This Policyholder thought that possibly $2,000 would be paid as a dividend in 1916, but in 1906—when his policies had been in force only five years—he receives $1,208.60, and, mark you, this is only one dividend. If the policyholder lives until the policy matures he will have received two other dividends, and if he should die at any time the policy will be paid in full.

More Anecdotes by Gipsy Smith

PROBABLY no preacher at present on the pulpit platform has such a fund of reminiscences and little stories of real life as Gipsy Smith, who is making such an impression on the "unchurched" and the unconverted in the churches in this country. Some of his latest anecdotes are published below, each one with a telling point, and told in a way that the reader can not easily forget.

Empty Hands

"If you want Christ, empty your heart and hands and you will get him—he is here. He wants to come to you, and he will come when you submit.

"On my third trip to your country I was conducting a mission in one of your New England cities, and a lady came down one of the aisles bringing her little boy of ten to shake hands with me. The little fellow held out his left hand and held his right hand behind his back. I told him I would not shake hands with a left hand, but he was very obstinate for a while, but at length I persuaded him to bring his right hand from behind him, and then I discovered that he had five marbles in his hand and he was afraid to let go of them. The child had his marbles; you have your idols. With some of you it is a pack of cards, with some the theatre, with some it is drink, with some it is a forbidden thing. You know what it is. You know. Lay hold! Lay hold! Lay hold of eternal life, and let it be now. Let it be this moment.

The Conversion of the Rich

"On one of my trips to your great city I spent, as some of you will remember, nearly six months in New York. Hundreds of people were converted. One morning I sat at the breakfast table of a very wealthy family. The wife, a splendid Christian woman, who bears an honored name and does great work in this country for God, said, 'Brother Smith, I wish we could do something for the rich women of our city. Some have been to your meetings, but the majority are afraid to go. I have an idea. If you give a few meetings especially for them privately, in some drawingroom, I think if they were invited by letter, they would come.' And we arranged half a dozen meetings in one of the mansions in New York City. I went to the first meeting with a good deal of fear and trembling, but my fear soon vanished when I saw waiting for me 175 women, mothers, wives, sisters and daughters of the wealthiest men in America. I know no difference between millionaires and paupers when I am preaching my Master's message.

"I took for my text, 'Repent ye,' and at the close of the service a bright young mother came to me and asked to speak with me. We withdrew into one of the bay windows. Her tears fell like rain, and she said: 'If what you have been preaching is the Gospel, if that is religion, then I am a heathen. It is true I am a church member, but I have no knowledge of righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. I have no Holy Ghost within. I live as these women live. I am one of the "swim" and we are living for the gratification we can get out of our money—the theatre, the race course, the ballroom, the swell dinner, the euchre party. What have you to say?' I said, 'God has spoken to you; obey him,' and we parted.

In a Gipsy Tent

"She attended every meeting, and when the last one came, after the benediction a lady got up and said: 'Mr. Smith, our men folk want to meet you. Will you give us an afternoon? They have heard us talk about you and have expressed a desire to meet you.' I replied, 'You can have my rest day—Saturday,' and I arranged to have a meeting with the men and women. They came as if to some brilliant social function, decked out in their jewelry, to see this gipsy boy, and I took them where they never expected to be taken—to a gipsy tent—and I showed them a father and five little motherless children, without hope, without God or a Bible, with nobody to love or care for them. Only an old gipsy tent, a gipsy father and five little children. And then I tried to show them how Jesus came down into that smoky tent and cast it into loveliness until it shone like an old cathedral, and how out from that tent has gone all round the globe a stream of blessing that has enriched the world and made it a little more like what it ought to be.

"For all these children are trying to preach the gospel, and I saw there men move like a field of corn, and just as I was about to close the gentle lady of the house rose and said, 'May I speak?' I said: 'You are in your own house, speak,' and she said: 'You know me. I am no stranger. I was born with you and grew up with you. I became a mother with you. I have been with you to the theatre and the race course, but you will never see me there any more, for Jesus has come to me and he satisfies me. You may keep my company, but if you don't I know it will be hard to bear. My choice is made, Christ for me, Christ for me.'"

OPEN DOORS*

ONCE, in speaking of missions, we were compelled to speak sadly of doors firmly closed against the Gospel. In Japan, in many provinces of China, in large districts of Africa, in Madagascar and the islands of the South Seas, the prohibition to the entrance of the missionary was peremptory. But now all is changed. With the possible exception of Thibet, which shows signs of yielding, and some other minor countries, the missionary may go everywhere preaching the Gospel. The hostility of priests and people in some places, such as in Peru, is still intense, but the legislative enactments which once barred the way to many a promising field have been removed. It was always distasteful to the missionary to be a breaker of the law—even of an unjust law—though his yearning for souls sometimes led to his being in that attitude; but now most of the legislative doors are open.

That God has opened the doors there is no doubt. It is one of the signs he has given of his approval of missionary effort. He was not indifferent to the fact that his messengers, eager to carry the good news of the Gospel to men sitting in darkness, were held back by the kings of those countries. As Solomon said: "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord; he turneth it whithersoever he will." The Church was praying to him fifty years ago to open doors in many lands and he has answered. In ways wonderful to us the doors have been opened. Is it right that he should wait for us to enter?

This question does not touch the missionary; he is ready to go and if he falls in the conflict ten are ready to take his place. This question is for the Church. The Societies will send men whenever they have the money to pay the bare cost of their living. All that they are waiting for is the money, and missionaries say that if men were sent they could be set to work speedily. Besides this, the scheme THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is advocating, of employing native helpers to the missionaries, is fraught with promise. They will not have to wait to learn the languages nor the customs of the people. No one need wait who desires to help. A small sum will set a man to work speedily.

TEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

A Satisfying Encyclopedia*

The two main essentials of a good encyclopedia are—first, accuracy; second, up-to-dateness. All other qualifications are subordinate to these two essentials and follow of necessity. They are there if the first two have been provided for in the making.

Many of the best encyclopedias that have seen the light of day in this world of facts, or that seems to pass well the tests mentioned above, is that just published by the house of Thomas Nelson & Sons, of Edinburgh and New York. The most cursory examination at the reviewing desk shows that the set of twelve volumes covers not only the unchangeable facts of history, literature, and other departments of knowledge that should be found in all first-class books of reference, but also the history of the day.

It is a surprise and a pleasure to find such recent important events as the earthquake at San Francisco, and the Russo-Japanese War, are as fully discussed as the destruction of Pompeii by Vesuvius, and the battles and campaigns of Alexander the Great.

The world moves very rapidly nowadays, especially in scientific research. The books of 1897 are not, in many cases, suitable for those of 1907, and the preacher, political speaker, professor, student, who bases his conclusions on encyclopedic knowledge that is out of date, is likely to find that authorities in the same field have outclassed by going to the very latest sources of information. To meet the demands of students and of the every-day man who wants the latest and best light on the subjects in which they may be interested for the time being, the editors have called to their aid over six hundred contributors, men and women who have made lasting reputations in their special fields of knowledge. The result must be gratifying to the compilers as it certainly is to the reader. The latter can turn down the page on most subjects presented with the comfortable feeling that they have received the last word, for the present at least, on the subject under consideration.

Editorially, the publishers seem to have exercised the art of the engraver, the printer and the publisher, to make clear the various articles by illustration. The maps are excellent, showing not only all the ancient geographic divisions, but all those of the present day. The wars and treaties of a decade have called for almost an entire revision of the map of Asia, the West Indies, the Pacific Islands, China, Japan and Russia. All of the new colonies appear under their proper names and nations, together with an account of their history and prospective development. The articles on various countries are illustrated by pictures of the vegetation, the fauna, geographic features, landscape views, views of cities and historic houses, castles and monuments, all of which make parts of the twelve volumes as interesting as a book of travel, without the exaggeration that almost invariably creeps in to elaborate the works of the ordinary world-traveler with pen and pencil. The pictures and plates printed in colors show the high-water development of this twentieth century art and make the most practical illustration to the articles on this and kindred subjects.

The language in which the articles are written is straight, concise, twentieth century English, with scientific terms used only where they are necessary for the proper definition of scientific subjects, and these words are properly explained for the ordinary reader.

It seems that the twelve volumes contain all and more than has been printed in the encyclopedias of a generation past,

*Nelson's Encyclopædia, Everybody's Book of Reference. Editors-in-chief, Frank Moore Colby, A.M., of New York, and George Sandeman, M.A., of Edinburgh, Scotland. The set comprises twelve volumes of convenient size, each volume averaging 750 pages. It is profusely illustrated with engravings, half-tones in full plates in colors, maps, etc. The cloth-covered edition costs $12. Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons, New York City.

Books Received

A New Appraisal of Christian Science, by Joseph D. Burrell. This new appraisal is an exceedingly interesting book to all those who have given thought to the peculiar teachings of Mrs. Eddy. 76 pages; cloth boards. Price 50 cents. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York and London.

The Kinsman, by Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick, is a capital story of the adventures of a poor young London clerk and a rich, distant relative, who by a singular freak of fortune, or misfortune, get their identities strangely mixed, involving them in a seemingly inextricable tangle, which, however, the author works out in a very clever and amusing way. Pp. 384. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Co., New York and London, publishers.

In Eastern Wonderlands is a tale of three well-bred American children, who travel with their father through the storied scenes of old Japan, wonderful India and mysterious Egypt. It is delightfully told, with ease and the accustomed style of one who has traveled far and oft, and may well hold the pleased interest of "children of a larger growth." Miss Charlotte Chaffee Gibson is to be congratulated upon her happy combination of fact and fancy, of guide-book and colloquial history. Pp. 194. Illustrated. Price $1.50. Little, Brown & Co., Boston, Mass.

Reminiscences of a Missionary Bishop, by the Right Reverend D. S. Tuttle, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Missouri, is a book full of interest to the student of religious progress in the West. Bishop Tuttle is a member of the Episcopalian household of faith, but members of any denomination may be sure of finding much information in his early experiences in the West. For some years his home was in Salt Lake City, and the chapters covering his association with the Mormons are of absorbing import. Pp. 498. Price $2. The Religion of a Seminarian, by George Hodges, D.D., consists of a paper read before the Berkeley Divinity School recently. Price 10 cents. Both published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House.

Gipsy Smith's Mission Hymnal has been called "the most complete hymn-book of the age." It consists of 256 pages, containing over 400 songs, many appearing for the first time in print. Evan Roberts used a number of them in his famous Welsh revival of last year. Among the new songs may be mentioned "Never Give Up;" words by Fanny J. Crosby, music by I. Allan Sankey, a son of the famous song evangelist. This song has been the keynote of many of Gipsy Smith's meetings, and has been called for night after night. It has proved an inspiration to hundreds of people. Of the large number of other new songs may be mentioned "Forward," "Get Right with God" and "The Story Must be Told." Once heard, these songs will never be forgotten. Biglow & Main Co., New York and Chicago. Price, boards, 25 cents per copy; $25 per hundred, not prepaid. Cloth 30 cents per copy, $30 per hundred, not paid. Single copies mailed 5 cents extra.

Without, the spot and the stain, the curse and the sins;
Within, the cleansing divine, a new life begins.

Gathered Nickels for China

MR. JAMES TANIS of Paterson, N. J., is the publisher of the Sabbathschool Bode, a weekly, devoted chiefly to the publication of the International Lessons in the Holland language, and circulated in the Holland Christian Reformed Churches in the United States. Recently Mr. Tanis hit upon the novel idea of asking through his paper, each scholar and teacher to contribute, if possible, a nickel for the famine-stricken Chinese. He termed it a "nickel collection." The result has been very gratifying. Up to this writing, $1,038.86 has been received by him and forwarded to our care. It shows what a large amount can be raised by small efforts.

Dr. Grenfell's Conversion

"IF any one had called me a Christian then, I'd have punched him." This was the manner in which Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, the famous medical missionary to Labrador, described his spiritual attitude before he met D. L. Moody. Dr. Grenfell was recalling his old life in an address at the Founder's Day celebration at Northfield Seminary and Mount Hermon School, February 5, the seventieth anniversary of Mr. Moody's birthday.

"Sporting life was the kind of thing I liked then," continued Dr. Grenfell. "It did not occur to me that Christianity was a practical fact to a fellow like me, who was hoping for athletic success. Then I drifted into a Moody meeting one night. There was a fellow on the platform who was a good athlete, and could jump farther than I. I watched him, and he seemed wholly cheerful about his religion. Mr. Moody's simple, manly influence upset my life, isolated me from my friends, and I cast in my lot with uneducated people. But I have found out that these lives could be touched, and have seen fishermen cry when they were told about Christ."

A Deserving Rescue Work

A FEW years ago, when Miss C. L. Boardman learned by personal observation of the rescue work going on in one of the active missions of our lower East Side of New York, her earnest question was, "What can I do?" "Go to Chinatown," she was told. "Do you know that within five minutes' walk of Mott Street, there are young girls living in that sin whose wages are death? Will you not try to save them?"

The simple, conclusive answer clinched the argument. The Chinatown and Bowery Rescue Settlement for Erring Girls, then established, has been in existence since the first of July, 1904. The Settlement occupies two floors over a Chinese restaurant in the heart of Chinatown. The tactful perseverance and loving wisdom displayed by the consecrated young women who are resident workers are indeed remarkable. It was uphill work at first, but gradually the bright faces and gentle courtesy of the workers succeeded in winning the confidence of the girls who live their awful lives within a stone's throw of the Settlement. The one aim of the workers is to snatch the girls from their lives of sin and win them back to self-respect and hope, to place them in reputable employment, or—better still—to send them to their own homes. Into saloons and low dance-halls at midnight go the devoted workers, happy if but one discouraged, unhappy victim is won to accept their loving offer of restoration to home and peace.

The Society is sadly crippled for lack of room, but its resources, entirely composed of voluntary contributions, are already strained by the demands made upon them. Any correspondence received by Miss Price, Rescue Settlement, 10 Mott Street, New York City, will receive immediate attention.

Called Higher

Mr. George Sparhawk, of Albion, R. I., passed away on the fifth of February, in his eighty-seventh year. His life was full of childlike trust in the Father above, a life of service and devotion to his Master. He was an inspiration and a power for good in the community in which he lived

Mrs. Mary M., widow of Thomas J. Welby, died early in the present year at St. Michael's, Md., aged ninety six years. Mrs. Welby had survived both husband and only son, and was in full possession of her unusually brilliant faculties until the close of her life. Specimens of her handiwork as an artist are cherished in many parts of the country.

Mrs. Sophia Gunn Allen passed away at Stockton, Kan., on January 15, aged eighty-five years, after a long and useful life.

She is safe in her Father's home above,
In the place prepared by her Father's love;
To depart from the world of sin and strife,
And to be with Jesus - yes, this is life.

Mrs. Lodema Rolfe died at Mountain Home, Ark., on March 12, in her eighty-fourth year. "Grandma Rolfe," as she was known to her friends, has left the memory of a life which was a blessing to all who came within the sphere of its influence, and her removal is regarded as a public misfortune. She was a faithful exponent of the Methodist doctrines, aiming always to fulfil her duty as a Christian.

Theodore Benjamin Galusha, of Cortland, N. Y., died on August 16, 1906, in his eighty-second year. Mr. Galusha was a teacher for many years, achieving marked success in his chosen calling. His patriotic devotion to national affairs was a natural legacy from his revolutionary ancestors. He loved his Bible, his whole life showed his high ideals, and his obedience was in accord with the teaching of the Master.

Mrs. Caroline Scott, a highly esteemed resident of Frankford, Philadelphia, Pa., entered into rest on the last day of 1906, aged seventy four years. During her whole life, Mrs. Scott was ordained an evangel of charity and sympathy to the sick and the sorrowful. She was well known as an earnest worker in the S. P. C. A., and was frequently spoken of as a friend to all dumb animals. For many years she was a devoted reader and advocate of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

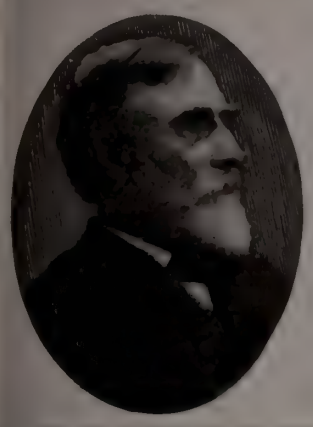
Ocean Grove's Leader Gone

ISHOP James Newbury FitzGerald, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, resident Bishop of St. Louis, and n the death of Dr. Stokes the well- e ed spiritual leader of the Ocean



The Late Bishop J. N. FitzGerald

Gve Camp Meeting Association, died in Hng Kong of pleurisy on April 4. Integence of his death was received in Nv York by cable the same day. The ns was a great surprise and a severe sk to Methodists throughout the cntry, who regard his death as a distinct to the church.

Bishop FitzGerald left St. Louis last Clober with his wife, two daughters and o of his sons, to spend the winter in the E t as visiting Bishop in India and China. Although seventy years old, he was then in the best of health. On March 1, his daughter Cornelia died in Penang, India. The body of the Bishop, accompanied by his family, will be brought home on the Pacific Mail steamship China.

James Newbury FitzGerald was born in Newark, N. J., in 1837. He chose law as a profession, and studied in Princeton, being admitted to the bar of New Jersey in 1858. After a few years in the law, and with brilliant prospects before him, he became a convert to the Methodist Episcopal Church and decided to enter the ministry. He spent three years each as minister of churches in Elizabeth, Hudson City, Newton, Paterson and Jersey City, and in 1880 became presiding elder of the Newark District. In 1888 he was made a bishop. For the last ten years he had been the resident Bishop of St. Louis. He was sent last fall as a representative of the Board of Bishops to visit the missions in India and China and report to the General Conference in May, 1908. He had visited the missions in India, and when his fatal illness occurred, he was on his way to attend the centennial celebration of the founding of Protestant missions in China, in Shanghai. With him at the time of his death were Bishop Bashford, of China, and Bishop Spellmeyer, resident Bishop of Cincinnati.

In 1864 he married Mary Eliza Annin, who, with two sons and a daughter, survive him. His eldest son is Paul FitzGerald, a physician of Newark, N. J.

News of the Bishop's death brought sorrow to Ocean Grove and Asbury Park. His successor will not be chosen until a general meeting of the Camp Meeting Association takes place.

The Relief Ship's Officers

MAJOR and Quartermaster J. W. Littell, U. S. A., writes to THE RISTIAN HERALD that the officers in nmand of the army transport Buford, ich will sail from San Francisco April with our famine relief cargo for China, as follows:

The Quartermaster in charge of the ship Lieut. Charles B. Moore, Twenty-second S. Infantry; the master of the vessel is pt. James Willson; first officer, J. M. w; second officer, James Swan; third icer, W. J. Crangle; fourth officer, mes Reid; chief engineer, Wm. Mair; t assistant engineer, E. Derenberg; ond assistant engineer, John Cruden; rd assistant engineer, Charles Wanenrg; fourth assistant engineer, R. Farley. Mr. E. R. Johnstone will accompany Buford as the representative of THE RISTIAN HERALD. He will visit the nine districts and personally supervise e work of distributing the relief at Chinng and elsewhere. Mr. Johnstone is experienced editor and writer, and has en intimately associated with the prest relief movement since the outbreak of e famine. His letters and cablegrams m the famine field, after the Buford's rival, will form an important part of the story of this great life-saving crusade, d will be awaited with the deepest interest by readers of this journal.

New Gold Coinage

During the present year gold coins of the United States of a new design will be struck and put in circulation. The law provides that the designs on the coinage shall not be changed oftener than once in twenty-five years, and that on each coin there shall appear an emblem of liberty, the year of coinage, and the words E Pluribus Unum. Beyond this the President has authority to prescribe just whatever figures or emblems shall appear on the coins. The gold now circulated has been in use fifty years or more, and the President has now the privilege of making any change or improvement. It is understood that a committee of prominent officials will be appointed to pass on the designs submitted.

STRENGTH

Without Overloading The Stomach.

The business man, especially, needs food in the morning that will not overload the stomach, but give mental vigor for the day.

Much depends on the start a man gets each day as to how he may expect to accomplish the work on hand.

He can't be alert with a heavy, fried-meat-and-potatoes breakfast requiring a lot of vital energy in digesting it.

A Calif. business man tried to find some food combination that would not overload the stomach in the morning, but that would produce energy.

He writes:

"For years I was unable to find a breakfast food that had nutrition enough to sustain a business man without overloading his stomach, causing indigestion and kindred ailments.

"Being a very busy and also a very nervous man, I decided to give up breakfast altogether. But luckily I was induced to try Grape-Nuts.

"Since that morning I have been a new man; can work without tiring, my head is clear and my nerves strong and quiet.

"I find four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with one of sugar and a small quantity of cold milk, make a delicious morning meal, which invigorates me for the day's business." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

The Man From New York

rather than "the man from Missouri" was the one who said "show me" as to life insurance. Everyone knows that the New York Legislature investigated the insurance situation but everyone may not know that the insurance laws of New York are now recognized as the best in the world. Other states will doubtless follow, but New York has led the way in laws made in the interest of the insured.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company

operates under these laws. Its policies have the state's approval. It is withal a mutual company belonging to its policy holders and they must therefore participate in the vast savings and economies which have been put into effect by the new management. Things are bound to be good for the Mutual Life policy holder.

The Time to Act is NOW.

Missions in Asia*

RATHER a wide subject is that chosen for the topic of the Society this week. The nations of Asia differ so widely in race, in character, and in religion, that missionaries are compelled to approach them by different methods, and to grapple with difficulties of different kinds. Their remedy for the evils they meet is one and the same, but it must be presented in different ways and it meets with varying success. The Pantheist, the Confucian, the Hindoo, the Buddhist, and the Mohammedan, divide the non-Christian world of Asia among them, and besides these there are many smaller divisions, each of which has its own disciples, strong in their respective faiths. The population of the Asiatic continent, as near as it can be reckoned, is 848,954,000, but this includes Thibet and other lands, of which a mere estimate is all that can be given. The three great nations, China, India, and Japan, have a population of 772,732,000, and thus form the chief part of Asia. The latest estimate of Christians in these three nations in which so many missionaries are at work, is a small percentage of the population. That there are as many as there are may well excite our astonishment, when we reflect that Christian missions were not systematized there a century ago. But it must impress us also with the magnitude of the work still waiting to be done.

The results should not be discouraging. As in building, the foundation is the slowest and most expensive work, so in missionary effort. It has taken time to get even an entrance into some of the nations that compose the mighty continent. Longer still to disarm the prejudices of the people and to convince them that the missionaries have no designs against their liberties. The learning of the languages, the preparation of grammars and dictionaries had to be done before the Bible could be given to the people. But now in those three lands there are 7,214 well-equipped missionaries, many of whom are doctors of medicine, and all eager and ready for service. The foundation having thus been laid at the cost of life and the expenditure of money our faith assures us of results. The sowing has been done; now if we do not withhold our hand, the harvest will be gathered.

The Church She Belonged To

I believe I have told you in the past how we value THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. May I tell you the impression it has made on our little four-year-old daughter, Esther?

Esther is very quaint and old-fashioned in her ways. She likes pictures, and must have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pictures explained to her every week. She is much given to original comment and is a great favorite with my patients when she comes to the office. She was in the office yesterday. At the dinner-table last night we heard the following conversation between Esther and her nine-year-old sister, Dorothea:

"Dorothea, to what church do I belong?"

"You belong to Plymouth Congregational Church. Why?"

"Oh my, Dorothea, I told a lady wrong to-day."

"What did you tell a lady?"

"A lady in papa's office asked me what church I belonged to, and I told her I could not think of the name, but I thought it was THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I know we take THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

Our church issues a weekly called The Plymouth Herald and the little one surely received a good impression, and we think it was sweetly expressed."

Many Koreans Confess Christ

Mr. John R. Mott recently spent three days in Seoul, Korea, on his way to the Conference of the World's Student Christian Federation in Japan. On his arrival he was met by two hundred representative citizens, carrying brilliantly colored paper lanterns, who escorted him to his hotel. More than six thousand men attended the open-air meeting next day, paying the closest attention to Mr. Mott's two-hour address, delivered through an interpreter. Upon the platform sat H. S. Yun Chi Ho, Ex Minister of Education, who was educated at Vanderbilt University, Tennessee. Many senior and advanced students were interested in the audience and at the close of Mr. Mott's address, more than two hundred young Koreans declared their purpose of becoming Christians.

New Canadian Missionary Enterprises

The "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union have just appointed Mr. E. C. Austin, of Toronto, as the first Canadian missionary to Peru, South America. Mr. Austin for some years has been secretary of the Young People's Department of the Canadian Congregational Foreign Missionary Society, and is an enthusiast in the cause of missions. Through his activity and insistence, many mission classes have been sustained in the churches. He is at present making a brief tour among the churches, and expects to leave for his new field of labor in April or May. His work will be at Arequipa, among the Inca Indians, at one time a promising but now a down-trodden race, for which the Church and Government of the Republic are responsible.

Mr. E. C. Austin, of Toronto

Rev. Dr. Devins' New Field

FOR the last five years Dr. John Bancroft Devins has been widely known throughout this country as the editor of The New York Observer, a prominent Presbyterian journal. The directors of the New York Tribune Fresh Air Fund are to be heartily congratulated upon the appointment of Dr. Devins as successor of Rev. Willard Parsons, the originator of the movement and the man who for thirty years has cultivated and developed its growth.

When Mr. Parsons, in 1877, preached to his little congregation in the Pennsylvania hills, telling them of the suffering he had witnessed among the poor children of the great city's slums during the hot summer, he little dreamed of the far-reaching effect his words would produce. The next day his people sent him to New York with an invitation to the children of poverty to come out into the woods and enjoy the flowers and the brooks and the trees. So began the Fresh Air movement which has since 1882 been conducted under the auspices of the Tribune. As manager of the Fresh Air Fund, Mr. Parsons has preached through the columns of that journal to a steadily increasing congregation, and his sermons have resulted in sending a total of 237,709 tenement children for a fortnight's sojourn in hospitable country homes, and 429,071 mothers and children for a long summer day's outing up the Hudson river.

In Dr. Devins the work, from which ill-health compels Mr. Parsons to withdraw, finds a conductor who is peculiarly adapted to carry it forward to a constantly broadening usefulness. Born in New York, his experience as a city missionary on the lower East Side has taught him to know, as few workers can, the needs of the children of the poor. For years, also, he has been officially and intimately connected with the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, especially in the work of the Sea Breeze Home for Crippled Children. He is therefore admirably equipped for the duties and responsibilities which await him. His new appointment will not alter his relations with The New York Observer. We confidently trust that under his energetic guidance the success of the Fresh Air Fund may be greatly augmented during the coming years.

Are You Too Thin?

For only 15 minutes a day's practice in your own room upon special exercises that I will give you, you can be round, plump, wholesome, rested and attractive. Nature intended you to be—why should you not?

The following are extracts from the weekly reports of my pupils:

"Just think, Miss Cocroft, I have gained 25 pounds."

"Before I took up your work, I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I can digest tacks. I am so happy."

"Every exercise and movement has accomplished just what we wanted."

"My bust, neck and chest have filled out beautifully and I carry myself like another woman."

"You have done more for me than doctors have done in 20 years. My constipation is entirely relieved and my nerves are so rested."

I have built up thousands of women—why not you? You will be so much more attractive and so much better satisfied with yourself.

If I cannot help your particular case I will tell you so. My information and advice are entirely free. Send 10 cents for instructive booklet, with card for your dressing table showing correct lines of a woman's figure.

I Can Reduce Your Flesh

Would you like to reduce it by natural means and in a dignified manner?

I have reduced 7,000 women in the past 3 years by a series of simple exercises practiced in the privacy of their own rooms and by use of merely a rational diet which will not weaken.

I can reduce you and at the same time strengthen the stomach, heart and relieve you of such chronic ailments as rheumatism, constipation, weak nerves and such difficulties as depend upon good circulation, strong nerves, strong muscles, good blood, correct breathing.

You can be as good a figure as any woman of your acquaintance—no drugs, no medicine.

"I have reduced 81 pounds under your instruction. There is not a wrinkle in my face and my husband says I look like the girl he married. You can imagine how happy I am."

"You have simply saved my life, Miss Cocroft. I was a nervous wreck when I began my work with you."

"I have reduced 65 pounds in five lessons. I have only 10 more pounds to reduce to reach your goal."

"My hearing continues to improve."

"My constipation is entirely removed."

"I was weighed yesterday—32 pounds in three lessons I think is pretty good."

"The most noticeable change has been in the complete disappearance of my double chin."

PRES. WILLIAM McKINLEY SAID
I am familiar with Ridpath's History of the World, and cordially commend it to the scholar as well as to the plain people generally.

PROF. W. F. WARREN, President Boston University, said:
I should be glad to see it placed in the library of every young person in the U. S. and even in the English-speaking world. In families where there are bright children it will render excellent service to the cause of popular intelligence.

THE Publishers Failure IS Your Opportunity

PRES. BENJAMIN HARRISON SAID:
Dr. Ridpath's labors are deserving of the highest praise. I most heartily recommend his History of the World for study and for convenient reference.

S. C. BARTLETT, President Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H., said:
It is a popular history of wide range, and brought down from the most ancient to the most modern times. The style is clear, the narrative well balanced, and the statements reliable. The worth of such a work to every young man or woman, or in a family of children, is beyond calculation.

At LESS than even DAMAGED SETS were ever sold

The Christian Herald, in reviewing this great publication, said in part: "Ridpath's History of the World may be regarded as a complete library in itself. No other work of its kind has ever supplied a History so well suited to the needs of all classes and conditions of men. We mark the marvelous influence of Christianity upon the world's progress. He would be a blind reader of history indeed who did not discern, throughout all, the influence of a great Omnipotent hand, guiding and developing all things. We cheerfully commend this most popular and complete of all world histories to our readers. These nine handsomely bound volumes will make the very best nucleus for a family library, and will be a potent educator of the young and a mine of valuable information for readers of all ages."

RIDPATH'S enviable position as an historian is due to his wonderfully beautiful style, a style no other historian has ever equaled. He pictures the great historical events as though they were happening before your eyes: he carries you with him to see the battles of old; to meet kings and warriors; to sit in the Roman Senate; to march against Saladin and his dark-skinned followers; to sail the southern seas with Drake; to circumnavigate the globe with Magellan; to watch that thin line of Greek spearmen work havoc with the Persian hordes on the field of Marathon; to know Napoleon as you know Roosevelt.

RIDPATH in your home means you need never spend a lonely evening. You can associate with the world's heroes; you can cross the Rubicon with Cæsar, after which Rome was free no more. You can sit at the feet of Socrates, the loftiest genius of the ancient world. You can walk with Luther, who did more than any other man to give to the world religious freedom. You can kneel at the shrine of Lincoln, "the greatest human of all time; the gentlest memory of our world." It is ennobling to commune with these children of destiny. To be associated with great men and events is to be great one's self, and you will add to your store of knowledge which is power, and to the richness of your life.

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic, troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendour; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written by man.

RIDPATH throws the mantle of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there; patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles with three hundred and fifty Greek ships smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth, and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym of savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there, gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says, "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another Century, the most colossal world-figure of his time.

Questions and Answers

NOTICE

FROM this date, our undertaking to answer by mail, letters in which ten cents are enclosed for reply, is withdrawn. Letters asking for information of general interest will be answered in The Mail-Bag as speedily as possible. In some cases where, in our judgment, good may result from a personal answer, we will reply by mail. We cannot answer inquiries of the nature of conundrums nor those written for the purpose of argument.

W. M. Cumming, Wilmington, N. C. Has the United States not returned nearly $20,000,000, exacted by the Powers as our share of the losses during the Boxer troubles?

We understand that during the time of the late Secretary Hay arrangements were made for the return of a certain part of the amount above that necessary to settle American claims.

H. H., Cedar Grove, Wis. What are the chief hindrances to foreign missions?

1. The indifference of so-called Christians to their duty and privilege under the "great commission." See Mark 16: 15. 2. The love of riches, ease, pleasure, and social position, and the failure to realize that all our means are a trust to be used for the advancement of the kingdom of God and the benefit of humanity. 3. Want of faith in the promises. If we had faith we would go forward and evangelize all the "dark places of the earth." 4. The lack of personal consecration. We need more of the spirit which says, "Lord, send me!"

J. E. T., Statesville, N. C. Is there any particular name in current English with which to designate the party that is being chaperoned? If so, what is it?

No; we say the young lady chaperoned by Mrs. So and so, or the party of ladies chaperoned by her. There is no one word in good use to convey the entire meaning.

V. B. G., West Sullivan, Me., and many others. Could The Mail-Bag give a list of the Pilgrim Fathers, who came in the Mayflower, in 1620?

The following list was written by William Bradford, second Governor of Plymouth Colony, in his account of "Plimoth plantation." The old spelling of the names is retained in this list:

Mr. John Carver, Katherine, his wife; Desire Minter, Joan Hoctrouk, Roger Wilder, William Latham, a boy, a child, several strange not given; a child, Jasper Mage; Mr. William Brewster, Mary, his wife, two sons, Love and Wrestling; Richard More and one brother; Mr. Edward Winslow, Elizabeth his wife, George Soule, Elias Story, Ellen sister of Richard More; Mr. William Bradford and wife Dorothy, their son, the famous Major wounded in the swamp Fight, came later; Mr. Isaack Allerton, wife Mary, three children, Bartholmew, Remember, and Mary, a boy, John Hooke; Mr. Samuell Fuller, Wilham Bubern, John Crakston, and son John, Captain Myles Standish, and wife Rose; Mr. Christopher Martin and wife, Salamon Prower, John Langemore, Mr. William Mullins, wife, and children Joseph and Priscilla, Robert Carter, Mr. William White, wife Susanna, sons Resolved and Peregrine, William Holbeck, Edward Thomson, Mr. Steven Hopkins, wife Elizabeth, and their two children Giles and Constanta a daughter by a former wife, gotten two Mothers, Damaris and Oceanus, Edward Doty and Edward Litster. Mr. Richard Warren, Ca. and water-works system for New York City report that they have been unable to find solid bottom at four hundred feet below the surface of the water. Of course much of this length is soft mud. The average depth in the lower course of the river is about thirty or forty feet. 2. The sun has a diameter of 866,900 miles. The earth's diameter at the equator is 7,925.83 miles, or 41,848,380 feet.

Inquirer, Jacksonville, Fla. Does God ever take his Spirit away from a person in this life and leave him to seek in vain for mercy and forgiveness? Does Proverbs 1: 24–33 imply this?

If God took his Spirit away, the person would not seek for mercy and forgiveness. He would be indifferent. The effect of the withdrawal would be a cessation of any desire for conversion. Any person who is sincerely anxious for salvation has the proof in that fact that the Holy Spirit is working with him, and if he will yield to the influence and go to God he will be accepted. No one who seeks sincerely ever seeks in vain. There are people who profess to seek and do not find; but it is usually because they want to be saved and yet keep some treasured sin. That God never does. He saves people from their sins, but never with their sins. The passage in Proverbs that you quote pictures people driven by terror, as a wicked man on shipboard afraid of wreck prays for deliverance. Even he might be saved if it was deliverance from sin that he sought. But God knows that if he was saved from shipwreck he would go back to his sin. The boy who cries and pleads and promises amendment when his father takes the rod in hand, would be gladly heard if his father was sure that he was really penitent; but if he knows that the boy is merely afraid of the rod he is deaf to his plea.

J. F. C., Columbia, Ky. Was the site of Jerusalem chosen by men or appointed by God?

It is said to have been the mount on which Abraham offered Isaac. The prophets speak of the city as having been chosen of God, but there is no record of any direct appointment.

W. S. M., New York City. 1. What is the greatest depth of the Hudson River, and where is it? 2. How many times larger than the earth is the sun?

1. The greatest depth of the river is found off Storm King Mountain, in the Hudson Highlands, near Cornwall. Engineers at work there on the construction of the new Front View of the Wreck — View of the Stern of the "Dakota"

The Wreck of the "Dakota"

On Sunday, March 3, the great Pacific liner Dakota was nearing the entrance of Tokyo Bay. It was clear weather and the seas were not running high. Suddenly the ship stopped with a shock and began to gradually point down at the bow. She was hard and fast on a sunken reef and a total loss. If she had gone a few yards farther she would have gone down with most of the passengers, on account of the enormous rents that had been torn in her hull. The passengers were saved, but lost all their baggage. The people on shore did all they could to relieve the distress of the passengers as they came ashore in the ship's boats. The Dakota is a sister ship of the Minnesota, and these are the two finest ships of their class on the Pacific. She was six hundred and thirty feet in length and seventy-three feet beam. This is the third wreck of a large steamer in the Pacific in the last few months.

W. F. J., Brooklyn, N. Y. Did Christ have any brothers and sisters?

The statement in all four Gospels is direct, that he had. Matthew gives the names of the four brothers (Matt. 13: 55) and mentions the sisters. Mark does the same (Mark 6: 3). Luke mentions the brothers (Luke 8: 19). John also mentions his brothers (John 2: 12 and 7: 3, 5 and 10). Attempts have been made to show that these were Christ's cousins, or that they were children of Joseph by a former marriage, but they are the attempt of persons desirous of showing that Mary had no other children, and as Dr. Schaff, who made an exhaustive study of the subject, points out, there is nothing in Scripture or reason to support the idea.

M. A. Y. Has Raisuli, the brigand who is now causing so much trouble in Morocco, ever kidnapped and held for ransom any one American, or otherwise? If not, in what way has he in years past made himself conspicuous?

He caused our government much trouble by capturing a naturalized American named Perdicaris. This man was born in Greece, lived some time in America, and took out naturalization papers. He then went to Morocco to live. Raisuli was in rebellion against the Sultan and held the naturalized American for ransom. He was at last set free. Raisuli's rebellion has several times got the government of his country in serious trouble with other nations.

W. C. P., Siler City, N. C. 1. What does the word "empty" imply in the parable of the house swept and garnished (Matt. 12: 44)? 2. Were the persons mentioned in Acts 19: 2, as having heard of the Holy Spirit, converted people?

1. It means uncompleted work: as when a drunkard or a gambler is induced to quit his vice and reform, but does not go on in faith in Christ and dependence on him; or as when a nation turns from its idols and rejects all religion — when it becomes atheistic instead of Christian. The evil is swept out and some other devil enters because the room is empty. 2. We should infer so from the narrative. Paul had been there and preached one sermon but did not stay (see Acts 18: 20). That sermon would probably be devoted to preaching Christ as a Saviour. He would not be likely to enter into the mystery of the Trinity. But men were saved through the sermon. The Holy Spirit operated, though the people were unconscious of the source of the change. Then when Paul returned and explained to them there was no further baptism and they "prophesied."

J. A. S., Charlton, [illegible] Will you advise a reader who has just begun to take up the study of general literature how to proceed?

We recommend the Chautauqua course: a generally comprehensive foundation in history and the rudiments of science. A lighter yet broad educational course is that which has been outlined in the Book News Monthly, of Philadelphia, since April, 1904. It begins with a Preparatory Period, then took up Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, etc., and is now occupied with the early Victorian era. It recommends excellent supplementary reading and the student who follows it cannot fail to expand and develop mentally.

Miscellaneous

J. G. R., St. Thomas, Pa. The question is evidently a riddle, which would take too long for us to work out. Why not write to the editor of the paper in which it first appeared and ask for the copy containing the answer, if any?

J. W. R., Curtis, Neb. The following are the present members of the English Cabinet: Henry C. Bannerman, Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury; Marquis of Ripon, Lord Privy Seal; Sir Edward Grey, Foreign Secretary; Lord Loreburn, Lord High Chancellor; Earl of Crewe, President of the Council; Herbert Henry Asquith, K. C., Chancellor of the Exchequer; Herbert John Gladstone, Home Secretary; Earl of Elgin, Colonial Secretary; Richard Burdon Haldane, Secretary of War; John Morley, Secretary for India; John Sinclair, Secretary for Scotland; Lord Tweedmouth, First Lord of the Admiralty; Daniel Lloyd-George, President Board of Trade; John Burns, President Local Government Board; Sir Henry Hartley Fowler, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; Sydney C. Buxton, Postmaster-General; Sir Samuel Walker, Bart., Lord Chancellor for Ireland; Earl Carrington, President Board of Agriculture; Lewis Vernon Harcourt, First Commissioner of Works; James Bryce, who was Chief Secretary for Ireland, has just come as Ambassador to the United States and another member of his party was appointed to fill the place.

The Dwarf of Ghoom

A "Dandy" and Bearers, Darjeeling

A Woman Coolie

UNDER "THE EAVES OF TIBET"

By CHARLES M. PEPPER

TIBET, from its situation in the Himalayas, is called "the roof of the world," though Bolivia in the Andes has almost as good a title. Sometimes a roof is not so interesting as the eaves. Certainly, interesting as Tibet is, the eaves are even more so. This is the name given to the slopes of the Himalayas around Darjeeling, which is the entrance to the mountain passes leading to Tibet and beyond.

Darjeeling is especially notable for its medley of races. In Tibet it is the Mongolian type that prevails; but at Darjeeling there is also the Hindu type from the plains and a mixture of others, quite distinct from either the Mongolian or the Hindu. It was perhaps for this reason that a scientific observer called the region "the eaves," since so many civilizations and so many varieties of the human race are drained off there.

It takes nearly a day to travel from Calcutta through the jungle and up to the canyons and valleys in which Darjeeling and other "hill stations," as the English call them, lie. The entire trip is made by railway except that the Ganges is ferried, no bridge having yet been built, though in time there will be one probably three miles in length. The lower plains, where they are not jungle, are covered with rice-fields and jute plantations. Then come the tea plantations and after that the railway with a two-foot gauge which, in a course of 50 miles, by making double loops and reverse curves, climbs to a height of 7,500 feet. Darjeeling is the summer capital of Bengal, but it is also a great sanitarium and health resort, and a military station.

The mountains are terraced for miles. There are splendid villas, winding roads, barracks, sanitariums, hotels and seminaries. But though the roads are so very hilly no wheeled vehicles are to be had. One must either mount a pony, hire a rickshaw or rent a "dandy." The rickshaw is like that used in Japan and elsewhere. The "dandy" is somewhat more novel. It is a chair slung on poles and carried on the backs of four coolies. These "dandy-bearers" are strong and sure-footed. They climb the steepest and crookedest paths with the greatest ease, and they are never troubled at the fear of dropping their burden. The tourist in his first trips is not so confident and is pretty sure to be nervous over what would happen if they should drop him; but after a while he ceases to think of that.

The different races which meet and mingle at Darjeeling are shown by the Christian churches, the Mohammedan mosques, the Hindu temples, the temples to Buddha, and the totem poles, which are somewhat similar to the totems of the Alaska Indians. The churches, of course, are for the English and other Europeans, though they have some native worshipers and there are several mission schools. Buddhism in a depraved form is, however, the most prevalent religion and there is much of the rankest idolatry and adoration of the unseen powers. Streamers of cotton and other cloth float from the totem poles and houses to keep off the demons, which the ignorant people think are always threatening them. There are many Tibetan lamas or priests in faded scarlet gowns twirling prayer wheels. The prayer wheel is a common cylinder with a strip of paper in Sanscrit characters. The cylinder is kept constantly in motion.

Bhutea Women in their Holiday Attire

In the market-place or bazaar all the different races are seen. Here is the Hindu woman with her baby swung across the hip, while near her is a Tibetan woman with her baby carried on the back papoose fashion, just like the Indian woman of America. Then there are the Bhuteas, with their infants in an ordinary wicker basket—perhaps the first form of the modern baby carriage.

Though most of the people are very poor, they do not seem discontented with their lot. Some of them, too, take pride in showing themselves off in their best clothes, and groups of these are the delight of the amateur photographer. The abundance of amulets, bangles, ear-rings, nose-rings, anklets, and toe-rings are characteristic of all the tribes; but the Nepaulese are perhaps the most given to adornment, and since they are the most industrious, they are better able to gratify themselves and make a showing. The children are bright-faced and keen as well as mischievous. Other hill tribes are the Bhuteas, the Limboes, and the Lepchas. Sometimes these tribes will be found living in the same village, but occupying entirely separate quarters, not intermarrying and apparently maintaining their existence as they have done for centuries without change.

The Lepchas are among the sturdiest and at the same time the most peaceful of these tribes. They are of short stature, with small hands and feet and muscular arms. They have a written language, and their morals are superior to the code practised by their neighbors. The Limboes resemble them and intermarry with them, but do not seem to be so far advanced in civilization.

The Bhuteas are lower in the scale than either the Limboes or the Lepchas. They are a cross of many

A SCHOLAR'S HOMAGE

TEXT: JOHN 19: 38-42

"There came also Nicodemus," etc.

BEFORE the tragedy of history closed, and Jesus was crucified, our Lord had become the storm centre of the national life. He had compelled the attention of all classes; which classes in turn gave their decision on Jesus. We know what the Pharisees thought of Jesus, we know what the Sadducees thought of Jesus; what the government of the day —the Roman magistrates—thought of Jesus; and we know what the poor, stupid, blundering, deluded, changeable proletariat thought of our Master. Their judgment is recorded, and by that judgment they are to be judged.

The Attitude of the Learned

What did the scholars of that day think of Jesus? They were not all "dry-as-dust" scholars, not all bigots. There were many broad and liberal-minded ones, who, like Nicodemus, studied the signs of the coming of the Messiah, and that nameless lawyer who showed so candid a spirit that Jesus declared he was "not far from the kingdom of God;" and the finest representative of the class, the man who, I think, has not always occupied the place he should in our estimation, is the scholar whose visit to Christ is recorded in the fourth Gospel. We know what the others thought of Jesus, but what did the scholars think of Jesus? There is no man, possibly, in the Bible gallery of portraiture who fulfilled himself, according to the idea of God, so perfectly and becomingly as this Jewish scholar. He appears first in the familiar passage (John 3 : 1-21) which is usually employed as evidence for the doctrine of regeneration. This is a just and proper use of the passage, but to-day instead of theology let us have humanity, and instead of creed let us have character. Let us consider the persons who met and faced each other in a private interview that spring evening.

They were as different as is the East from the West. Nicodemus belonged to the learned class; he was a member of the supreme council of the nation, and a scholar so distinguished that he seems to have held a premier position in the ranks of learning. When we speak of a scholar it does not matter whether he was a Jew or a Greek. A scholarly mind is the same in all ages and in all nations. The characteristics of a scholar are an earnest passion for truth, an indifference to popular prejudices, and an elevation above this present world. There is no class of men more unworldly than scholars. The scholar loves beauty, truth and reality; and this man who faced Jesus was a characteristic scholar of his day.

The Prophet and the Scholar

Jesus represents the other side. He had sprung from the common people. He had received nothing more than what we call an elementary education. He had wrought with his hands for his living, and he was brought up in a village notorious for the rudeness of its manners and the coarseness of its people. But he had appeared as a prophet and won the affection and respect of the people by the simplicity of his style, the profound spirituality of his ideas, his self-sacrificing life, and a certain indescribable and mysterious grace which surrounded him like an atmosphere. These two faced one another. One, the head of a nation's university, the child of religious and national culture. The other, an evangelist, without letters, speaking the people's tongue and leading the people's life. Jesus did not look upon a "dry as-dust" scholar; he looked upon a modest, simple minded, earnest, spiritual man; and Nicodemus did not look upon a low, young demagogue; he looked upon the chief saint and mystic who has appeared in human history. They were far apart.

It is remembered that Nicodemus sought Jesus by night, and by the majority he is considered to have in some way played the coward by seeking a midnight interview. Let us remember the situation. There are two types of men, the popular and the learned. God made the people with the people's ways, and God made the scholar with the scholar's ways. We have no right to set up one standard making the people's religion every man's religion. If God has been pleased to make men in different patterns, what is required of men to fulfil themselves?

Now, contrast the representative of the people and the representative of the scholars. The people: If he had been one of the people he would have gone to Jesus in broad daylight, in the crowd, and everything he said he would have been willing to say at the pitch of his voice; and the more to see and hear the better. Quite right, you say. Now, on the scholar's side: It is a little startling to attend a huge meeting and hear a man suddenly tell the most sacred passages which have occurred between his soul and his Maker. It makes you shudder to hear a man pray at the top of his voice, making confession of sin which you would mention with bated breath, and telling emotions for which you have no words. This, you say, is dreadful and profane. Pause, pause! It is natural to the man. God made him so. It is his way of fulfilling himself. But the scholar: he hates to obtrude himself upon the public. He never for a moment imagines that people next to him want to know his profound and sublime emotions. Whatever he says he says to God alone. The scholar is shy. It would be to him an absolute agony, a crucifixion of his noblest life, to tell everything that has passed between his God and his soul. Are you to judge the scholar? No. If it be a man of Galilee, let him talk with Jesus in a public place; if he be a scholar, then let him go quietly at the close of the day and have

An Interview with Jesus

Then, remember, Nicodemus was a public man, and there must always be a great difference between a private person and one who is charged with the affairs of other people. If no one is following you, climb the hill any way you please, it makes no difference to the people what happens, you are alone; but if you are a guide, and others are following you, be careful where you put your foot; for if you make a mistake, it may be death to others. Nicodemus was a ruler, and had he suddenly, without consideration, thrown in his lot with Jesus, he had shown himself unworthy of his high position. On him depended many students and many other people. More than that. He had questions to ask which would never have occurred to the people. The people did not ask many questions. They had no problems to settle. They had not any load of learning coming between them and faith. The questions he had to ask were not suitable to ask in public, and therefore he must meet Jesus alone. He acted bravely and quite becomingly in doing as he did. Therefore, in this chief chapter of his life he rises before us as a typical scholar in his sincerity, modesty, quietness, and in his earnestness.

You want a more public scene? You shall have it. We find ourselves in the council chamber of the nation. We see around us the heads of the Jewish people, and among them you can identify the night visitor of the Galilean Teacher. He is sitting in his high place. The council have become suspicious of Jesus. They cannot prove anything against him, but they are afraid. They are waiting for the officers to bring Jesus in as a prisoner. They come without him and the court upbraids them. What does Nicodemus say? Is Nicodemus going to side with his colleagues?

He Speaks to the Point

I will pause a moment. We are slowly building up this man's character. What would you expect him to say? That he is a believer in Jesus, and that Jesus is the Son of God, and that they also should become followers of Jesus? I would not like a judge upon the bench to preach but to administer justice. Nicodemus speaks as a judge. I do not ask a merchant if he conducts prayer meetings in his office or on the street, but does he so conduct his business, especially in times of strife, that men shall say, "That man has become a son of God"? If I am judging a student I shall not be conciliated for his failure in his examination by the fact that he gave his time to religious work that he should have given to his studies. I would say that the man who finishes his work and takes his degree so thoroughly that professors, tutors and others acknowledge that he has done rightly, has brought honor to name of our Lord and Master.

I do not want Nicodemus sitting in the counc preach a sermon. My eye is upon him. I am anx He speaks to his colleagues and says (as it were in ern language): "My Lords, have you been acting ac ing to law? I protest that you have broken disregarded the safeguards which are flung aroun innocent man. Behold! by your partial judgment have already condemned him. No evidence has brought against him. Is that the law? I protest, as a judge of the Supreme Court I fling my shield the wronged and outraged man." Well done, N demus! it is just what you should have said. colleagues were ten times more impressed than if he made a sensational harangue from his high pl Before I leave that chamber I wish to say, I am pr of Nicodemus, and I am also proud of my Lord, has already entered upon the Via Dolorosa that end in the dust and shame of Calvary.

The Scholar a Friend

Once more we meet Nicodemus. And now, ger men, if you are still feeling that you would like les the shade and more of the open, you get the ope last. We come to no private chamber; no high cou room; we come to a new space, namely, the hil Calvary on which our Lord was crucified. The spiracy has succeeded, and the Son of God, the grea Prophet God ever sent to Israel, and the most per Man that ever lived, has been done to death. Al over. He has said the last word; done the last ac mercy. It is all over. Well, not quite. His bod hanging upon the cross, and I am haunted with te as to what is going to be done with the body of Master. We cannot reverse the decision, but oh, it be the crowning shame of all if that body is taken fr the cross and flung to the dogs, or laid in a felo grave. It would not affect his work, I presume, his resurrection, but the Church would weep at insult.

Who will bury Christ? Ah, now I grant you we w open work; open confession; no secret interviews, brave doing. Who is able for it? Oh, I know. Th are the people he raised from the dead; there are lepers he cured; there are the blind men to whom showed the glory of the world; there are those wh tears he wiped away—hundreds of them. I only w half a dozen to take down that poor body and put it some kind of grave and shed some tears over it. N one! Not one! Ah, well! There are the people, enthusiastic, outspoken, buoyant, emotional people; people that pleased you so much. They will come hundreds. I have already heard them cry, "Hosanna the Son of David!" And the people? He loved the He threw in his lot with them. Do you understa that he could have come to terms with the rulers, a that it was because he would not that he was sent to cross? He died for the people who never had such friend. We only ask the people

To Bury Him

It is a public act; they will do it. It is a chan for a great procession; for a spontaneous exhibition dramatic loyalty. Where are the people? Ah, I wou lift up my voice to-day and beseech you not to put t much trust in the people's loyalty. They are ve easily turned. It is not that they are deliberate false; it is that they are subject to endless, passi emotions. The people have not always stood by t leaders; and in the greatest of all instances the peop for whom our Chief Leader died, they had not t courage to bury his dead body.

I have some hope still. You believe very much in dramatic profession. You like to hear a man stand u and repeat the Creed. You say, "There is that repre sentative Christian; he holds the Creed and is n ashamed of it." I know, I know, I know the man There was a man who stood forward and said, "Tho art the Christ, the Son of the living God." That wa a brave confession, and any man who can make tha confession with his mind and his heart together—if h

LIGHTING THE DARKENED LIVES

How Two Kind-Hearted Women Began a Great Work Among the Hopelessly Blind

WHEN the blind poet, John Milton, gave voice to his immortal protest,

'O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
. . . . . O worse than chains,
Dungeons or beggary, or decrepit age!"

he expressed the sentiment of the sightless of every generation. But, although since Milton's day civilization has taken gigantic strides in the direction of responding intelligently to "earth's sorrowing cry," only in the living present has it been recognized that the duty of society toward the indigent blind is not all performed when charity is regarded as the only means of subsistence open to them.

There are 65,000 blind persons in the United States, and of these a pathetically large proportion are poor. Over 6,000 of those who sit in darkness are found within the boundaries of New York State; 2,300 within the city limits. Since the State makes no provision for their instruction after school age, more than three-quarters of those thousands are left alone in their darkness to begin life anew. It has been proven by experiment that they may be trained to proficiency in many industries, and it has remained for two noble young women to come to New York City to set the wheels in motion, which shall insure the equipment for self-support of these victims of a blighting infirmity.

The New York Association for the Blind made its first bow as an organization to a sympathetic public but one short year ago. Such prominent men as the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Mr. Richard Watson Gilder, President Butler of Columbia University, and others are to be found upon its Advisory Board and among the contributors to its work. But the moving springs of the Association are to be found at No. 44 East Seventy-eighth Street, in the persons of the Misses Winifred and Edith Holt, daughters of Mr. Henry Holt, the well-known publisher.

That "great oaks from little acorns grow" is exemplified in the apparently trivial circumstance to which the present active organization may trace its origin. The Misses Holt, while traveling through Europe some years since, observed a blind lad at an Italian concert. His intense enjoyment of the music which required no aid from the one sense he lacked to add to his delight, inspired a great desire in the hearts of the sisters to bring such pleasure into the lives of others who dwell in a land where it is always night. Returning to America, they wrote to every concert and lecture manager in New York City, requesting that unsold tickets for all entertainments might be sent to their home, from whence they would be distributed among the city's blind poor. The success of the venture has led to the founding of seven similar Ticket Distributing Bureaus, including one in London and another in Geneva, Switzerland.

But in thus striving to brighten the sombre lives of the blind sufferers, the Misses Holt became more and more alive to the necessity for something definite in the way of helping the poor blind to help themselves. A legislative investigation resulted in the appropriation by the State of $5,000, and the appointment of Miss Edith Holt as chief of a commission for collecting all data concerning the blind, without which nothing systematic could be attempted. This feature of the work demands a story by itself. The two sisters have practically given over their home to the furtherance of the larger work for the blind. The room devoted to Miss Edith's bureau of statistics holds within its orderly files the record of every blind man, woman and child in New York State, so indexed that a moment suffices to locate an individual, his name, age, residence, condition in life, previous occupation, cause and period of blindness.

The Blind Overseer Instructing a Beginner in Chaircaning

Every man in this workshop is totally blind

The avowed purpose of the Association is "to establish perfected methods for reaching, teaching and making useful every blind person in the State, that it may serve as a model for every other State in the Union." Its chief activities consist of a workshop located at 147 East Forty-second Street, New York City, where blind men are instructed in broom-making, chair-caning and other useful trades; and in the home teaching which is given to blind women by six skilled blind and two "sighted" teachers. They give instruction in reading, writing, typewriting, telephone switchboard operating, sewing by hand and machine, knitting, crocheting, basket and lace-making and bead-work. For the finished product of industrious hand and brain, the Association finds ready market.

The aptitude with which many of the blind students acquire proficiency in their chosen industry is truly wonderful. A Columbia student, totally blind, writes upon his typewriter at the rate of sixty words a minute, taking notes of the lectures he attends upon his "Braille" pocket-slate as rapidly as any of his sighted fellow-students, transcribing them with equal speed by means of the sensitive "eyes" at his finger-tips. One young woman, a short time ago helpless in her affliction, is to-day in sole charge of a telephone switchboard in a down-town commission house where 150 employees are on the pay-roll. She has written her own list of addresses in "Braille," adding each as given her, and "feeling" the one called for without hesitation; she takes all messages accurately and promptly upon an ordinary Remington typewriter. A blind man, similarly taught, manipulates the switchboard of a Brooklyn hospital.

The young organization is over-burdened by the magnitude of its responsibilities, and worried for lack of funds. The workshop is the salvation of the uneducated blind adult, and it is an unspeakably pathetic thing to scan the face of an applicant turned away because of lack of room. The market for brooms, etc., is an open one; the work would be self-supporting if funds for an enlarged plant were available. One stalwart old veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, a pauper in his infirmity, is an embodiment of self-respecting industry since his initiation into the mysteries of broom-making. What has been done for the few must be done for the many, if the distressing conditions which prevail among the blind are to be ameliorated. No appeal in behalf of this great work can be so strong as that framed by her who stands before the world as its chief exponent of what can be done by the sightless if we will help them. Helen Keller, in an address prepared for the annual meeting of the Association, makes this stirring plea:

> The men and women for whom I speak are poor and weak in that they lack the chief weapon with which the human being fights his battle. . . . I appeal to you, give the blind man the assistance that shall procure for him at least partial independence. Go a little more than half way to meet him. Remember, however brave and self-reliant, he will always need a guiding hand in his.

Further information concerning this admirable work may be obtained from Miss Winifred Holt, 44 East Seventy-eighth Street, New York City.

THE OLD-AGE PENSION PROBLEM

Hon. Frank A. Vanderlip Discusses the Subject in Its Relation to American Labor

By E. R. JOHNSTONE

IN the most practical way, the United States is kindly to every one who has ever carried its flag, shouldered its musket, or in any way contributed to its defense or protection as a nation.

No other country in the world shows to-day, or ever has shown, such munificence of reward in the line of pensions as that Uncle Sam takes as a matter of course. Familiar as the figures have grown, it is, nevertheless, a continuous astonishment to know that in the forty-four years preceding July 1, 1906, the United States has dispensed in pensions to the soldiers of the wars of the Revolution, 1812, with Mexico, of Secession, and with Spain, and to their widows or dependent children, fathers or mothers, the vast total of $3,412,994,667.35.

On June 30th of last year, there were 998,441 surviving pensioners of the wars mentioned, and last year was the first that showed a material decrease in the number. To the soldiers and sailors of its regular service, the United States is equally liberal when old age or disability overtakes them. Naval officers are retired by law at the age of sixty-two and army officers at sixty-four, unless disability acquired in the line of duty make active service impossible. They are then retired by means of medical reports, sometimes assisted by courts of inquiry. In any event their pay is seventy-five per cent. of that received while on the active list. Warrant, petty and non-commissioned officers are retired for age or length of service, while for the soldiers, sailors and marines who are faithful and continuous in service pensions are assured.

The United States alone of all the great civilized nations is without a Civil Service pension list. The question of such a list has often been mooted. Reams have been written, millions of words spoken for and against the establishment of a fund that shall care for civil employees when they have reached the age of sixty-five or seventy years, or have become disabled by reason of work or exposure incident to their service.

In the United States many great corporations, some multi-millionaires and not a few secret orders provide for the old age of beneficiaries and employees by a system of pensions or annuities, which in most cases presupposes a payment through a long series of years, of certain sums on the part of those to be benefited.

The most notable private provider is Andrew Carnegie, who first gave $4,000,000 to provide pensions in what is known as The Carnegie Life Fund, the recipients being employees of the great steel works which owe their very existence to the donor of the fund. Later Mr. Carnegie donated $10,000,000, the income from which is expended by trustees in the pensioning of college and university professors, providing they are associated with an institution sectarian in its government.

Quite recently John D. Rockefeller donated a fund of $3,000,000 for pensions for superannuated or disabled professors in the University of Chicago, an institution which he is credited with having endowed to the aggregate of $27,000,000.

Nearly a generation ago the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada adopted a pension system, which has grown in importance and has served as an example and a model in this country. Fifteen years ago the Baltimore & Ohio Railway established a pension list, and about the same time the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg formulated and adopted the intricate system of pensions now in vogue, and constantly widening in its scope and purpose. The Pennsylvania Railroad retires upon a pension, and compulsorily at the age of seventy, all officers and employes, and if such officer or employee has been thirty years in the service of the road, he may be retired at the age of sixty-five.

The Northern Pacific, the Southern Pacific and the Canadian Pacific, the New York, New Haven & Hartford, Illinois Central, and many other railway corporations in the United States have adopted, or are about to adopt, an old age pension plan. Each railway has its specific rules and requirements, exceptions and advantages, but all contemplate sharing the burden between employer (that is the road itself) and employed, either by weekly or monthly contribution, or, as in the case of the Pennsylvania, by what is known as deferred wages. The Grand Trunk Railway, which retires at the age of fifty-five years, requires a contribution of two and a half per cent of the monthly wage, and the First National Bank of Chicago—one of the most noteworthy instances of corporate pensioners—requires a contribution of three per cent, provision being made, however, for the return of all payments in case connection with the service is severed.

As said above, all the Great Powers except the United States provide a Civil Service pension fund, but Germany alone has given to the subject of proper care for the great body of working men incapacitated by old age, careful thought and practical and successful application. Emperor William I., in a message to the Reichstag, dated on the 7th of November, 1881, and read by Imperial Chancellor Prince Bismarck, said:

> We consider it our Imperial duty to impress upon the Reichstag the necessity of furthering the welfare of the working people. . . . A bill for the insurance of workmen against industrial accidents will first of all be laid before you, after which a supplementary measure will be submitted providing for a general organization of industrial sick relief insurance. But likewise, those who are disabled in consequence of old age or invalidity, possess a well-founded claim to a more ample relief on the part of the State than they have hitherto enjoyed.

The sickness insurance law of Germany passed in June, 1883, the accident insurance law in July, 1890, and the old-age and invalidity insurance law in July, 1899. Kaiser Wilhelm II., present ruler of Germany, has earnestly seconded and furthered the purpose of his Imperial grandfather, and, as a consequence, while nealy half of Germany's 52,000,000 of population are eligible, the benefits and the cost of administration of the funds now fall alike on the beneficiaries and other citizens of the Empire. The total receipts for the organization at the end of last year exceeded $2,000,000,000, and the yearly receipts are in excess of $150,000,000. To show the proportions, it is noted that in the period from 1885 to 1903, 4,018,134,807 marks were paid in compensation, and of these 1,885,920,210 marks were raised by the employers, 1,838,214,597 by the insured, and 294,000,000 paid by the Empire. (A German mark is equivalent to 24 8-10 cents in American money.)

In Germany the expense of administration is being steadily decreased, and amounts now to so small a proportion of the total that criticism as to expense is practically unknown. There is criticism in Germany concerning the amount of the old-age pension, and already there are plans on foot to disarm such criticism and secure better results, by increasing the amounts paid weekly by employers and employed and by augmenting materially the governmental contribution. As it is now, men pay from 6 to 15 cents per week, and at the age of seventy obtain pensions ranging from $27.50 to $60 per annum. It is believed that ere long these amounts will be practically doubled, and that the retiring or pension-receiving age will be lowered from seventy to sixty-five years.

The German plan, though probably inapplicable here, is indubitably a success in the German Empire, and in many of its features furnishes an admirable model for other governments. That example will be followed, in Europ least, is shown by the fact that in the French Assembly, by a vote of to 3, passed a law providing for aid old people. The French idea is to se annuities for the elderly in humble cumstances by a single payment in earlier years of life, or by a series of payments throug the years of labor. Even Russia has made provisio insurance by the State, the business being entruste the governmental savings banks. In Russia, the tal out of insurance for old age or invalidity is made gatory upon the employees of government railways, premiums are deducted from monthly salaries.

The Hon. Frank A. Vanderlip, formerly assis Secretary of the United States Treasury, and now V President of the National City Bank of New York, came interested in the subject of old-age pensions w in the banking business in Chicago, and was one of promoters and developers of the system in succes practice in the First National of that city. Whe came to Washington, he became even more deeply terested in the subject, and his interest waxes ra than wanes, now that he is in the very strongest fi cial current known to the world.

To Mr. Vanderlip the writer went for exposition comment. Mr. Vanderlip takes it for granted that sane, sensible, or patriotic citizen objects to the p ciple of old-age pensions. He points out that to- there is no such thing as industrial independence sible for a working man; new industrial condit make it necessary that he should work with oth become subject to regulations in common with his lows, and give up, in exchange for the comforts of which are now his, a measure of his industrial in pendence. As Mr. Vanderlip said:

"So long as the individual can actually fill his p in the new order of affairs, his condition shows g improvement in many respects. The moment he out of harmony with the whirl of the industrial mach the moment sickness overtakes or accident injures h the moment old age reduces his power to keep step the music of industrial progress, that moment his co tion is likely to become far more unfortunate t would have been the case under similar circumstan in earlier times.

"Business men clearly recognize a changed order affairs in industrial and commercial life; they know t they must co-operate with their fellows, share th risks, help to sustain them in misfortune. They, t have lost, as has the working man, a measure of dustrial independence. All political economists note changed conditions between employer and ployed, changed relations between the State and citizen. The reason why thoughtful business men interested in the subject of working men's pensions is be found in the fundamental change going on in dustrial affairs. Our interests as Americans logica follows the evolution of economic laws, and a sec foundation for judgment in regard to pensions for wo ing men can be found in analysis of economic conditio and not in sentimental or charitable ebulitions."

Mr. Vanderlip has made a careful study of the G man system of old-age pensioning, and has for it b admiration and criticism. He recognizes that there need for careful thought before any system should attached to our own body politic. In the pursuit his investigations, he corresponded with many Germ publicists and manufacturers, and was much interest in some of the replies received. For example, manager of one of the greatest interests in Prussia wro

> I think the general opinion in Germany is that in America creation of large funds under government control would ca great temptation for their misappropriation. Their selection distribution would be too dependent upon politics. This opin seems largely justified in view of the instances of maladminist tion that so many of your government departments have recen furnished. Collectively, as exhibited in the Government of y municipalities and of the State, you seem to us weak in economi and effective in business management and financial integrity.

Unfortunately, there is a deal of truth in this criticis Another correspondent, referred to by Mr. Vanderlip eminent in industrial and public life in Germany, sa that his nation can conscientiously recommend the intr duction of the system of workmen's insurance into oth countries, but so far as the United States is concerne does not see any great necessity therefor. He poin out that wages are higher in America, and workm better capable of providing for their future, and then makes this interesting comment:

> There is no doubt that the introduction of compulsory insuran would produce a social line of demarcation between those who obliged to submit to the law and those who are exempt, and doubt if the people of America would look upon such a social clas fication with favor. It cannot be denied that with the Germ system there is a certain amount of tutelage which the Americ

USHING THE "BUFORD'S" CARGO

One of "The Christian Herald" China Relief Trains of Twenty-five Cars Starting from Minneapolis with One Thousand Tons of Flour

UESDAY next, April 30, will be a memorable day for all who have been associated with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the China Famine Relief work. On that day, the transport Buford, loaded her precious cargo of life-giving food, and flying CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief flag, will sail from San ncisco for China. During the past week great trains, ily laden with hundreds of thousands of sacks of , have been arriving at the Golden Gate city. n Minneapolis came two long trains, each loaded 30,000 quarter-barrel sacks. Trains from Seattle other milling cities in Washington and Oregon ught equally big loads. As fast as it arrives, the r is being placed in the transport's capacious hold. loading will be completed this week.

n "sailing day," a special farewell religious service be held on the Buford, by special permission of the r Department, granted through Quartermaster-neral Humphrey, U.S.A. It is expected that many able guests will attend, and several interesting and piring addresses will be delivered. The Rev. Frank Witt Talmage will come from Los Angeles to make a ewell address on behalf of the contributors to THE RISTIAN HERALD Fund and to invoke the divine ssing upon the good ship, her officers, crew and go. The other speakers will probably include mbers of Congress, representatives of the Red Cross l leading pastors of San Francisco. The service will lude a responsive reading, the singing of appropriate mns, led by a cornetist, and the "blessing of the go" by Dr. Talmage.

That the Buford will arrive at a most opportune season the time of greatest need—is shown by the following blegram from the editor of the North China News:

"SHANGHAI.

"Approaching period of severest pinch. Authenti-ted instances of corpses having been exhumed for nnibalism. Foreign relief working effectively and aintaining whole districts until harvest."

As the Buford is a comparatively swift steamer, she ll probably reach Chinkiang by June 1, and her rgo, which will doubtless be the means of saving hun-eds of thousands of lives, will be distributed through t all the famine districts as rapidly as possible.

A correspondent of the North China News and erald writes from Suchien-ku, under date of March 5:

"The light in the famine area burns lower; the ater-logged craft sinks deeper, and hope grows dimmer. ere must be an enormous amount of grain imported d official money given, or—delay simply spells death.

"The flour from foreign mills is greatly appreciated. saw a man buy two pounds of it to-day to carry nety li to give his father 'a taste of flour.' Since e have begun to give out the relief flour here, men ngregate around our doors and mutely look for help, nich they know we dare not give them there. The eets of the town at night are well described in Long-llow's lines:

"Oh the wailing of the children!
Oh the anguish of the women!
. . . . . .
And the hungry stars in heaven
Like the eyes of wolves glare at them."

The Rev. W. Nelson Bitton, who has lately com-eted an extensive tour of the famine districts, gives is realistic description of his experiences:

"In Tsingkiangpu it is with difficulty that a foreigner akes his way along the pathways; starving women and ildren bar his progress by throwing themselves in the ay and clutching at his clothes in the hope of help. The country district to the northeast of this place is bare of food. Towards the region of Antung, in almost every house that is visited, the pounded bark of trees, and sweet potato leaves made into a most repulsive dark green gruel, are the only evidences of food to be seen.

"The prevailing tint that is seen on the faces of the people is an ashy black, as though they were sick negroes, and their cheeks and eyelids are puffed as if with dropsy. When famine fever gets its hold—and it is already present—and the wet weather of spring brings on the typhus that only the clear cold is now holding at bay, these people will die like flies.

"It is little short of heart-breaking to watch the tiny children and to hear the wail of the youngsters that comes from every house. Fullgrown men who went down on their hands and knees to appeal for help were, in instances, too weak to rise again, and at the distribution of the flour in one of the out-stations, men, whose lives have been lived in the fields, were staggering under twenty pounds of flour." He adds:

On my return journey down the canal, from Huaian to Yangchou, nearly three days' journey, I met an incessant stream of refugees trekking northward by boat and on foot from the southern camps. We estimated those we met (part of the number) at forty thousand. The condition of many of them was pitiable. If rain comes and the roads return to their native mud, what then? Those wheelbarrows—on which are placed the poor little children and the bamboo mat under which the family must sleep at night, and the necessary cook-pan—driven by weakened men, aided by weaker children or small-footed women, tugging at ropes attached to the barrow, will not make ten miles a day, and then what of their food? Thousands will be in the position of one poor desperate woman whom I found at one spot wailing by the wayside, left to perish by her husband, with two helpless little children. This enormous mass of fugitive people foreign relief cannot touch. They must be left to perish unless the officials save them. But, in the districts of the country where the depots under foreign direction have opened, there are thousands of families who stayed at home to perish, and in their extremity have found in the result of the charity gathered in Shanghai a welcome means of rescue and a herald of unexpected life.

U. S. Consul-General Rodgers, writing from Shanghai, March 2, to the State Department at Washington, says:

"As to the present state of affairs in the Kianpeh region it can only be said that a goodly portion of the people are starving, the Chinese officials seem powerless to afford general relief, and the charity of the foreign relief committees, extended through their agents, Chinese as well as foreigners, will only serve a comparatively small number. This condition will undoubtedly last till June, and by that time there will be a very large loss of life. Just how great it will be no one can say. . . The mortality cannot fail to be of sufficient proportions to shock the world. Whether half a million or one or two million die, will probably never be known definitely, even to the Chinese."

A letter from Nanking points out that the distribution of government doles has ceased and the refugees collected there have been sent back to their homes with small final gifts, which means inevitable starvation. A local committee of missionaries has found and will continue to find employment on relief work for 250 men, which is equal to providing for 1,250 people.

In one of the Suchien districts, since the arrival of small consignments of American foodstuffs, a "flour line" has been established and some 3,000 families are being helped. About 2,500 quarter sacks of flour were received. A total of over 6,000 persons are being kept alive.

This district is a very fair illustration of many others. The Huaian Committee is using 16,300 bags of flour in its relief work and can use twice as many to advantage in saving lives. The Tsingkiangpu Committee is giving help to thousands of natives, and has already used 11,245 bags of flour, besides other foods. One of the latter committee reports these incidents:

The condition of things is fearful. I saw two dead bodies in the fields as I approached the town. One had dropped as he was begging from one hamlet to another, and, unable to rise, died there. The body was unburied for three days. We had it interred. In four out of five houses there is sickness; often several members of the same family. People are eating bark of trees, roots, stalks of the tobacco plant and dried leaves, and are praying for the sap to rise faster in the trees and for any green things to grow. The change of color is seen on the faces of the people, and the swelling of the features which shows an advanced stage of starvation. The people look eagerly for relief. In one hamlet of eight houses I counted five houses dismantled. I was told yesterday by a gentleman that a child was eaten three days before This I cannot confirm and hope it is only a rumor.

Rev. T. F. McCrea, of the Missionary Committee at Chinkiang, writes:

"Great multitudes of poor, patient peasants are starving, and the Foreign Relief Committees are doing what they can to supplement the feeble efforts of the government to save life. The officials are now rendering valuable assistance in protecting us in our efforts. The situation of millions of people is pitiable in the extreme. Great numbers of children, being the weakest, are dying. As one missionary expressed it: 'For the poor, this will be the hardest year in their lives, with great multitudes perishing.'

"It is marvelous how these people, inured through centuries of poverty to suffering, patiently resign themselves to death. Where other peoples, so misgoverned, would have been in hottest rebellion, they quietly say: 'It is the will of heaven,' and starve. But we doubt if even the patient Chinese will quietly submit to the horrible sufferings that await them during the next three months. Already robbery and brigandage are rife, and at Yangchow the refugees have once or twice rioted against the officials, for attempting to send them back to their homes in the famine area."

At Antung, the Relief Committee is employing sixteen hundred famine sufferers, who support two thousand families. In addition, five hundred and sixty-four families are receiving relief.

The latest cablegram from the editor of the North China News is as follows:

"April 11.

"KLOPSCH, New York: Relief work proceeding at highest pressure. 400,000 are now recipients foreign relief. Must provide food until June. Officials and gentry co-operating well."

In Chekiang Province, famine riots are reported and there have been serious disturbances at Shaohsing and Hsiang-shanshien. Even as far south as Tungkuan, near Canton, great distress is reported and hungry mobs have surrounded the grain shops. Order has been preserved with difficulty by the use of troops.

In view of the unexpected spread of the famine, relief arrangements are now assuming much more extensive proportions. It is pointed out that if food were available, launches could be put into commission to tow native boats to Suchien and even beyond, so that within a short time, relief would reach nearly all the centres of suffering in North Kiangsu. This, however, owing to the present scarcity, can hardly be expected to take place before the arrival of the famine relief ship Buford.

The Hope of the World

ONE of the most remarkable features of the controversy now agitating religious circles here and in England is the essential unity between the two parties in a vital doctrine of the Christian faith. The orthodox believer is assailing the new theology and denouncing it as pantheism. He declares that the new teaching, that insists on the immanence of God as its cardinal doctrine, and sees God in everything, is little different from the old pantheism that robbed him of personality and represented him as mere force. It is contended that if God is everywhere and in everything and is manifested in every human being, as the advocates of the new theology aver, then we cannot realize his identity or see in him a Being ruling, guiding, loving and redeeming the human race. Leaving the scholars and metaphysicians to carry on the dispute to their own satisfaction, if not to the edification of the world, it is interesting to note how dear to every true Christian is the doctrine out of which this question has grown and which neither side can afford to ignore.

The one essential hope for the human race is that of the presence of Christ in the believer. That God will dwell in the man who yields himself to his will, is the sole dependence of the Christian for attaining the God-like in character. Jesus continually reiterated the promise that his nature would be imparted to the believer. As he manifested the Father to the world, so his followers to the end of time were to manifest him to the world, and thus God would be seen of men; and at the final culmination Jesus said: "Ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." Long before, Solomon had caught a glimpse of this great truth and had declared that "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." The light in the spirit of man is not its own, but is lighted of God; and the world sees it and learns dimly and feebly what God is. But it was not until Christ came and became one with humanity, united as the vine and its branches, that the truth was made plain. It is Christ's life in the believer that supports him, that enables him to resist temptation, and that eventually transforms him into the same image. The doctrine of the indwelling Christ is the consolation and inspiration of the believer and the pledge of his future triumph. He knows that he is "the temple of the Holy Spirit," and that the strength in which he fights his battles is not his own, but comes from the divine nature that Christ has implanted within him. That doctrine is one to be held fast, even though men abuse it and call it by hard names, for it is the one and only hope of the redemption and elevation of the race.

Turn on the Searchlight

IT is gratifying to observe how effectively the war on quacks and nostrums is being waged by a considerable section of the influential magazines and weeklies. Many an ancient "cure-all" has been stripped of its undeserved reputation and ruthlessly exposed, and not a few have been practically wiped out of existence by the strong searchlight of the printing press. Collier's has led in this meritorious crusade for the public welfare, and has borne well the brunt of the first attack, although it has been ably seconded by other publications. Long before the present movement began, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shut out all quackery and empiricism from its pages, and it may be regarded therefore as somewhat of a pioneer in this field, although the honors of aggressive conflict belong to others.

There is another evil, a species of quackery of a different sort, to the dangerous existence of which we are glad to see some of our contemporaries are becoming thoroughly awake. The stock jobbing and speculative fraud is everywhere rampant these days. One can hardly pick up a newspaper which does not advertise, in vociferous type, wildcat schemes, offering the credulous public an opportunity for sudden wealth. Almost every mail brings to this office letters from readers inquiring concerning some alluring enterprise, a trifling investment in whose worthless stock is sure to net them fabulous revenues, although the shares cost next to nothing. It is difficult to understand how even the simplest could be gulled by such transparent trickery; yet the victims of "enterprises" of this class are legion. They are mainly the middle-class and the thrifty poor, who can least afford to be victimized.

If a reasonable test were applied to doubtful investment schemes before granting them the benefit of publicity, a large majority would fail. To be deprived of the privilege of spreading their net through the newspapers would be an effective quietus. If, in addition, the conductors of such schemes were also compelled to qualify by examination before being allowed to use the mails, the safeguard would be an admirable one, and far better than the present method, which is to investigate after the evil has been accomplished and when the injury inflicted upon thousands of unprotected victims is beyond repair.

Religion and Morals

DOUBTLESS the conclusion of the Thaw trial has already furnished the theme for many a sermon in pulpits of all denominations. Pastors have dwelt warningly on the disclosures of immorality in high life, the temptations that beset young women, the perils of a theatrical career, the evils of promiscuous acquaintanceships and the irredeemable wickedness of New York, especially after dark. But to those who have noted closely the progress of the case, there is one fact that stands out in strong relief: not one of the trio of principals appears to have had any fixed religious convictions, or any conception of the spiritual meaning and purpose of life. They seem to have lived for self, for pleasure, for the indulgence of the day and the hour.

Whether this was due to neglect of early religious training, or to some unfortunate lack of opportunity, is of little moment now. Yet two at least had wealth, social position, and all the material advantages heart could wish. Like ships helmless and anchorless, they drifted about, blown hither and thither by every wind of passion. Like many other unregulated lives, they went on the rocks at last.

What a lesson is here taught, especially to the young. Neither education nor riches can give assurance of real happiness or of a beneficent life. The only protection from sin and disaster that has ever been found efficacious is the religion of Jesus Christ, which, without taking men out of the world, keeps them from the evil.

An Unfortunate Change

IN one of New York's pulpits recently a clergyman spoke of the change that had come over our industrial and commercial life in regard to the position occupied by men who held such positions as clerks, cashiers, bookkeepers, and others, who have to spend even more time in preparation for their life's work and get so little for it. A few years ago, fifteen or twenty, perhaps, these same men, if bright and industrious, had the incentive offered by the opportunity to rise to higher position, higher salary, and even a partnership in the firm for whose interests they were giving the best years of their lives. That it is not so to-day is realized not only by the clergyman referred to, but by all whose lives come into daily contact with the great class of our population that has no millions at its disposal, nor on the other hand is laboring with pick and shovel for its daily bread.

More and more our large firms are becoming close corporations, in which one can only have an interest by having a relationship to the family of the owner or owners, or by buying stock. The ownership of almost any separate business has now become "a rich man's game." Andrew Carnegie started his great career as an ironmaster with a capital of about six thousand dollars. If he were to start out to-day to do the same thing he would find that the amount would not pay one-tenth of the price of the steam crane to lift the iron from the cars.

Those that started years ago and became successful cannot understand that things are getting down to the close competition of the older countries of Europe, that this is no longer a new country, and that the doors of opportunity in many directions are closing, if not closed already. In other words, the man who starts in business to-day, whatever his age, has to work twice as hard and be twice as fortunate as his predecessor, who was successful in the bonanza days, in order to keep anywhere near the front.

Those at the bottom, whose destinies are regulated by organization, are getting more and more for their labor, as is also the man at the top. For the numberless thousands, educated men though they be, that stand between the two extremes, the problem is difficult, and one that should be solved soon, if that large part of our population is not ground out of existence between the upper and the nether millstones. Organization is not possible nor advisable. What they shall do in th ing years with the increased cost of living, is a q to which no one has yet advanced an answer.

Old-Age Pensions

IT is presumable that no intelligent and warm-h reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD doubts worthy old age should be pensioned, or that pr should be made by which habits of weekly or m economy should be fostered; that the corporation way or business, should be interested in the quest providing for its faithful servitors; or that the g ment could well afford to bear a reasonable perce of the burden of old age or invalid pensioners, cially in view of the fact that this is not only the country in the world, but presumably the most cratic, and with the further truth that hencefo our pension list will appreciably decrease each from the $138,000,000 of current expenditure to a paratively few millions at the close of the next g tion.

Jamestown's Exposition

THIS week the fruit of four years' planning and hard work comes to maturity in the opening of the Jamestown Tercentenary Exposition. It was right that such an event as that of the nting of the first English settlement in the New World uld not be overlooked among our historical celebra- is. Though the Jamestown settlement in 1607 had less influence on our national life than the Puritan tlement of 1620, it has the claim of priority, and by t claim alone is entitled to Tercentennial celebration. e celebration has been arranged with exquisite taste. e Exposition is not a mere show of material products, care has been taken to preserve its historic idea. e scene was the beginning of English life on this conti- nt. There the first marriage of English people took ce; there occurred the birth of the first Anglo-Amer- n; there the first legislative body assembled; and in t neighborhood occurred some of the most important ttles that liberated the country from the English yoke. ese facts give historic interest to the celebration, and itors will be reminded of them in the exhibits. The nagers have endeavored to show not only the nation's present wealth and prosperity, but the stages in the long and toilsome journey by which in three hundred years it has been attained. We have already published (Jan. 30, 1907) a full description of the plans of the Exposition, which have been carefully executed. The hopes then expressed have been fully realized. Our own States have done themselves justice by buildings and exhibits, and foreign countries have participated in an unusual degree. The National Government, too, has lent its aid, and has contributed materially by its naval and military features to the success of the exposition. Looking back to that feeble beginning of civilization here three hundred years ago, and contemplating the present power and influence of this great nation, the Christian visitor may well ex- claim:

What hath God wrought! (Num. 23: 23.)

A Girl's Victory

An interesting examination took place in a hospital in Williamsburg, N. Y., recently. Four internes were needed and there were thirty-six applications for the positions. The office is valuable not only as certifying to the ability of the appointee, but for the experience it affords in future practice. The young physician learns in that office how to deal quickly and effectively with difficult cases and thus acquires that most essential of all professional gifts, self-reliance. The position is therefore eagerly sought, as a beginning to general prac- tice. One only of the thirty-six applicants for these appointments was a girl, a student of Cornell University, Mary Merritt Crawford by name. It was a severe ordeal for her to answer in writing the questions of the seven examiners, and still more severe the ordeal of an- swering orally the questions that each of the seven put to her after the written examination was complete. Miss Crawford passed through both bravely, but she was not sanguine of success, for she remembered that she was competing with thirty-five men, just as anxious as her- self to gain the coveted honor. It was therefore a pleasant surprise for her when she was notified that one of the four appointments had been conferred upon her. Hard study and faithful assiduity had won their reward in spite of her youth and sex. It speaks well for the examiners that they did not allow the prejudice against women in the professions to operate against her, but gave her the honor she had fairly won by her intelli- gence. They thus obeyed the wise king's injunction:

Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates (Prov. 31: 31).

Cross-Marked Preachers

A press dispatch from Oskaloosa, Iowa, describes the inauguration of a new crusade. In a university of that city a professor has issued a call for volunteers to follow him in preaching the Gospel far and wide. He has burned into his forehead with acid a cross one and a half inches long as a sign of the mission he has undertaken. He calls for one hundred and forty-four thousand volun- teers to begin the crusade of the twentieth century. He demands of each of them that they mark their foreheads with the cross as he has done, and that they set out to preach without purse or scrip. He proposes to begin the mission in Kansas, and to proceed thence to other States. The faculty of his university have examined his principles and plans and have marked their disapproval of them by dismissing him from his chair in the university. The scarifying of the brow seems to be after the pattern of the Pharisees whom our Lord condemned for ostentation. Neither the professor nor his followers are likely to preach any more effectively for it. He evidently does not obey the apostolic injunction:

He is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart in the spirit and not in the letter (Rom. 2: 29).

A Consecrated Foundling

A janitor of a row of buildings in Eighth Avenue, New York, found one night last week an infant in one of the hallways of the buildings. As the night was very cold and the baby had no clothing except a blanket around it, he summoned an ambulance from the nearest hospital. Ordinarily he would have taken it to the local police sta- tion, but he believed that unless it had immediate medical attention it would die. An ambulance speedily arrived from the J. Hood Wright hospital and the doctor con- firmed the janitor's opinion. He said the child could not be more than a few hours old and was at that moment in imminent peril of death. He hurried with it to the hospital where doctors and nurses worked over it all night. In the morning the doctor said the child was out of danger. It was a pretty little boy with fine blue eyes. Doctors and nurses took a deep interest in the little crea- ture and determined to adopt him if he is not claimed. The child was named J. Hood Wright after the founder of the hospital and the staff have pledged themselves to his support. He is to be cared for and educated at their expense, and is to be trained to be a physician. Such kindness to the babe entails on him, if he lives, an obli- gation to fulfil the wishes of his benefactors. An infi- nitely greater obligation lies on the Christian whose life was purchased for him at a great price.

He died for all that they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto Him who died for them (II. Cor. 5. 15).

An Egg Antidote

The gratification of a child's Easter fancy had a happy result this year in New York. The child wanted a cele- bration all her own, and the mother determined to please her. She bought a number of eggs with some dye for coloring them. Preparations were being made for the operation, when the father came in. He complained of severe indigestion and went to a closet where remedies were kept. He poured out a dose and drank it, but he had made a mistake. It was iodine, and his cries rang through the house. A policeman who was passing called an ambulance and went into the house to ascertain the cause of the trouble. He knew something of poisons and their antidotes, and seizing the child's Easter eggs, he beat them up and forced them down the sufferer's throat. When the ambulance came, the doctor said that the policeman's act had probably saved the man's life. How thankful the mother must have been that in pleas- ing her child she had provided the means of saving her husband's life. It is not the first time that a kind act has proved an unexpected blessing.

Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days (Eccles. 11: 1).

A Steamer's Appeal

News of a steamer's mishap came to New York a few days ago. The Arapahoe, of the Clyde Line, on her way from Jacksonville, Fla., to New York, broke her pro- peller while in the vicinity of Winter Quarter Shoals. The captain, realizing his helplessness, cast about for assistance. He calculated where the Apache, the sister ship of the same line, going south, must be, and be- gan calling to her by wireless telegraphy. In a short time he received the answering signal, and communicated the news of his disaster. The Apache promptly left her course and went to the help of the disabled steamer. She passed a hawser to her, and towed her toward the Dela- ware coast. As the two vessels passed Five Fathom Bank the hawser parted and the steamers came to anchor. From that point a message was sent by wireless to the Company's office in New York. The Port Super- intendent immediately set out with a tug to the assist- ance of the disabled vessel, and will tow it to New York. In time past such an accident would have involved delay and intense anxiety, and possibly the loss of the ship. How much distress would have been saved all these years had we known that the power existed of a vessel in diffi- culty notifying her owners of her need of help. It would have often been used, though even now that power, which is unfailing, that men have at command, of appeal- ing to God in trials of every kind, is used by comparatively few persons.

I cried unto God with my voice and he gave ear unto me: in the day of my trouble I sought the Lord (Ps. 77: 1, 2).

THE JAMESTOWN TERCENTENARY EXPOSITION TO BE OPENED THIS WEEK

God's Opportunity

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE great department store was thronged with shoppers. New York seems generally full to the overflow, yet there are seasons when the town has a peculiar aspect of gaiety, and Broadway, in its bright length, always cosmopolitan, is more than ever a street of sharp contrasts. There were many strangers in town on the sweet April day that brought together two women whose lot in life was so widely diverse, that only God's opportunity could have made them clasp hands. Mrs. Renwick had been selecting pretty things for her daughter, whose coming out was to follow her graduation in June. After that event, mother and daughter were to spend a summer abroad. Hobart Renwick, prosperous and sagacious, was so devoted to business that he seldom crossed the Atlantic except for a flying trip, but with the usual generosity of the American husband, he liked to have his dear ones enjoy themselves on either side of the ocean, and was never heard to complain of solitude if his wife elected to travel. His pride in her and in their beautiful daughter Amy was unbounded, and, so far as he could manage it, not even a crumpled roseleaf was ever permitted to disturb their peace.

Feeling a little tired, and remembering one or two notes that ought to be posted immediately, Mrs. Renwick decided to take her luncheon downtown. She had finished her errands in the store, and finding a little unoccupied table in the luxurious rooms set apart for the accommodation of women who wish to rest or write, she seated herself and began her task. Presently her attention was arrested. She hardly knew how. It was almost as if a touch had fallen on her shoulder. She glanced up, but she was as much alone in the crowd of well-dressed people who passed to and fro as if she had been in a desert. She resumed her writing. Again came the slight, almost phantom touch on her shoulder. This time she glanced around the room as if inquiring whether any one in it had dared to play her a trick. She was still alone, but now her eyes were caught by a little figure in the corner, a figure quite alien in appearance to the moving panorama in its neighborhood. A little old woman, quaint and shabby, with a thin, sleazy black frock, a rusty cape, a bonnet the worse for wear, shoes out at the toes, and no gloves on the hands crossed in the lap, sat there in a rockingchair wrapped in a deep sleep.

Mrs. Renwick noted the tokens of extreme poverty in every detail of the dress, and her eyes filled with tears as she saw the thin white hair, the hollow cheeks and the purple shadows beneath the closed eyes of the old woman. Her heart was very tender to old age, and she had never turned a deaf ear to the appeal of want and distress. On the boards to which she belonged it was known that Clara Renwick was in favor of planning and carrying out liberal things, and in every charity in which she had a share, she preferred to do personal work and to care for the individual.

She finished and sealed her last note. Again glancing toward the corner where the little old woman slept in her chair, unconscious that she was attracting the gaze of the curious or sympathetic, she saw that the latter had not changed her position a hair's breadth. For an instant she had a mental conflict: should she go on her way or should she speak to that sleeper? She decided that she must speak, even though in doing so she might seem a trifle conspicuous.

A moment later it was the turn of the little old woman to feel a gentle touch, not on her shoulder, but on one of her weary hands. The tale of weariness is told by hands as it is not told by faces. The ungloved hands that Mrs. Renwick saw were red and swollen, as if most of their work were scrubbing and scouring, and their broken nails and enlarged joints were eloquent of the fact that by their means their owner's soul and body had been kept in company. Yet there was something about them that made Mrs. Renwick aware that once, perhaps long ago, they had been soft and white, unstained and symmetrical, the hands of a lady.

Her touch was very light, but the old woman woke with a frightened start.

"I beg your pardon," she said, "I only sat down for a moment. I am going right on." Evidently she felt that some one in authority had noticed her, and that the intimation was to send her away.

"I fear," said Mrs. Renwick, very gently, "that you are not quite well. Is anything the matter?"

"Oh, no," replied the other, "I am perfectly well. I was a little tired and it was warm here, so I sat down and fell asleep. I am going right away. Do not let me bother you."

Mrs. Renwick laid a detaining hand on the thin arm as the older woman attempted to rise.

"Her touch was very light———"

"It is almost time for luncheon," she said, "and these first warm days bring spring fever with them. I am sure you will feel a great deal better if you will come with me and have a cup of tea and something nice to eat."

A blush rose in the withered cheek. Surprise and something like dismay came into the faded eyes.

"I am not dressed like you," she said. "I am not fit to go where all the richly dressed ladies are. Besides, I am not hungry."

"One often feels that way," said Mrs. Renwick, "not exactly hungry, but able to eat a little if one does not have to cook it. You come with me. Don't think about your dress. It is all right. I am sure you will feel rested and stronger if you will do as I say."

Thus persuaded, the little old lady went timidly into the restaurant with her new friend. As they sat by a window, they dropped into womanly chat over the delicious food that Mrs. Renwick ordered. Altho her guest had said she was not hungry, she ate v the appetite of one whose meals had been sparing far apart. As they talked Mrs. Renwick drew fr her the story of her life, a common story enough. had come to the great city from a country home ye ago, had for a while been able to support herself v comfortably, until her strength had given out with creasing age; growing a little deaf and losing sc portion of her sight she had been less able to comp in the labor market where there were thousands youn and better equipped than she. One by one her peo at home had died, and now she was alone in the wo She had no money except what she earned by ill-p toil in scrubbing offices. She told Mrs. Renwick t she worked at a small weekly wage for a man w cleaned large buildings by contract, and that lately had been ill and had lost the price of a fortnight's w —a serious loss indeed.

"I little thought," she added, "long when I was a pupil in Miss Warden's sch at Salisbury, that I should ever come scrubbing floors in my old age. Anyw it is honest work."

"Were you a pupil in Miss Warde school in your girlhood?" asked M Renwick, gazing with new and eager tentness into the wrinkled face before h "When was it, pray, and what is y name?"

"It was in 1852," was the answer, "a I am Betty Lester now as I was then."

"Betty Lester! and do you remem Margaret MacIlvane?"

"Remember Margaret! how could I f get her? She was the sweetest girl w ever stepped, and she was my seat-m and chum."

"She is my mother," said Mrs. Renwi

"Your mother? You are Margare daughter? Oh, my dear, my dear! T me, is Margaret living?"

"Yes, indeed; and how glad she will to meet you again! When I was a lit thing she used to tell me stories abo you, and I was taught to call you Au Betty. Mother used to speak about t time when scarlet fever broke out in M Warden's school and the school bei closed, she went to spend a month wi you, so that her long journey to the nor was saved her. Why, dear Miss Leste or Aunt Betty, as I like better to c you, I have heard so much of your o home with the broad porch and the whi pillars, the fig trees and the persimmon that I know exactly how it looked in t peaceful days before the war. How c it have happened that you and moth lost each other so completely, and th you could be in the same city with me a with her and be in straits, and we not fi it out?"

"The war changed everything," said t old lady, "and I could not beg. I pa my last room rent this morning and I ha just precisely fifteen cents left in my purs I knew where that would get me a dece night's lodging and a breakfast to-morrow. I saw n farther ahead than that. I had reached the last e tremity, and I thought that maybe God meant to tak me home to my dear ones."

"It was God's opportunity," said Mrs. Renwick "He put it in my mind to stay here to-day, write m letters and take my lunch, a thing I seldom do, awa from home. Come, Aunt Betty, you are going hom with me, but first I have an errand or two in th store."

Mrs. Renwick stopped here and there at a counte and gave some rapid orders. Then drawing the han of her charge through her arm, she piloted her to th street, where she called a hansom and speedily she an her friend were whirling uptown.

A few days later, no one would have recognized in the little old lady, dressed in a soft gray wool, wit

A NEW SERIAL STORY WRITTEN EXPRESSLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

CHAPTER V

Spite of the kind-hearted efforts of Mrs. McGinnis, Margaret was set to work that very day. First, however, she was told in the faded blue dress, much to her surprise—and not quite to her pleasure. She tried to be politely interested, nevertheless, when Mrs. McGinnis explained that it was her own little girl's dress and that she wanted Margaret to have it. Margaret said that the dress was "very nice, thank you," but she hovered all the while where her own mother.

True to his word Jack McGinnis "spoke" to Sullivan. He met the man that morning on the way from the pawnshop, and Sullivan expressed himself as very glad to take on another kid."

Sullivan lived in another attic room just around the corner. It was a bigger room, to be sure; but that was well, for there were so many, many people in it. First there was Mrs. Sullivan on a bed in the corner. She was not good for much—so Sullivan said—and the baby certainly was a sad loss. Still, there were times when a cough would give the sick woman just enough respite to enable her to baste together a pair of trousers or a coat; and the baby, of course, would grow. Then there were the other thin-faced, hollow-chested little Sullivans—they could work, all seven of them, even down to the little four-year-old (she could pull bastings); and even in his children, Sullivan was not a little disappointed. They seemed to be growing too fast in the footsteps of their mother; and already the eldest girl had hired away twice at her work.

All these, together with Sullivan, lived in the attic room both day and night; and during the day there were still others present, men, women, boys and girls, perched on broken chairs and boxes, or sitting Turk-fashion on the floor—for how else could Sullivan send out the great piles of finished garments every night? The few cents he paid for the children's labor were greedily welcomed by the parents, and he had no trouble in keeping the room as full of little helpers as he pleased—and he pleased to keep it very full indeed, for the more workers he had, the more money and leisure there followed for himself.

It was to this room that Margaret was introduced. Jack McGinnis himself brought her, and said that he would call for her—and for her wages—at night. Then he turned and hurried away down to Little Mike's.

Margaret looked about her with wonder-filled eyes. McGinnis had told her that she was going to be taken where there were lots of little boys and girls, and that she might play with them all day. To Margaret it was a very strange-looking playroom; still she did not wish to be impolite, so she smiled and said, "Thank you," when Sullivan led her to a small box for a seat and handed her a needle all threaded.

Sullivan laughed at the "thank you," and winked at a man over in the corner; then he thrust into Margaret's lap a great pair of trousers and handed her a little box of buttons.

"Here, show the kid," he snapped to a big girl at Margaret's side.

"Oh, I know!" cried Margaret, gleefully. "I've played this before."

"Huh?" returned Sullivan, in some surprise. "Oh, ye have, have ye?"

"Yes. It's stringing buttons. I like that; but are they all—all black buttons? I—I should prefer other ones, if you have them."

"Margaret gazed up with round eyes of wonder"

Sullivan swore under his breath; then he said a few sharp words to the girl at Margaret's side.

"Look a-here," he added sternly to Margaret herself, "you'll find you don't string but one at a time. Do ye hear? One at a time!"

With flushed cheek and trembling hands Margaret set to work, and tried to do as she was bid; but the thread knotted and finally broke, and the tiny holes in the button seemed almost impossible to find. At last, however, the task was accomplished, and Margaret viewed with no little pride her handiwork. Confident now of her proficiency, she politely declined any further help from the big girl, and set about sewing on the next button alone.

It was just here, however, that Margaret came to grief. Supposing that to secure the button fast to the cloth was success enough in itself, she paid scant attention to location; the result being that the next button she held up in triumph was found to be adorning the left trouser-leg a little above the hem.

Sullivan swore again—this time not under his breath.

"Look a-here," he snarled, "them buttons are ter be sewed on where this girl tells ye to. Do ye hear? Now, mind! No more foolin'!"

Margaret gazed up at the man with round eyes of wonder. This certainly was the most curious "playing" she had ever known. She was very sure, too, that she did not like it. She made up her mind that she would tell Mr. McGinnis that she did not care to play with these little boys and girls to-morrow. Very patiently, however, she picked up once more the needle, the thread, and the button—which the girl had ripped off—and set once again to work. But the thread knotted, the buttons dropped on the floor, and the needle pricked her fingers until a bright red drop splashed on the coarse cloth in her lap.

"I—I don't think I'll play any more, thank you, to-day," faltered Margaret then, trying very hard to remember that soldiers' daughters do not cry. And she tugged the heavy trousers across the room and laid them in Sullivan's lap.

"Eh? What?" demanded the man. Then he suddenly understood. "Oh, ye don't! Well, I reckon I've got a word or two myself ter say on that subject." And he picked up the work and dragged the child back to her seat.

It was not long then before Margaret understood—this was no game: in games one was not scowled at nor scolded if one did not play right! She did ask timidly if it was "that kindergarten place" that her mother said she was soon to go to; but the laugh that greeted her question hurt Margaret's dignity sorely, and after that she said but little, watching with frightened eyes those about her, and trying to do exactly as she was bid.

Margaret's first day as an employee was certainly not a success; but then the first day of five-year-olds seldom was. Sullivan, however, was not discouraged. He knew the second day would be better—and it was. When one knows that one's knuckles will be sharply rapped, one does not lose so many buttons nor tie so many knots in one's thread; and when one knows that one will be awakened with an angry word and a vigorous shake, one does not so readily fall asleep.

CHAPTER VI

THE long hospital ward was very quiet. A white-capped nurse at the far end was writing something on the card over one of the beds; and another one was rearranging a pillow under an aching head. Suddenly, there rang out a single word, incisive and full of anguished terror—"Margaret!"

The two nurses exchanged glances.

"Poor dear!" sighed one. "She's been quieter of late. I hoped she wouldn't have any more of those turns."

"So did I," said the other in a low voice, as she went quickly to the sufferer's bed. Once there, however, she started in amazement.

The beautiful, white-faced woman before her was sitting straight up in bed. There was no light of feverish delirium in the wide-open blue eyes, only terror and agonized questioning. At the first glance the nurse knew that she was looking straight into the eyes of a perfectly sane woman—a woman who for weeks had been the unsolved mystery of the hospital.

"Where am I? How did I come to be here?" demanded the woman, imperiously. "What have you done with Margaret?"

INTO STILL WATERS

"There, there, if you'll lie down," soothed the nurse, tremulously; but she could say no more.

"I can't lie down. I must know at once. Where is Margaret?"

"You have been ill, madam. You were injured," stammered the nurse. "You were brought here to the hospital, and—"

A sharp cry interrupted.

"Margaret! I left her in the station. It all comes back to me now. The dear child—she'll be so frightened! I must go to her at once. Quick—where are my clothes, please?"

"No, no, you are too ill! Madam, I beg of you!" cried the nurse, putting out two restraining hands.

"But I must. I—" Something in the nurse's face stayed the words on her lips. A new horror came to her eyes. "Nurse, how long have I been—here?" she breathed.

For an instant there was absolute silence. Then something entirely outside the nurse's control forced the words from her lips.

"Two months, madam."

Even as she spoke the tense muscles of the woman in her arms relaxed, and the long lashes swept the white cheeks. The woman had fainted.

Long before Mrs. Kendall was well enough to leave the hospital, the whole vast machinery of the city detective force was set in motion; but nowhere could there be found a trace of the yellow-haired little maid in the black silk coat. The great city seemed to have opened and swallowed her up.

The half-frantic mother was in despair, but at the earliest possible moment she took up the search herself. It seemed to her that she certainly would win, even though so many before her had failed.

She went first to the Grand Central Station, and forced herself to enter the waiting-room, though her eyes were blinded with tears, and though her knees shook under her so that she could scarcely stand. Not until she questioned the matron of the women's waiting-room did she find any one who had any recollection of a little yellow-haired, blue-eyed girl in a black silk coat sitting all alone.

"Yes, ma'am, I remember her well," said the matron, respectfully, "and a right pretty child she was, ma'am. I even spoke to her, and she answered up as pretty as you please that she was waiting for her mother."

"Yes, yes, the darling!" choked Mrs. Kendall behind her veil. "It must have been she. And then?"

"And then—why, there wasn't anything then, as I know of. You see, it seemed all straight to me, as long as she said she was waiting for her mother, and I left her. When I looked again—she wasn't there."

A low moan came from behind the black veil. For a moment no one spoke; then the matron began hesitatingly:

"There was a little scrap of paper with some writing on it found out in the big waiting-room about that time, and it was brought to me. I kept it 'cause it was such a queer little thing. It has just occurred to me that it might have been found that day your little girl was here, and maybe she wrote it. I'll get it, anyhow."

Half an hour later a slender, black-gowned woman walked out of the Grand Central Station with unsteady steps. The eyes behind the black veil were red with weeping; and one black-gloved hand held fast a scrap of brown paper on which had been half printed, half written, a note signed "yuer effeckshunate dorter Margaret."

"If only there were some clue to tell who the 'boy' is," moaned the grief-stricken mother that night as she paced her room in the hotel. "If only I knew whether he were good and kind! . . . And she was so hungry—the poor darling! yet she would not leave without a message to me. 'Twas so like her—so like her!"

There was no cessation in the search during the days that followed. There was not an institution in the city where a stray child might be taken, that was not visited by a sad-faced woman dressed in black who insisted upon personally interviewing every child that had been brought in during the last five months. Time and money were of no consequence, and the most elusive of clues was patiently followed until it was proven beyond a doubt to have no bearing on the case in hand. Not until there were no more clues to follow and no more ways to turn did Mrs. Kendall finally go back to the little town where Margaret had been born, and where stood the house with the great stone lions on either side of the steps.

CONTENTED LIVES*

THAT a contented life has a power cannot be denied, but its extent depends on the basis of the content. A man who has all the money he needs and is surrounded with luxury and is satisfied, is contented, but his content exercises no influence and has no power. It is different in lives that are poor and bare. A man who is contented, though he must do without many things that he would like to have, is the man whose life has power. Paul's own statement that he had "learned in whatsoever state he was, therewith to be content," gives the true secret of the power of contented life. It is that of a man who does not depend for the sources of his happiness on his circumstances. Such a man is enviable, a man to be admired. Though he be stripped of all his possessions, though he may lose his personal liberty and have to languish in prison, his strength and his happiness remain because they never came from his possessions.

Carlyle's well-known story of the ancient monk is a type of this kind of man. The monk was set to drudgery and he obeyed; he was appointed to work in which he delighted and he obeyed again; he was misjudged and put in prison and he made no complaint; he was made abbot of his convent, with abundant wealth, and he did not boast, but did his duty faithfully, as he had done it in poverty and in obscurity. His abbot declared he had never seen such a man, who could not be moved by favors or by frowns. We respect such a man as being great and independent of circumstances.

In this country we are disposed to place too high a value on wealth. It is always bad for a nation that has the habit of estimating everything by a money gauge. A man, we say, is worth so much. If he is worth no more than he possesses, he is a poor man. What is the man himself worth? What can he do? What does he know? What are his principles? These questions must be answered before we can say what he is worth. The value of a man is in his character and it sometimes happens that the man who is richest in money is poorest in character. It is when a man has a strong character, and draws his sources of happiness from his faith and his confidence in God, that he is able to say that in whatsoever state he is, he has learned to be content. Then he exerts an influence on all about him as a man superior to the things of this world, indifferent to the strokes or favors of fortune.

Physicians, surgeons and trained nurses realize the value of Ivory Soap in the sick room.

It is pure and it induces purity. For cleansing articles in the sick room or for bathing the person it has no equal. To the great joy of all who are associated in this work, and all the friends of our late leader, his son, Harry H. Hadley, on the day following his father's funeral service, gave his life to Christ. For many years his father had prayed and claimed his son for the Master, and during the past year he has made himself very useful and is now one of our leaders.

A drunken printer was told by a Park Row saloon-keeper that he was a disgrace to his place and ordered out. On the way to the river he saw the sign of the McAuley Mission. His condition was so bad that he did not care to come in, but a cripple who lives opposite the Mission spoke to him and gave him a nickel, saying, "Old man, you look tired out; you had better go into the Mission, for you are the kind they want over there." He is now one of our leaders and workers. Well known for his skill as a printer, his conversion has led many of his old companions to change their lives. There are many others who have been converted during the past year and who have become very successful workers in missions and churches.

We have an aggregate yearly attendance of 50,000, and over 5,000 kneel at our penitent form every year. This is a training school for rescue workers. We put the converts to work just as soon as they show any aptitude, and sometimes often before that they start out to work themselves by urging others to come. Our work is carried on entirely by the converts. Every night in the week the meetings are led by men who have been redeemed in this Mission. During the past winter we have often had from fifteen to twenty men speaking in different churches on Sundays, and they have been a great source of blessing to the church. We never turn any one away, and even when they fall we strive in every possible way to bring them back into the fold again, and the temporal and spiritual needs are supplied of all who come to us.

My wife and our missionary, Mrs. Lida M. Lamont, are the only ladies living in the Mission building, and both of them are of the greatest help in the work.

Rescuing the perishing, lifting up the fallen, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, sheltering the outcast, saving the drunkard, visiting the sick, and burying the dead is what we are doing here constantly.

Veteran Pastor's 90th Birthday

WHEN the Rev. Aaron Hall had served the churches of the Troy Methodist Episcopal Conference, New York, for fifty-four consecutive years, he retired, much to the regret of the many to whom he had become endeared through long and friendly association. This worthy veteran, with the wife of his youth by his side, celebrated the anniversary of his ninetieth birthday not long since, at the home of his son, Rev. Charles L. Hall, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Cohoes. The aged pastor's example is one which might well prove a spur to the young men of the present generation. He was "bound out," in the fashion of three-quarters of a century ago, and received only five weeks' schooling each year, until his majority. But his mind was fixed upon the ministry as his life work, and as soon as he had served his apprenticeship he began his course of study at the Troy Conference Academy in Poultney, Vermont, pausing between terms to teach school long enough to earn the money to continue his own studies. During this testing time his diet was composed of bread and milk, varied by baked potatoes and butter. With this preparation he entered the ministry, and has kept in close touch with advancing thought during his many years of acceptable and useful service under the standard of the Cross.

On a recent Sunday morning the reverend nonagenarian preached to a large audience from his son's pulpit, using no notes and speaking with much force upon the office and work of the Holy Spirit.

THE OPEN SECRETS OF SUCCESS

International Sunday School Lesson for May 5

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

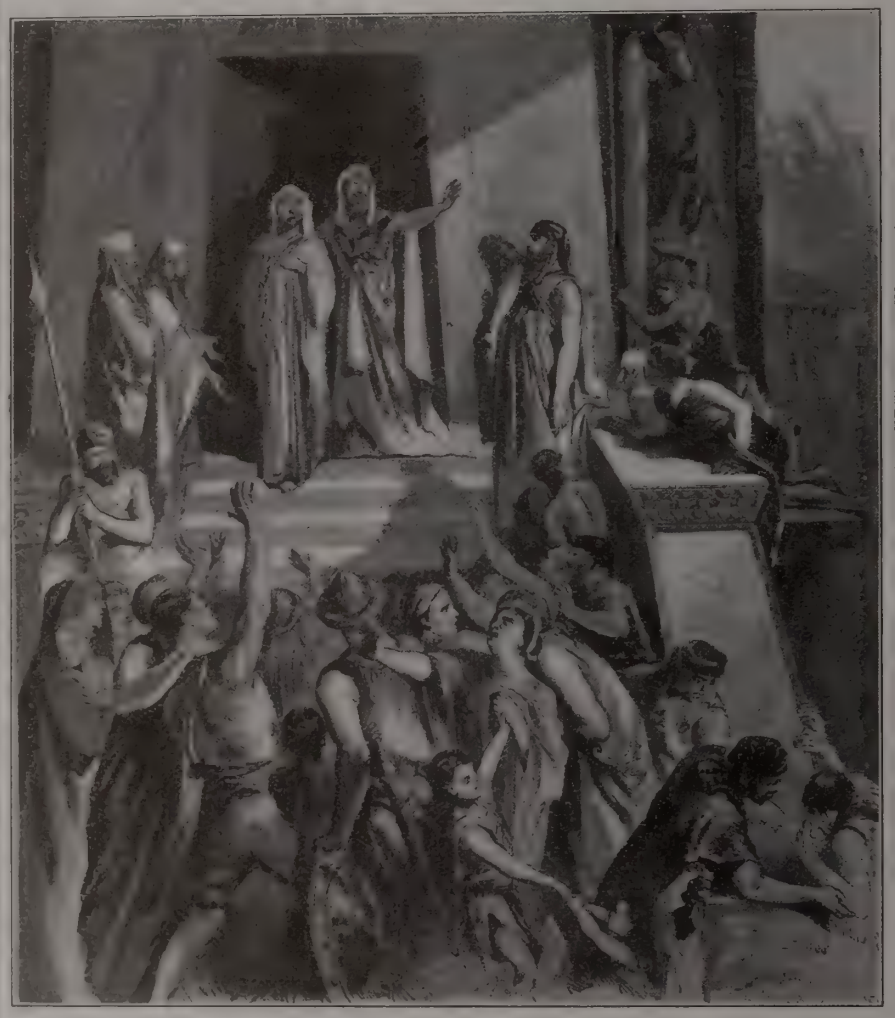
JOSEPH having received the crown of faithfulness, it is fitting that we should study more fully his steps to power, the secrets of his success. But let us not fall into the shallow error of supposing that his success consisted chiefly in winning fame and wealth. Rather was it in achieving character and usefulness. Without these there can be no success; with them no failure.

Aspire, break bounds, I say:
Endeavor to be good, and better still, and best;
Success is naught, endeavor's all. BROWNING.

It is faithful endeavor and the moral strength that comes through such spiritual gymnastics that determines success. Paul its fourth quarter, moral and spiritual development, in which alone can manliness be fully realized. But as moonlight is only reflected sunlight from behind the hills, so manliness is only the visible manifestation of inward godliness, Godlikeness. As man is the son of God, created in his image, to be at his best he must be Godlike, godly. True godliness, then, is true manliness.

Godly and Manly

In Joseph we see inward godliness and outward manliness so harmoniously combined that even in this twentieth century his character is not only worthy of study but also of imitation.



"And Pharaoh made Joseph ruler over all the land of Egypt" was even more successful than Joseph, though he was beheaded, and crowned only in the invisible world.

Glorious it is to wear the crown
Of a deserved and pure success,
But he who dares for truth to fail,
His crown in lustre is not less.

As we have said before, Abraham was a good man for his age, but Joseph was a good man for any age. He had but one wife, and never lied to save life. There is scarcely a flaw in his character unless it be his "corner" in grain, which does not seem right.

He is one of the best examples of the manliness of godliness. Manliness means, of course, being a man in the fullest sense of the term; being all that man was made to be, all that man is capable of being; being a man in distinction from a beast whose chief aim in life is to gratify his appetites; being a man in distinction from a child in maturity of knowledge and strength. A moon in its first quarter, three-fourths unlighted, pictures childhood. Manliness is the full orb, whose first quarter is physical development, its second quarter, mental; its third quarter, social;

Notice first among the elements of Joseph's manliness, his high ideals. In his dreams he saw himself as a sheaf of usefulness to which other sheaves bowed in gratitude, and as a star, a light-giver, a joy-bringer, to which other stars bowed in thankfulness for its light. These dreams were divine prophecies. Doubtless in the darkest night of adversity, in the very dungeon, Joseph never lost sight of that star of promise, to him a promise of morning.

Lofty Aims

Every manly life must begin in such noble ideals, in day-dreams of usefulness. As Dr. Hitchcock used to say to the young men in the Union Theological Seminary, "We must steer by the stars." No one will be good or do good by accident. We must aim for it. Aim high, for although you may not reach a high ideal, remember also that you will not excel a low one. "Think out your work; then work out your thought." If you dream of greatness you may fail of it or fail to receive anticipated satisfaction from it, but if you aim at highest goodness you need not fail of it, and the satisfaction will exceed the dream.

Another element of Joseph's manliness

SUMMER SHIRT WAISTS, $1.0

The Waists we are offering this season are unusually artistic, displaying all the very latest and are in every way equal in style and finish expensive Parisian designs. One of these elegant Waists is a necessity in every woman's wardrobe and our unusually low prices bring them within reach of the most economical.

Waist No. K-561. Marie Antoinette Model.

This Marie Antoinette Waist. Postage 10 cents.

Simplicity distinguishes this dainty and serviceable Lawn Waist. The Puritan collar and cuffs are ornamented with a fine knife-plaited edging, and the severity of the style is relieved by the broad tucks on front, which are continued down the full length of the back. The Waist is fastened in front with visible pearl buttons and the wide box-plait is edged to match the collar and cuffs. We do not furnish the black tie. Waist can be furnished in white only with short sleeves. Sizes 32 to 4[illegible] Price $1.00. Postage 10 cents.

Remit by Post-Office Money-Order, Express Money-Order, Bank Draft or Registered Letter; do not send stamps. Be sure to mention size desired.

If you are not satisfied, you may return the Waist and we will refund your money.

'Do they know you are a Christian?' 'Why, yes, I suppose so.' 'Do they know you are anxious to do Christian work?' 'No, I don't think they do.' 'See here, Murray, here's a Christian work you can do; start to-morrow. Do your work better than you ever did. See what needs to be done as you never did. Help the other fellow who is behind, if you can. Let them all know you are a Christian, not by talking, but by living. Get in a helpful word here and there. Get some fellow to drop his oaths. Get some fellow to drop his beer. Show Christ living in you and controlling you. Preach the Gospel among your associates by the best life you can live with God's help. I think that is the Christian work that needs to be done on a big scale. Try it. Will you?' He thanked me, said he had never looked at the question from that standpoint before, and went away.

"Six weeks after I met the superintendent of his department. He said, 'Isn't Murray one of your men?' 'Yes,' was my reply. 'Why?' 'What's come over Murray?' he said. 'He's the best clerk in the whole force, and has developed into that in the month past. He's the best influence about the whole place. The men all notice it. There's a different atmosphere in his department. He's a Christian now, sure; quiet, earnest, and full of a spirit that imparts itself to others. Something has come over Murray.'"

That is what Christianity needs to-day more than costly cathedrals and eloquent sermons—more Christian employees who are not "clock-watchers," caring only to get their wages; but who show their employers that God is with them by conscientious fidelity in their work.

The Man Promoted

The partners in a great British firm were in conference. They called in one of the managing clerks. The senior partner said to him, "I was wanting to speak to you about the vacancy at Bristol; it is an important post." "And increasingly so now," answered the clerk. "It is thought that you will promote Mason there, from Swansea." "No, we have decided to offer it to Roberts," said the chief. "Excuse me, sir, but is he not very young for such a task? There are many more experienced men in the house." "There are. But my partners and I have had our eye on Roberts lately, and have purposely put him in the way of learning details of that branch of the business. And he has worked splendidly."

So to that distant post the young fellow was transferred. "You have served us right well in the humdrum office routine," said the senior partner when saying goodbye; "then we watched you in the next grade. Now, with pleasure and confidence we ask you to pass up, and take a top post. Don't be afraid: though you didn't know it, we have been preparing you for it by your past year's work." The firm never had reason to regret the step thus taken. From the first Roberts was faithful to both his heavenly and his earthly masters, and he is now, after many years of faithful service, a junior partner in that thriving business.

We need just as much to have Christian business men show their servants and customers that God is with them, not by showy benevolence only, but especially by everyday justice. In the home, also, let Christian parents show in the common duties of life that God is with them, restraining impatience and anger, promoting courtesy and unselfishness.

When Ole Bull, the great Norwegian violinist, was assailed with hostile criticism, the New York Herald offered him its columns for his reply. But he answered in his broken English, "I tink, Mr. Bennett, it is best tey writes against me and I play against tem." "You're right, Ole Bull, quite right," was the editor's response. So Joseph answered lies with his life, and trusted God for the result.

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear, winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.

Teach me thy patience; still with thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong.

Spending the Family Money

By KATE UPSON CLARK

A GROUP of distinguished professional men, most of them ministers, were dining together the other night, when the conversation turned on the ever-absorbing theme of income and outgo.

"I spend every cent I make every year of my life," said a well-known preacher. "I carry $20,000 life insurance. It is all that I can do to pay the premiums on that. I ought to have several thousands in the savings banks or in some good paying investments. My wife feels just as I do. Neither of us is extravagant. We have four children in school or college. We look hard at every cent, but it has to go."

This burst of frankness inspired the rest, and the fact was developed that not a man among the dozen or more there assembled was able to save anything yearly from his income. Still, they all had more or less life insurance. One man, a lawyer, said that his income the year before had been $4,000, and he had spent one-eighth of it in premiums on life insurance.

"Why, isn't that equivalent to saving five hundred a year?" pondered one. The general agreement was that it meant much the same thing. Few men of moderate, average means can keep up an adequate life insurance and save anything.

Granted that you save an eighth of your income, how must you divide the rest? To most householders, young and old, the task of figuring upon household expenses is the dreariest of all the year. A vast proportion refuse altogether to do it—and they generally regret it bitterly.

"I spend just as little as I can. How can I spend any less? I believe that if I go along on that principle, I shall come out just as well as the fellow who works himself into a nervous wreck trying to lay the matter all out beforehand."

But you won't, and you know it. The financial side of home life, or of any kind of life, is next in importance to the religious side. In fact, it is a part of the religious side. Nothing will sooner shake the respect of his associates for a church-member than the knowledge that he is in money troubles constantly. It should be a part of his morality to keep sound and solvent, and he cannot do that without giving the matter much thought. A certain eloquent minister has lost parish after parish because he was always in debt. His people helped him out time after time in each place. At last, they would tire of it, and he would move on. Was it his wife's fault? Very likely, but the minister and his wife are one when it comes to debts, even if they do have to buy two tickets on the railroads.

Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick says that food will average in any well-fed household in our New England or New York cities $4 per week for each adult. Counting the two children as equal to one adult, and the time at home about forty weeks, this family spent approximately that amount.

Different estimates prevail as to the proportion of the income which should go for rent. A quarter seems too high. A fifth or a sixth is surely enough. Few own their houses nowadays in our cities. It is too expensive a luxury. Still, rents, even of flats, are high and going higher.

Sickness adds immensely to the family outgo. In the case mentioned, a feeble baby, weighing less than three pounds at birth, had to be taken care of. Something of the charge for service should be credited to this cause also, but "general housework girls" cost extravagantly in these times. Often they cannot be obtained at any price. Many of the housekeepers who used to employ them are "getting along" in small apartments without any help at all, except from the weekly or semi-weekly charwoman.

The best financier in the family should be given charge of the money. Sometimes it is the father—sometimes the mother, or the grown-up daughter. The fixed expenses—those which cannot be reduced—must be added up. Then those which can possibly be pared down must be estimated upon a basis of former years, or the experience of another family, and a fair allowance must be made. Then comes the tug of war—to live up to your schedule!

Kate Upson Clark

You have got to make allowance for possible sickness. You have got to dress as well as you can. You must have nourishing food and plenty of it. And all this means that somebody, generally the mother, must make it her close and constant business to purchase supplies wisely; to see that nothing is wasted in the cooking; that the clothes are not eaten by chemicals in the washing; that the sewing is done economically; and that, above all, the health of the family is kept up.

The increased cost of living has made the spending of the family money a more serious matter than ever before. Lines are growing deeper on the face of many a loving father, and many a hardworking mother is sinking under the burden. Every cent has got to be made to count.

Counting the Cost*

OUR Lord never concealed from the men who came to him to be his followers, that his service was one that would cost them sacrifices. No man could complain that he was decoyed by false pretenses. The loss of property might be expected. The disciple must not be surprised if he lost his friends. Indeed, his nearest relatives, his father and mother and his brother might become his enemies. He must expect to be maligned, persecuted, denounced and even murdered for Christ's sake. The warning was necessary, and before many years had passed, the men who listened to Christ's words learned by experience that they were true. Only one of the apostles died a natural death. All the others were murdered. The rank and file also suffered. A large majority of them died by violence. So it was in later times. Down to the sixteenth century the fires of martyrdom were kept burning, and even in our own time, in Armenia, in Africa, in China, and in the South Seas, men have met the alternative, "abandon your faith or die." Christ's warning was justified. His words were not meaningless when he said: "The time will come when he that killeth you will think that he doeth God service."

They are better times on which our lot has fallen. But the conditions of discipleship are the same. The disciple is still warned that he must take up his cross, that Christ must be supreme in his life and that there are no claims either of the world or of family that are to be regarded as equal to his. He too must be faithful if persecution arise, he too must be ready to sacrifice his worldly interests, if necessary, for Christ's sake. As he strives more earnestly to live up to Christ's standard, he discovers tests unknown to him at the beginning.

Mr. Sheldon's famous work, In His Steps, shows that the Christian life has not changed its character. The cross is still there for the believer to bear, and if he is not prepared to bear it, he should not call himself a Christian. It comes to the business man when the opportunity comes to make money by a trick or by misrepresentation and he must let it pass unused. It comes to the workingman when his comrades ridicule religion and he must acknowledge his faith and be laughed at. It comes to the professional man when honor or office may be gained by stooping to a common practice which his conscience condemns. To every one, great or small, there is a cross to be carried for Christ's sake.

...n, in consequence of his independence, ...bitterly resent. Should the system ever ...duced, I do not believe it would be wise ...st it to the various States. It will be more ...al if brought under the control of the ... Government.

Mr. Vanderlip was very clear as to the ...al reasons why institutions in the ... States are beginning to adopt old-... pension schemes and why a Federal ... of old-age pensions was favorably ... upon for adoption in the future. ...d:

"...e pension attaches the employee to ... vice and thus decreases the liability ... ke. It makes more certain a con... ...ce of efficient men in the lines of ... with which they are perfectly fa... ... Of quite as much importance is ... ...ct that a pension system enables ...yers to dispense with the elderly and ...fficient, and thus gives constant en...gement to good effort on the part of ...er men hoping for promotion. When ...yees realize that unsatisfactory con... ...nay at any time lose them not only ... present positions—a loss which in ... labor market as ours might be easily ... good—but that it entails, further, ...s of a very valuable asset, the em... ...e's right to a pension, the incentive ... ...od conduct is greatly increased. It ... ...tes especially as an incentive to hold ... between the ages of forty and fifty, ... they have acquired the experience ... skill which makes them especially ...ble, and prevents their being tempted ... by slightly increased wages for a ...orary period."

However, Mr. Vanderlip, with other careful thinkers, is very much opposed to any sudden action looking toward a compulsory system of old-age pensions under Federal supervision. Painstaking investigation and careful study will result in a workable plan, but haphazard statistics are worthless, and summary procedure would be dangerous. A commission that would give the subject thorough investigation, and would put the results of the investigation into a shape that would show the full significance of what has been done, and what there is to do, would be most valuable.

Mr. Vanderlip, when Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was very much interested in the subject of pensions to governmental employees under the Civil Service law. He does not believe that the report of the special committee of the National Civil Service Reform League, recently made public through its secretary, was entirely correct as to its facts or its conclusions. This committee reported in favor of the Australian form of deferred annuity policies in case there was any enforced provision for superannuation, and against this recommendation there is no special objection urged. Mr. Vanderlip, however—and I may say that the same is true of other departmental heads whom I have interviewed—does not believe in the conclusions of the committee, that the United States does not retain its employees longer than do the great railways, or that the number of United States employees over seventy years of age is not increasing.

APPENDICITIS

Not at all Necessary to Operate in Many Cases

Automobiles and Appendicitis scare some people before they are hit.

Appendicitis is often caused by too much starch in the bowels. Starch is hard to digest and clogs up the digestive machinery—also tends to form cakes in the cecum. (That's the blind pouch at entrance to the appendix.)

A. N. H. girl had appendicitis, but lived on milk for awhile—then Grape-Nuts and got well without an operation.

She says: "Five years ago while at school, I suffered terribly with constipation and indigestion." (Too much starch, white bread, potatoes, etc., which she did not digest.)

"Soon after I left school I had an attack of appendicitis and for thirteen weeks lived on milk and water. When I recovered enough to eat solid food there was nothing that would agree with me, until a friend recommended Grape-Nuts.

"When I began to eat Grape-Nuts I weighed 98 lbs., but I soon grew to 115 lbs. The distress after eating left me entirely and now I am like a new person."

(A little Grape-Nuts dissolved in hot water or milk would have been much better for this case than milk alone, for the starchy part of the wheat and barley is changed into a form of digestable sugar in making Grape-Nuts.) Van Camp's PORK AND BEANS

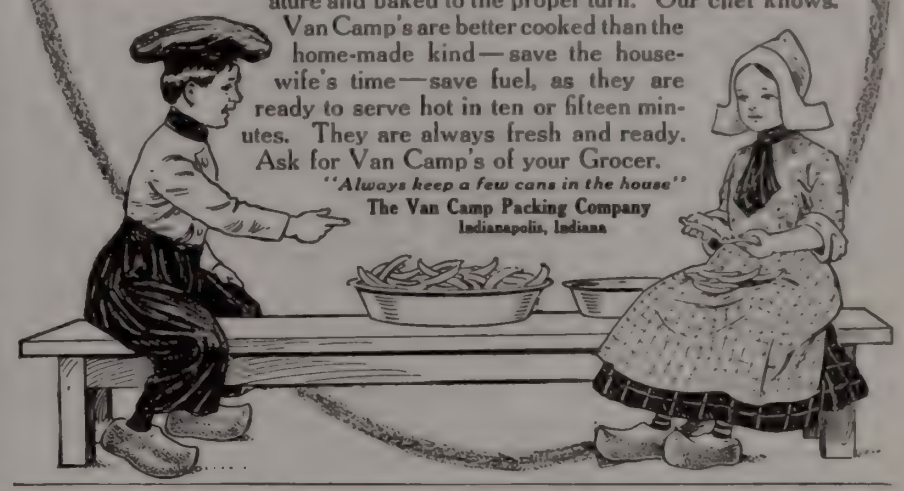
No Mixed Beans—All the Same

There is lots of difference in beans. Just the same as with potatoes or chestnuts. The little ones don't get ripe or have that rich, appetizing, mouth-watering flavor. Van Camp's beans are ripe, full, round beans, of equal size—the best produced in the great bean belt of Michigan. They're selected from the finest of the crop every year. It's the same with our Tomatoes. Van Camp's grow right here at our doors, in Indiana, and are picked for us when just of the right ripeness to be luscious and juicy. Not too ripe but just rosy ripe enough. We take only perfect tomatoes. These for the sauce, to add zest to the flavor of the beans as they bake.

Then a cut of toothsome sweet pork—with a strip of lean and a strip of fat—goes in every can. And there you are.

Every can of Van Camp's pork and beans is sterilized at a high temperature and baked to the proper turn. Our chef knows.



Van Camp's are better cooked than the home-made kind—save the housewife's time—save fuel, as they are ready to serve hot in ten or fifteen minutes. They are always fresh and ready. Ask for Van Camp's of your Grocer.

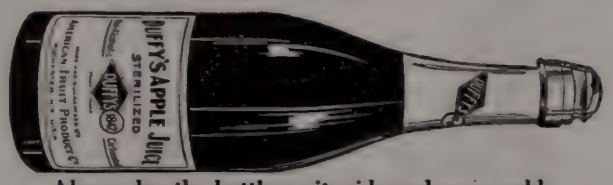
All the Goodness of the Apple

All the strength, nutriment and juice of two apples is concentrated in every ounce of Duffy's 1842 Apple Juice; all the skin, fibre and waste is eliminated. It is made by a secret process which prevents fermentation and makes it impossible for alcohol to develop. It is sterilized to remove all impurities, and the rich, original flavor of the apple is carbonated, which renders it still more pleasant.

Duffy's Apple Juice

contains all the phosphates and food values of the apple. It is a pleasant, sparkling tonic drink. It enriches the blood, builds up the tissues and gives energy and vitality to the entire system.



Always lay the bottle on its side and serve cold.

Non-Alcoholic — Sterilized — Carbonated

Rev. Ira Van Allen, Pastor Reformed Church, Syracuse, N. Y., writes: "I find it not only non-alcoholic and medicinal, but a very pleasant and refreshing drink. I consider it the very best spring tonic: in fact, other so-called tonics are not to be compared with it. Its liberal use at this season of the year will purify the blood and revive the entire system. I trust it will meet with the extensive demand it merits."

Duffy's 1842 Apple Juice does away with any craving for alcoholic stimulants and is universally recommended by Clergymen and Physicians as a refreshing and health giving beverage which may be drunk at meals or at any time with perfect freedom.

Duffy's Grape Juice, a guaranteed pure, unfermented and absolutely non-alcoholic beverage. A pleasant and healthy drink.

Duffy's Mother Goose booklet, illustrated in colors, free to all children who write for it.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Health in the Canal Zone*

AT this time, when the Panama Canal is among the very foremost of our national problems, anything that sheds an intelligent light on the subject will be welcomed by the reading public. The Problems of the Panama Canal, a new book by Brigadier-General Henry L. Abbot, U. S. A. (retired), deals with practically all the leading questions that are now being asked on every hand concerning the Canal. It discusses physical conditions on the Isthmus, climatology, health, rainfall and floods. Having devoted seven years to a special study of the subject, Gen. Abbot is entitled to speak with authority. He reviews the various engineering projects for the Canal, compares their merits, and discusses the present plan in a manner so free from technical terms that the lay reader may understand and be enlightened. The history and technology of the book are brought up to the beginning of the present year.

One of the most instructive chapters is that on the climatology of the Isthmus. The author writes:

"The geographical position of the Isthmus of Panama is about nine degrees north latitude. From this position it follows that at noon the sun is in the zenith twice a year. It is on the northern side between the 13th of April and the 29th of August. Its altitude above the north horizon on the day of the summer solstice is seventy-five degrees forty-one minutes, and its altitude above the south horizon at the winter solstice is fifty-seven degrees twenty-four minutes. It transmits to the surface of the earth the maximum amount of heat on April 13 and August 29. . . .

"The Isthmus is very near to the thermal equator, where the heat of the sun from one day to another, during the year, varies extremely little, and where it is conserved, so to speak, by a thick covering of aqueous vapor, which is but slightly permeable during the day and still less so during the night. Thus, the temperature, which is determined in general by the difference between the heat received from the sun and that lost by radiation, should here have its maximum uniformity, either from day to night or from one season of the year to another. . . .

"In regard to precipitation, there are two well-marked seasons: the dry season, including the months of January, February, March and April, and the rainy season, comprising the remainder of the year. This latter season generally suffers an interruption of several days after the summer solstice, when the rains diminish. Then the ascending layer is entirely to the north of the Isthmus. . . .

"The health statistics during the construction of the Panama Railroad have never been made public, but are well known to have been appalling. At that date it was not understood that natives of the temperate regions cannot safely perform arduous manual labor under exposure to a tropical sun, and that dependence for such work must be placed upon the negroes of the West Indies. White men can supervise, but must not attempt more . . .

"The period of serious sickness incident to excavation in tropical regions has apparently already been passed at Panama. It is interesting to note that whereas the percentages of disease and of mortality for general ailments have remained sensibly unchanged during three successive epochs, they have fallen enormously in the latter years, for diseases due to the local climate."

The Higher Spelling†

IF the work of Mr. Owen Wister had not so many superior qualities to recommend it, the public would be justified in believing that his sole aim had been to display his versatility, for certainly three consecutive books from one pen were never more unlike in character than The Virginian, Lady Baltimore and How Doth the Simple Spelling Bee. In the last named—and last written—book the author has produced an exceedingly clever bit of satire upon the recently much agitated movement for simplified spelling. He has also indulged in a little sly humor—which has no trace of sting—at the expense of a certain much-discussed multi-millionaire, whose excursions into the field of revised orthography have been wonderful to behold.

Masticator B. Fellows, "president and proprietor of Chickle University," is introduced to the reader as follows: "Since his street-boyhood, sixty years ago, this ardent personality ('tis thus the daily press describes him) had made his own way, and had his own way; he was his own capital, and there is no record of his ever having sunk a cent of it. Of habits strictly pure, he had never seen a card or a drop of liquor that he had touched, and he had never seen a dollar that he had not touched. He had organized every industry along his path, from paper-selling, boot-blacking, and so upward to his organized lobby at Washington, through which he had caused a heavy tariff to be put upon every commodity necessary to the American people. It was he who had advised his brother organizers to keep Religion on the free list, because, as he assured them, 'if we tax it, they'll do without it, while if we don't, they'll trust us for a while yet.' And now, at the age of seventy-five, with uncounted millions, and ten United States Senators, and a fourth young wife all in his pocket, he proposed to hand his name to Immortality by simplifying the spelling of English all over the earth."

Books Received

The children who love Captain January will extend a joyous welcome to The Silver Crown, a book of pretty fables by the same author, Mrs. Laura E. Richards. None but fine, beautiful thoughts are the brain-children of Mrs. Richards, and every child is the better, as well as the happier, for knowing them. Pp. 103. Price $1.25. Little, Brown & Co., Boston, Mass.

The Religion of Cheerfulness, by Sara A. Hubbard, succeeds in putting more sunny, practical common sense upon its sixty-three small pages than is contained in many a ponderous tome. It is not possible to read it without being helped to good resolutions, and it is the best gift-book for a pessimist one can imagine. Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. Price 50 cents.

Yet another addition to the American Book Company's Eclectic Readings is entitled Animal Fables, from the Dark Continent, by A. O. Stafford. They have been selected from the folklore of the negro, and contain all the weird imagery for which the race is noted. Pp. 128. Price 30 cents.

Long Ago in Greece, by Edmund J. Carpenter, Litt.D., is a book of truly golden hours with the old story tellers. Atalanta, Hero and Leander, Cupid and Psyche, become living, breathing realities upon the enchanted page. In addition to the charming text, admirable illustrations are copiously interspersed from paintings by Van Dyck, Burne-Jones, Rossetti and other artists of like celebrity. Little, Brown & Company, Boston, Mass. Pp. 306. Price $1.50.

Glorious Praise is a treasury of song, containing over three-hundred of the best Christian hymns extant. Every phase of Christian work has been supplied, the prayer-meeting, Sunday School and evangelistic work as well. Compiled by W. H. Doane. Published by Harvey & Burnett, 642 Fourth Street, Louisville, Ky.

In S'ancreu, a bright little story of Nova Scotia life in summertime, Miss Ibbie Raymond makes her bow to the reading public. It is Acadia, "the land of Evangeline" which Miss Raymond has chosen for the setting of her story, and she pauses in her plot to give many a charming peep at nature to her readers. Published by Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. Pp. 159. Price $1 net.

Junior Carols, a collection of 154 hymns, includes a set of 24 Memory Hymns, in conjunction with which is issued a separate booklet (price 10 cents), which tells the story of each of these noteworthy pieces of music. Price 25 cents. The Praise Book is admirably adapted to the use of Young People's Societies and Sunday Schools. Edited and compiled by H. B. Grose and G. B. Graff. Pp. 293. Price 25 cents. United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston and Chicago.

The Gordon Van Tine Company of Davenport, Iowa, have placed an excellent catalogue at the disposal of builders, actual or prospective, which appears to include mention of every item necessary for building. "From factory to consumer," is the announcement which this well-known firm makes, and their enumeration of doors, windows (house, cellar, storm sash, stable and hot-bed), blinds, moldings, floorings, etc., proves the extent of their stock. They also make a specialty of paints and glass. Carpenters and contractors would do well to send for the new catalogue.

is great palace of learning has been the philanthropist's pet project for a number years. The structure is built in the idst of the green lawns of Schenley Park, and covers four acres. It is of marble and the spectator on a sunny day is almost dazzled by its shimmering surface covered with pilasters and carvings. It has three stories, the combined area of main buildings, wings and extensions giving a floor space of sixteen acres. It was thirty months ago that the first sod was turned to make way for the massive foundations, and before the builders turned it over to the officials of the institute, six millions had been spent. Twenty-three millions was the total gift for building and endowment. The edifice is as near fire-proof as any structure can be. There is no woodwork of any kind in the entire building. One of the largest switchboards in the world controls two hundred miles of wire and twenty-five thousand electric lights. In the libraries the new book stacks reach up through a space equal to eleven ordinary stories. They have space for eight hundred thousand volumes, while the special libraries would bring the capacity up to a million and a half. Art will be one of the prominent features of the museum and the several galleries cover forty-four thousand and seven hundred square feet. The opening ceremonies made a brilliant series of pictures. Hundreds of prominent people, all guests of the "iron-master," marched to the institute between lines of students from the Carnegie Technical School. Much interest was taken in the playing of the great organ, the first notes that came from it being the music of "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God."

n do it honestly, then let him thank od, for it has been revealed to him from ove. The man who can accept Christ the Son of God has got, I thoroughly elieve, the secret of the universe. He in the way of life everlasting; he is alking in the path of light which will ad to the fulness of day. Now, where he? He is the man to bury Christ.

Ah, friends, you know who it was. You ow where he was at this moment and hy he was hidden away. We shall cast stone; we shall say nothing about that ave confessor. It does not follow that cause a man can say the whole Nicene reed that he will have courage to suffer r Jesus Christ. So there is nobody to ry Christ. Ah, yes. There are two en, and although one was a coward, and says in the Gospel, "He was a disciple cretly," it does not say that of Nicomus. It was Joseph of Arimathæa. He as a capitalist, and they are afraid of erything, of every change and movent; terrified of the churches, of the ople, of politicians, of their own work. ut Joseph comes now, and Nicodemus mes with him, and—oh, beautiful touch the fine, delicate, scholarly nature—icodemus brings with him a hundred eight of myrrh and aloes, so that the france of the spice might be laid on the dy of Jesus. They have done him to death, ut Nicodemus lays him in the grave, frant with his devotion and his affection.

Now, friends, who is brave? Now, friends, who is the thorough Christian? Now, who is the loyal type of true gentleman? If when all goes well with me some one gives a cheer, and I say, "Thank you, thank you," every man's approbation helps me, but I do not know what is its value. When everybody forsakes me and my back is to the wall and there is nobody to help me, and the stones are flung in my face, and a man steps out and takes his place beside me, then I know who is my friend. I don't care what he has said about me publicly. I don't care; he speaks now by his act in the crisis of my life. At first Nicodemus was silent. When danger gathered around Jesus he rose and spoke. When Jesus was dead this man threw in his lot with a beaten Christ. Is there courage enough in you to throw in your lot with a triumphant and living Christ? Remember, my friends, that riches are a great danger, and your nation has been very prosperous of recent years. Remember that learning is often a hindrance to faith, and that Jesus reveals to the simple that which is often concealed from the wise. But remember this also: That when things were at the worst with Christ, he was laid to rest with fragrance of love. By whom? By the Church? No. By the people? No. By those whom he had helped? No. But by a capitalist of Jerusalem and one of the representative scholars of the day.

How a Mission Was Founded

ON one of the busiest streets of the city of Minneapolis stands the St. James Hotel, and in connection with this house is a mission which has a most interesting history.

More than twelve years ago the thought of the Mission was born in the brain of its present superintendent, Mr. C. M. Stocking. He was then in the insurance business, and was connected with one of the Baptist churches of the city. He made a full consecration of himself to the Lord and waited to know what he would have him to do. The first thing was to start a gospel wagon, which he, with others, took out each week. This work brought results. Soon after, a meeting of the churches, together with the business men of the city, was held, and Mr. Stocking was sent to different parts of the country to investigate the methods of carrying on mission work. He went directly from Minneapolis to New York City, where he gathered much of interest, and also to

The Gospel Wagon of the Minneapolis Misson

Washington, where the work seemed even more attractive to him.

When he returned from his trip the Mission was opened, but without a fund. A small place on one of the main streets was rented. Six months after an old theatre was rented, and the work began to grow. The winter following was very severe, and during that time 245 men on an average slept on the floor each night. Each day fifteen gallons of soup was freely furnished and bread was given to all who came.

During the first four years of the work Mr. Stocking, who had been receiving $2,000 a year in the work of insurance, received no salary. At one time during the first four years it seemed quite serious for him, and he confesses to certain surreptitious heart-aches, when he found his wife making underclothing for the children out of old flour sacks.

After eight years, Mr. Stocking got his mind set on a large hotel, the present location of the Mission, and the manner in which it came into possession of the organization, now known as the Union City Mission, was quite marvelous.

The building was owned by an insurance company in Hartford, Conn., and although there was not a dollar in sight with which to make a payment, yet the president of the Mission and Mr. Stocking took the journey East to see the officers of the company. When they arrived in Hartford the president of the insurance company told them they might better have saved expense by negotiating with their Minneapolis agent. When, however, the officers were brought together and the story of the Mission was rehearsed, Mr. Stocking being asked why he had relinquished a good paying business to enter such a work, and they had heard his reply that he considered this Mission to be worth more than their insurance business, they were deeply touched. They agreed to sell the building for $60,000, and an option of three months was granted, with no money to bind the bargain. The president of the company also said he would add a gift of $2,500 when the building should be purchased. At the end of three months, Mr. Stocking had a subscription of $5,000 from one man and smaller subscriptions to the amount of $7,000. He then went to the donor of the $5,000 and asked for a loan of another $5,000, and to his surprise the gentleman made out his check for $10,000, saying, "Which would you prefer, a loan of $5,000 with a gift of $5,000, or the whole $10,000 as a gift?" A few days afterward another gentleman sent for him and told him to name the sum he was still needing. He told him $5,000 would satisfy him; whereupon he wrote his check for that amount.

To-day the hotel, which is used solely for transient customers, without meals, furnishes the running capital for the Mission of $6,000 a year, besides paying all its own expenses. Twenty thousand dollars has been added in repairs and the amount still due on the property is reduced to $32,000.

A German florist, who had been in America six years, had become thoroughly dissipated, so that, while he had been an expert in his line, he could no longer hold any position. He had been in Minneapolis two weeks, and all but penniless, had asked a policeman if there was a place where he could sleep for five cents and was directed to the Mission, and that night was saved. It was at the close of the service, when a young earnest Christian woman got the poor man on to his knees, where he made a full surrender of himself to Christ. "Had any one told the young woman that this dirty, drunken tramp would yet be her husband," said Mr. Stocking, "she would have fainted; but such was the case, and he is to-day a successful business man in Denver, Colorado."

Another man, now living in St. Louis, came by the Mission while a service was being held from the gospel wagon. A reformed man was telling his story, and, as the stranger listened, he extended his hands to Mr. Stocking, crying out, "That is what I want." He has lived a consistent Christian life for eight years. EMILY WARE.

IN A SHADOW

Inveterate Tea Drinker Feared Paralysis

Steady use of either tea or coffee often produces alarming symptoms as the poison (caffeine) contained in these beverages acts with more potency in some persons than in others.

"I was never a coffee drinker," writes an Ill. woman, "but a tea drinker. I was very nervous, had frequent spells of sick headache and heart trouble, and was subject at times to severe attacks of bilious colic.

"No end of sleepless nights—would have spells at night when my right side would get numb and tingle like a thousand needles were pricking my flesh. At times I could hardly put my tongue out of my mouth and my right eye and ear were affected.

"The doctors told me I was liable to become paralyzed at any time, so I was in constant dread. I took medicine of various doctors and no end of patent medicine—all to no good.

"The doctors told me to quit using tea, but I thought I could not live without it—that it was my only stay. I had been a tea drinker for twenty-five years; was under the doctor's care for fifteen.

"About six months ago, I finally quit tea and commenced to drink Postum.

"I have never had one spell of sick headache since and only one light attack of bilious colic. Have quit having those numb spells at night, sleep well and my heart is getting stronger all the time. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs." "There's a Reason."

Joseph, Ruler of Egypt

By Mrs. M. Baxter

a severe school Joseph had been passing standard after standard. Not rial of the many through which he o pass could have been spared. God s what human nature needs to bring o utter nothingness in itself, and dependence on him. He chastens or our profit that we may be par- s of his holiness" (Heb. 12:10). ugh no other school could Joseph learned to be a simple but a fit in- ient to carry out the designs of God an intelligent comprehension of his se. Earthly position, prospects, ation, were all gone, and still "the was with Joseph," and would yet e himself to be for his servant more all which he had lost. Joseph was ranger to the school of faith; he had ed to recognize God in everything, to be happy when stripped of all, in his true element, because without , without friends, without reputa- exiled, oppressed, wronged in the galling manner, yet, blessed fact, nt to others as well as himself, "the l was with Joseph." Let everything gainst us, let our trials be the great- which fall to the lot of man; if under nd above all the Lord is with us, not pang of suffering will be lost; our shall reap his own harvest in our ; his purpose shall be accomplished. imself in close communion with God, ph was in a position to bring others to Him. Wherever one or more of 's children are near to him, a spiritual osphere exists, and it is easier for rs also to draw near to God. Thus as that the chief butler and the chief er dreamed, and thus it was that, later Pharaoh also dreamed. What there have been of intercession for this then king laid on Joseph's heart before , we may never know; suffice it that r two years from the time of the oration of the chief butler, Pharaoh amed. How little the politicians of ypt knew that a mighty hand was at k in Egypt, who should bring about expected changes in the government, that His instrument should be a man g under a criminal charge, undergoing sentence in the State prison! So un- ked for are the ways of God.

The dream of Pharaoh made a great pression upon him; something which could not account for had happened to ; he could not shake off the impres- n. God had spoken, but Pharaoh did know the language. In the first ce the king sent for all the magicians d the wise men of Egypt. It was plain them that no invention of theirs could isfy the king; he was in real earnest, d only the real thing, only a knowledge the mysterious Being who had spoken him in his dream could satisfy the akened monarch. Egypt was the ool of the world at that time, the re- itory of learning; it was a humbling ng that, in such a land, God should ring to nothing the understanding of prudent" (I. Cor. 1-19); yet so it was. The chief butler was no mean person at rt, and the consternation of the baffled n of letters in Egypt recalled to him at he owed to the young Hebrew soner who had interpreted his dream d the chief baker's. He told the story fore the king. Joseph knew that a ce of rule awaited him, and the pledge it had been given him in Potiphar's se and in the prison, in both of which ces he rose spontaneously above his roundings. But how little did he ow that deliverance was so near when araoh's messengers "made him run" r. 14, marg.) to the palace, after a ty shave and change of garments, to erpret the dream which was confessedly ond the learning of the wisest men of ypt! How little was he in himself pre- ed! But how truly was he prepared of d for the king's communication:

"I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it; and I have heard say of thee that thou canst understand a dream to interpret it!"

Answered Prayers

E. G., Utah. "I add my testimony that the God we serve is still faithful to his promise."

Mrs. M. D., Pennsylvania. "God has heard and answered my prayers, and I thank him more than words can express."

A. W. S., New York. "I want to thank God for the many, many benefits he has showered upon me in answer to prayer."

J. A. E., New Jersey. "I would also love to add how my Father and Saviour has answered my prayer and done so much for me."

A Firm Believer, New York. "God answers the prayer of faith—that is the only condition. The answers come so swift and sure, they almost overwhelm me."

Constant Reader, Wisconsin. "For three years I have prayed earnestly and persistently that, if consistent with the divine will, a certain great affliction might be removed from me. My prayer is answered, and as a duty and a pleasure I give this testimony to strengthen the faith of others."

M. W., New Jersey. "A dear brother had no home in his old age. In answer to faithful prayer, God led me to the knowledge of a most desirable home for him. In many ways I know God has answered my poor, unworthy prayers."

Mrs. C. S. M., New Jersey. "Our prayers have been answered again in God's own right way. We know that God hears and answers prayer in the best way. 'He knows, my heavenly Father knows.' I thank him for everything."

Reader, Pennsylvania. "The Lord has just given me the most wonderful assurance that he has heard and will answer my prayer to be delivered from great trouble. I have clung to his promise, 'Call upon me in the day of trouble. I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify me.'"

M. D., California. "God is good to me and mine. In small, everyday trials and in great sorrows, he heeds and helps me in answer to prayer. Not always as I ask, but God's way is my way. In many grievous trials, God always gives 'peace, sweet peace, the gift of his love.'"

C. B., Iowa. "How thankful I am that a wise little mother taught me the way of prayer. I always find great comfort in knowing that my friends unite their prayers with mine, for I know the Lord meant it, when he said that where 'two or three agree, it shall be done of our Father.'"

C. F. S., New York. "Your column of 'Answered Prayers' are a great help to me, and I wish to acknowledge God's great goodness in answering my prayers in time of trouble. Let us trust him more."

Mrs. S. J. B., Tennessee. "To Jeremiah in prison He said: 'Call unto me and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things that thou knowest not.' He does not reveal, because we do not call. I called and he lifted a great burden from my heart. 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,' and have flowed for the seventy-two years of my life."

Questions and Answers

G. S., Honesdale. 1. Is it colder at the South Pole than at the North Pole? 2. Is it colder in the south temperate zone than in the north temperate zone?

1. As no one has been to either, an answer would be but a mere guess. 2. The temperature is practically the same in both.

Thos. Hallwell, Webb City, Mo. Why, when and where has the Church lost its ancient miracle-working powers such as are described in Mark 16: 16, 17? The Church needs them as much as ever, and the perishing world needs them worse.

From the tone of the question we would infer that it should be addressed to the Almighty rather than to a newspaper. There is expostulation in it and an intimation that the writer thinks there has been a failure of duty on the part of God or the Church. If we may express an opinion we would say that miracles are not needed in this day, and if they were performed they would not win a single soul. People would say they were magic or sleight-of-hand. As Christ said, "If men believe not the Scriptures, neither would they be convinced though one rose from the dead." In the apostolic age they were useful because credentials were needed, but in these days the transformation of character that comes by conversion serves the purpose.

J. B., Dayton, O. I heard the assertion made recently that over one thousand vessels were lost every year. Are reliable figures obtainable?

The Bureau Veritas, of Paris, keeps a most accurate record of casualties at sea. Its list shows that in 1906, 376 steamers were lost and 725 sailing vessels. The number of injured vessels for the year was 3,549, of which 1,597 were steamers.

B. W. R., Caldwell, Idaho. I am impressed with the fact that more persons have died during the past year than in any former two years in a thousand. Is this true?

It may be true of certain localities, but it is not true of the world as a whole. Mortality statistics, on the contrary, show that certain diseases, which formerly swept off multitudes, are yielding to advanced medical science. Yellow fever and smallpox are among the number. Improved sanitation has also kept back various forms of plague. The modern tendency is toward an increase in the average duration of human life.

G. R. H., Boxford, Mass. Reading the quiet little classic of Mrs. Gaskell's, called Cranford, I am impressed with the reality of the characters. Can you tell me if the work is founded on fact?

Mrs. Gaskell, as Elizabeth Stevenson, spent her childhood in the village of Knutsford, thirteen miles from Manchester, England, and village and town were respectively the Cranford and Drumble of her story. The Knutsford life and people are reproduced in her book.

Miss M. E. O., Eastlope, Ala. Do you think it is right for Christians to buy luxuries for amusement, etc., while China's millions are starving?

Self denial is excellent discipline and we believe that any real, sincere Christian, who has a sympathetic heart, will not turn a deaf ear to the call of suffering, either at home or abroad. The extent of the self-denial should be proportionate to the need.

W. A. J., St. Louis, Mich. Please inform us where we can see the comet?

There is no comet visible to the naked eye at present. L. SWIFT.

M. T. P., Beverly, N. J. 1. What interpretation do the Jews put on Isaiah 53? 2. Since they offer no sacrifices, how do they expect forgiveness of sins?

1. They believe that the sufferer there referred to is the nation as a whole, persecuted, despised, suffering, and yet the religious teacher of the world. Some think it may have referred to Jeremiah, who, by trying to bring his people to righteousness and redeem them from sin and folly, incurred imprisonment and probably a martyr's death. 2. The wisest of them never thought that forgiveness came because of sacrifices (see Ps. 51: 16, 17). They believe now, as David said in that Psalm, that forgiveness comes by repentance.

J. S. A., Rose Hill, Va. 1. Was George Washington a member of the Baptist Church? 2. Has anyone, except a Chinaman, ever seen the grave of Confucius?

1. Washington was a member and vestryman of the Protestant Episcopal Church. 2. We do not know.

E. M. B., Worcester, Mass. 1. What nations beside the Hebrews have traditions of the Flood? 2. Are the Hivites and Hittites still in existence?

1. The Babylonian or Accadian account written on tablets of clay and recently deciphered, closely resembles that in the Bible. In that Xisuthros builds a ship and sends out birds to see if the land is dry. Then there is the account of Berosus, who wrote in 350 B.C. The Persians have a similar legend, and the Greek account (Deucalion's). 2. The Hivites and Hittites have been absorbed into the nations.

S. J. P., Greenwood, La. 1. Where does the wild goose build its nest, and how far north does it go in summer? 2. Are there but Ten Commandments, or eleven in all?

1. They range as far north as the Arctic Circle, and build their nests of dried plants on the ground near the water. 2. There are only Ten Commandments.

R. A., Herkimer, N. Y. What is the exact meaning of liturgies?

It comes from a Greek word meaning public service at private cost. The Greek and Roman Church liturgies were committed to writing about the fourth or fifth centuries, A.D. Parts of these are attributed to the apostles.

S. B., Brooklyn, N. Y. When was London bridge built?

The first one was of wood and constructed in 978. The famous old bridge commemorated in the song was commenced in 1176 by Peter of Colechurch. A new one replaced it in 1831.

R. R., Williamsport, Pa. Which has the larger following, Christianity or Buddhism?

Prof. A. S. Geden, a recognized statistical authority, places the number of Christians in the world at 477,000,000, including Protestant, Catholic, Greek, Abyssinian, Coptic, and all other Christian churches. Buddhism has nearly 148,000,000, Hinduism 190,000,000, Confucianism 256,000,000, Mohammedanism 176,000,000.

G. H. O., Peabody, Kans. Why is it that the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans?

The enmity began when the two calves were set up by Jeroboam, who sought to make Samaria the rival of Jerusalem. (See I. Kings 12: 26-28). Then, when Israel was carried away captive, the king of Assyria settled Samaria and other cities of Israel with people of his own, and sent an Israelitish priest to teach them a mongrel Judaism (see II. Kings 17: 24-28). The breach was widened under Ezra and Nehemiah (see Ezra 4: 1-4, and Nehemiah 4: 1, 2).

S. H., Nyack, N. Y. Is it yet known what ingredients were used by John Ellmore, the Altoona cobbler, to prepare his new fuel that is said to be better than coal, last longer and obtained at one-third the cost?

Several chemists went to work to try and find out what had been put together to make the composition. They report that it is as follows: Common salt, one pound; oxalic acid, two ounces; water, one gallon. Mix and moisten a mixture containing one part coal and three parts ashes. It is said that this fuel is better than pure coal. On burning, it fuses into a cokelike mass and leaves but little residue. Its chemical action is explained as follows: "When an aqueous solution of an alkaline salt, such as common salt, is mixed with coal ash, the result is that a mild lye is formed, which when mixed with any combustible material, such as coal, and upon the application of heat, gives off oxy gas, thus enabling rapid combustion. addition of oxalic acid causes a chen change of greater value than the first the reason that it results in the forma of a carbide, which in turn gives off ac lene gas, thus adding to the intensity of heat and facilitating complete combust It is probable that Ellmore's patent cover any commercial production of compound."

Bringing Food and Fuel to Starving Russians in Kazan

ACCORDING to the latest advices from Russia, the famine in that country is especially severe in the southeast provinces. In the Kazan district, the Tartar peasants have even bartered their children for bread. Although the State has given away grain in large quantities, the need of relief steadily grows and the difficulty of distribution is great, owing to the bad condition of the roads at this season of the year.

A. E. H., Portville, N. Y. What is the meani "limb" in the fifth amendment to the Ur States Constitution, "deprived of life or li or put in "jeopardy of life or limb"?

So late as the time of the writing of Constitution, the amputation of an arr foot, or the cutting of ears, was the p ishment employed in many countries w life was not taken. It was done in Gr Britain, and the British colonies in Ame had used such punishments. Consequen the term was used when the delegates fr these colonies drew up the Constituti Many of the principles laid down in Constitution can be traced back directly laws and declarations in the colonies.

W. E. N., Savannah, Ga. Are the Chinese antagonistic to missionary work?

A mass of testimony from individu high in rank and authority throughout empire serves to show that missionary eff has gained for itself an honored place minds once suspicious of or openly hos to it. Large donations to mission hospit and schools from official and weal Chinese, a rapidly increasing demand Christian literature and educational wor special unsolicited courtesy to missionari all indicate that the leaders of thought a public opinion in China have accepted missionary enterprise as one of the m important factors in the development new life in that ancient empire.

E. R. J., Minneapolis, Minn. Our missionary cl have been studying with deep interest history of India, including the story of Sepoy rebellion. We can find no record of ultimate end of Nana Sahib.

It is asserted by some writers that was alive as late as 1885. One story has that he was murdered about that time; t Perceval Landon has written that in 18 an aged mendicant was arrested in Rajk who claimed to be Nana Sahib. He w set free—old, discredited, partially insan the laughing-stock of his own people.

Himalayan Peasants

MOUNTAINEERING IN THE HIMALAYAS

By Wm. Greet, Himalayan Missionary

T does not generally occur even to those who view the mighty Himalayan heights from some station on the outer ranges, that there are thousands upon thousands of villages hidden away in those almost ccessible slopes. People do not realize that there are at valleys between almost every peak and the next which it seems to touch—much less do they realize t there are multitudes of souls living there.

To penetrate these regions is regarded as the task of occasional trader or scientist, and then only by a picked routes over certain ridges. But to work in l out and up and down throughout those great leys—that is no one's work—except missionary's; and in the great bulk the world's mountains, this is not ne, largely for the reason given above, t few know of this hill world, and few cannot always get into it.

Every hill district differs from every ier, and even here in the border val- s of the Tehri State it is very differ- t from the neighboring Himalayan trict in British territory, where there e at least some fair highways made d some stage bungalows for the veler.

The first essential for enabling any t the most agile workers to accomplish ything here is the means of convey- ce over any kind of track—across ep ravines, over giddy heights, along rrow ledges, between great boulders, rough thick forest, over bare slants th nothing to hold to, or up and wn the sharpest zigzags. We have en enabled to get through these diffi- lties. Mrs. Greet cannot climb much, d our youngest child is not four onths old, but each has come quite fely through the worst places, includ- g one known by the hill men as "the byss," where there is a sheer drop of o miles to be descended by a foot-wide gzag into a narrow gorge. This lies tween two of our nearest villages.

In every village and hamlet crowds hill women clamber and clamor und our little child's bed-box, which rives in one place after another, com- rtably curtained, between a coolie's shoulders, and the wonder of seeing a European baby in their domains slowly gives way to the wonder of a foreign lady learning their dialect.

A proportion of the men visit the Hindi-speaking parts, but the women almost never. Mrs. Greet's conveyance is a canvas arrangement, strongly sewn, boat-shape, and slung to a bamboo frame, inside which the rider sits. A single pole at each end rests on the shoulders of a couple of men. The tracks are too narrow for more than two carriers, being usually not more than a foot wide, so that it is an advantage when the rider is not specially heavy; but for a heavy person, the carriers can often be changed. All hill men carry loads safely over the worst places, and trained ones carry "dandies," if the "dandies" are rightly shaped. Ours is made with no woodwork or anything rigid below the level of the carriers' shoulders, otherwise it would catch in any protruding rock or tree stump, and precipitate carriers and carried down the khud. The shoulder-poles have little wooden blocks attached, so that there is no danger of slipping off the men's shoulders, even when on the steepest gradient. A sick person might be so carried, or a tired one sleep with comfort.

Our tents are made with first consideration for mountain hurricanes sweeping over the narrow ledges, where we often have to camp. We have to follow the line of least resistance and to be able to hold on like limpets. This means very confined space for a party of men or a family to remain in bad weather under canvas slanting up from a limited base. There is often no room for tent ropes, and the flat walls of even a small ordinary-shaped tent would be carried away, and rough weather in the hills usually means cold as well. For that reason, too, we have the flaps of the front and back doorway made to fold readily snug and close round the light poles, and we place a heavy piece of rock on the pegs at the tent corners, in case the ground gives poor holdfast in a storm. Inside the tent, a heap of straw, generally available for beds, leaves more space free than camp bedsteads would. We carry one folding bedstead, however, for any member who may need it. Our single-substance tent for fair weather for a party of three, with a bedstead and chair arrangement, weigh altogether but twenty-four pounds.

The expense of carrying everything in the hills is often so great as

The Astonished Publican

TEXT: LUKE 19: 5

"To-day I must abide at thy house"

IT is amazing how long the world compels some of its most honored children to struggle amid the quicksands of poverty, obscurity, misrepresentation and slander, before it allows them to climb the mountain-tops of immortality and fame. It is hard to understand why some men have to spend so much of their lives fighting for a mere existence, when they would have been able to do so much more good for their fellow-men, if the world had only been willing to encourage them, instead of turning the cold shoulder upon them. Every one remembers the famous couplet by the poet Heywood:

Seven cities warred for Homer being dead,
Who living had no roof to shroud his head.

Well, that is the history of many of the world's greatest heroes and heroines. For years and years they battled with poverty. For years and years they had to fight for mere physical existence. Then came wealth, fame, position, honor. The world was bowing at their feet to do their bidding.

Christ's Brief Popularity

The lot of the obscure peasant is necessarily hard, yet when Christ was to come into the world it was that lot he chose, as if he desired to know by experience the sorrow and hardship of humanity. Christ for thirty years had lived in poverty and obscurity. When at last he started forth on his world's mission, he was opposed at every step. He was maligned and slandered. Then there came a sudden change, which placed him on the top wave of popularity. We find him no longer the unknown peasant. All his countrymen are talking of him and many of them call him a great teacher. His fame, too, has gone abroad, and certain Greeks have asked to see him. He is now on his way to Jerusalem, where he will be acclaimed as the Son of David. He has reached Jericho, and the people turn out to see the young prophet, who may prove to be the long-expected Messiah.

Who will have the honor of entertaining him? To which home does he go? He can practically go and lodge in any home that he will. Does he go to the home of the good and pure man? Does he go to the home of the aristocrat? No, he goes to the home of a despised publican. When Christ stops and looks up and sees the despised publican Zaccheus perched upon the overhanging bough of a sycamore tree, he seems to say: "Come, Zaccheus! Come down! Come and let me go home with thee! Come and let me teach the world that my mission is to save souls which are lost! Come and let me lodge with one who is universally ostracized by his countrymen! Come down, Zaccheus! Come down! For to-day I must abide at thy house." Now, why did Christ choose to visit Zaccheus' home in preference to all the other homes of Jericho, which would gladly have opened their doors to receive him as their honored guest?

Why Christ Visited Zaccheus

Christ lodged in Zaccheus' house, in the first place, because it was the most despised home in all Jericho. It represented all that was bitter and cruel and tyrannical and unjust. It represented extortion and dishonesty. It represented the fiendish power which would take a community in its viselike grip and squeeze the last drop of financial blood out of a man and then turn him out of his home and let him starve. Murderer, thief, destroyer, assassin, hangman were names honored and respected by the Jews in comparison with that word "publican." It was a name the most hated of all names in the Hebrew language. There was no indictment more opprobrious which could be hurled against Christ than that he was a friend of publicans and sinners. For of all sinners, the worst sinner in Hebrew eyes was the publican. In order to understand why the house of Zaccheus was the most excoriated in all Jericho, we must study for a little while the attitude of the Roman government toward its provinces.

The Roman government was like the Turkish government. In the capital of Constantinople sits the "sick man of Europe." He opens the map of his kingdom and says, "Here is one of my provinces. I will sell this to the highest bidder. Then I will make the tax-collector of this province pay me a certain amount each year. All the moneys he can squeeze out of those people above that amount he can have for himself." So the Sultan sells his provinces, just as a capitalist would rent a farm. Then that tax-collector goes to that province and he puts the financial thumbscrews upon those people. Such was the province of Judea in the time of Christ. The Roman government had stationed its tax-collectors everywhere. It had sold these provinces and cities to the different buyers. That the Hebrew must bear, but he was humiliated when one of his own people stooped to thus serve the tyrant. Zaccheus was one of these publicans with his headquarters at Jericho. He was one of Rome's tax-collectors and he bled the people until they could be bled no more. And because he had been an extortioner, a legalized robber, the people hated him with an unutterable loathing. They regarded him and his family as social outcasts.

Now Christ by going to this despised tax-collector's house practically said, "Even to the lowest of the low I shall carry my gospel. No man or woman has sunk so deep into the mire of sin but my blood can cleanse him from all sin. Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." Oh, my friends, is it not a blessed thought to you that Christ came to save the publicans and the sinners? Is it not a glorious thought that no matter how low a man or a woman may be in sin Jesus is ready and willing to rescue him from that sin?

Saved as an Example

Some time ago it was my privilege to attend a revival service held by a well-known slum worker. After the talk was over he asked all who would to come forward and confess Christ. They came by scores. There were about a hundred of them. Some were filthy and ragged. Some were without collars. Some of them had their breath smelling vilely with liquor. As they came forward to the mercy seat I kept saying to myself: "I wonder if those men are in earnest? I wonder if those men truly want Christ?" Then I bethought myself of a conversation I had with one of my elders a few days before. He said, "Ten years ago I was in the Pacific Garden Mission. To my left, on one of the front seats, sat a man so maudlin drunk that I did not think he understood one word that was said. He was the lowest kind of an outcast. When the invitation to come to Christ was given that man arose and staggered forward and fell on his knees, and then and there gave his heart to Christ. He was sincere, too, for he is now working as an evangelist. His name is Melville Trotter." It is not surprising that the elder's story came to my mind that night, for the man whose pleadings had drawn that dissipated crowd to their knees was the Melville Trotter whose conversion the elder had witnessed. No wonder his invitations were so confident. He knew that the Christ who had saved him could save all who came to him. That is why Christ saves the worst cases; it encourages others to come to him. That is why he went to be a guest at the house of Zaccheus.

Succoring the Tempted

I take a step further in my subject and declare that Christ went to the home of Zaccheus for another reason. He wanted to prove to the world that some of the sinners who have been swept off their feet by great temptation are sometimes the easiest men to reach and lead to the better life. A man may be a thief and a robber, or even a murderer, and yet not be wedded to his sins; he may long to become pure and true and honest and upright. Zaccheus was a publican. Zaccheus was a dishonest tax-collector. But Zaccheus was one who, at the first salutation of Jesus, was willing to come down from that sycamore tree and welcome the Master to his home. That is the type of sinner who can be most easily reached for Christ by us in the present day.

Again, I believe that Zaccheus was at heart an honest man and wanted to do right. When a man is converted and says to Christ, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore to him fourfold," he gives good evidence that he had primarily been of honest nature. Then perhaps it was his honesty that led Romans to offer the office of tax-collector to him. H haps the Roman officials came to him and sa "Zaccheus, would you not like to be the tax-collector the city of Jericho? You know everybody. You kn just how much they are worth. You can make m out of it than anybody else." "Oh, no," I think I h Zaccheus say, "I do not want the position. It is one the meanest and most contemptible positions on earth "I know it," says the Roman governor; "but rememb somebody has to take this position, and if you take think of all the money you can make and how rich y can leave your family. You had better take it, Z cheus." Then in a moment of great temptation, p haps, Zaccheus fell. Do you not think he ever regret that he took that position? And when Jesus called h back to the better life, do you wonder that he gla climbed down out of that sycamore tree and ask Christ into his home? Do not make the mistake thinking that a great sinner never has a desire to co back to the better life.

Overcome by Temptation

How many men are there whom, like Zaccheus, y might lead to Christ? Here is one whom you call stony-hearted, brutal saloonkeeper. You think he brutal, but he is not. There never was a man w loathed the curse of liquor more than he loathes it. you talked to him you might find that he drifted in the whisky business as thousands of whisky deale have done. They honestly tried to find other emplo ment, but could not. Then, in a spirit of desperatio they took employment in a saloon. Before they kn it, they commenced to make lots of money. But in t midnight hour, in the darkness of their rooms, some these saloonkeepers have realized again and again th the road they are taking to fortune is marked by tom stones and coffin-lids and open graves. Only too willi would thousands of the saloonkeepers be to turn the backs upon the evil traffic, if they only knew a way get out. If you, oh, man, would accost some of the modern saloonkeepers as Christ saluted Zaccheus, y might lead them to the better and truer life, even as t publican of old turned his back upon his dishonest ta collecting.

Or take another case. Here is a plain, hones simple farmer from one of the country districts, elect to our State Legislature. He is not at heart a ba man. He has always tried to lead a simple, hones true, faithful life. He goes to our State capitol. H term of office is drawing to a close. He has a bi mortgage on his farm. He has tried for years to li that mortgage, but it is an impossibility. Just as th session of the legislature is nearing an end, a railroa corporation tries to push through a bill to grab som land for its private use. That farmer knows the bill wrong. But one day the lobbyist or representative the railroad comes to him and says, "We need you vote to pass that bill. We know you are opposed t its passage. But if you can change your mind an vote for it, we will give you five one thousand dolla bills. That five thousand dollars will just pay off you mortgage and leave your farm free of debt, and yo can make an easy living for the rest of your life." Th farmer looks at the money. He struggles against th temptation, and at last yields. At once the newspa pers open their broadsides against him. His goo reputation is gone. Do you not believe this moder Zaccheus ever regrets what he has done? Do you no believe he is regretting his dishonest acts now? If yo accost him as Christ greeted the publican of old, d you not believe you might lead him to the better an the truer life?

Saving the Rich

But again, I think that Christ went to the house o Zaccheus to prove to the world that he wishes to sav the rich man in his palace as well as the poor man i his hut. He wants to be the Saviour of Dives in hi mansion, as well as of the beggar Lazarus in his rags The story of Zaccheus proves this. Was Zaccheus

CHRISTIAN WORK IN THE CANAL ZONE

From a Special Correspondent

At the present time there are about eleven Christian workers here, representing several branches of the Protestant Church, devoting their whole time to Christian work and the preaching of the Gospel. These are laboring amongst some 60,000 people, putting the probable present population of the Isthmus at a very moderate figure. Of these, only two are actually resident in the Canal Zone, though nearly all have work scattered at different points along the line—a proportion of workers small enough indeed to do justice in any way to the great need. Again, half of this population represents Spanish-speaking people, amongst whom two of the workers, and they only devoting a small portion of their time, may be said to be doing any Protestant work. As to Roman Catholicism in this country, as seen in the cities of Colon and Panama, especially in the latter, where alone it may be really said to be holding its own, it is of that Latin-American type found in nearly all the South American republics, its security lying in keeping its followers in ignorance and darkness, while the worship of relics and tinsel-covered images holds the most prominent place. The ruined churches and monasteries in Panama alone may be looked upon as very typical of the crumbling faith that they once represented.

That Christian work on the Isthmus is steadily progressing there can be no question, but that the obstacles seem often, humanly speaking, almost insurmountable, is equally clear. It is to be deplored that large numbers of members of Christian churches in the States and elsewhere, on coming to the Isthmus, often seem to forget the old paths, succumb to the existing atmosphere around, and before long are to be found spending their Sabbath days in pleasure parties, outings, watching baseball games, going out boating—almost anything rather than that of attending divine service.

Services are held for white and colored separately, the attendance of the latter being far better in proportion than that of the former. All kinds of buildings are used to hold services in, from mess-houses and old railway tool-sheds, to government schoolhouses, old dwellings, camps and court-houses. In Colon, the Panama Railroad, many years ago, erected a church in which the Episcopalians meet, and the latter have also erected a church of their own in Panama. The Wesleyans have erected a commodious church, with mission house on top, in Colon, while they own a large old railway warehouse in which they worship in Panama.

Besides the buildings lent and previously referred to as used for holding church services, there are but three very small buildings in the Canal Zone owned by the churches themselves. There is, therefore, great need for the erection of more buildings for the satisfactory carrying on of church work.

I came out direct from England in the autumn of 1900 to do mission work chiefly among the colored laborers working in connection with the late New French Canal Company. At the time I came out I took charge of two small colored Baptist churches with a total membership of twenty-five. Since then we have opened three new stations, built our own mission house, and are now building our own church, while our membership has grown, in spite of a continuous floating population, from twenty-five to one hundred and forty. Our old church building had to be torn down to meet the requirements of the Isthmian Canal Commission in the widening of the canal. The ceremony of "laying the foundation stone" of our new church took place on Good Friday (a week ago to-day), and was attended by nearly seven hundred people, mostly colored, a few Americans only being present. The contributions at the collection for the new building amounted to $340, with late gifts that made a total of $375. All the concrete foundation work, with the exception of one pillar for the stone-laying, was done after working hours at night by free labor, given by the people themselves. The Isthmian Canal Commission, through the courtesy of Mr. Stevens, late chief engineer, generously granted a car-load of stone and one of sand, which were unloaded at night by the church members themselves, aided by lanterns and the moon. The actual cost of the foundation work to the church consequently was reduced to the cost of a dozen barrels of cement. The cost of the new building (a portable one now on its way out from England), has already been defrayed locally by the people themselves, with the help of a few friends. Only the cost of shipment, erection (part of which will be done by free labor), and seating has now to be met.

Laying Corner-stone of the Culebra Baptist Church

My five mission stations are situated at Paraiso, Culebra, Las Cascadas, Matachin and Frijoles. The last named of these stations was seized and occupied by troops in November, 1901, during the revolution. During the same fighting, one old colored deacon, while waiting for Sunday School, Sunday afternoon (November 24, 1901), in the old chapel vestry (Culebra), had his arm shattered by a passing bullet. The same afternoon, over forty bullets struck the mission house in which I was at the time.

God spared my own life and he also spared the lives of the two or three others who were there with me. Next morning revealed killed and wounded all around, but we had been providentially spared and protected.

Besides the care of these five small churches, there are daily visits to be paid to the hospital, and there are needy ones behind iron bars in the Zone penitentiary to be seen. There are also many little calls needing help and advice. Sad letters come from loving mothers in the home land asking for news of some wayward son; pathetic letters from some bereaved ones pleading for some news of a loved one who has died here in this far-away land. There are letters of gratitude, too, for some little service rendered, outwardly insignificant, but which to some father or mother are of untold price. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

or man? Nay. "Behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich." Yes, whenever you think of Zaccheus you must think of him living in a mansion. It was Zaccheus, a rich man, that Christ carried the Gospel. But though Christ came to save the rich man, how hard it is to preach repentance and faith and judgment to come to the merchant prince and to the man who rides in a carriage and to one who has scores of servants to run at his bidding! It is easy enough for me to go to a murderer in his cell, just about to be executed for his crimes, and beg him to trust in Jesus who saved the dying thief on the cross. But, oh, how hard it is for one to go to the rich man and say, "Merchant, with your gold; lawyer and doctor, with your lucrative practice; statesmen, sitting in senatorial halls and in gubernatorial chair, Christ came to save the rich man. He came to save the aristocrat. He came to save Zaccheus. He came to save you.

In all probability you have heard the old story about Rowland Hill many years ago preaching upon the outskirts of London. A great multitude was gathered about the popular preacher. While he was preaching, there drove to the outskirts of the crowd the carriage of the noted aristocratic beauty, Lady Erskine. Suddenly, Rowland Hill in his blunt way stopped and said, "Now, brethren, we are going to have an auction sale. We are going to sell the soul of Lady Erskine, who is here, to the highest bidder. 'Who will bid first for this soul?' 'I will,' cries the world. 'What will you give for this soul?' 'I will give riches and honor and pleasure and fame.' 'Is that all?' 'Yes, that is all.' 'Who is the next bidder?' 'I am,' says Satan. 'I will give all the kingdoms of the earth. I will make men bow down to her. I will give her full license for all her evil desires until she reaches the grave.' 'Is that all?' 'Yes, that is all.' 'Who is the next bidder?'" cried Rowland Hill. "'I am,' says Christ. 'What will you give?' 'I will give peace and joy on earth. I will give her many years of usefulness to mankind. Then I will give her eternal joy and life and peace beyond. I will give her a crown that shall never fade.'" Dramatic was that. Oh, yes. Only a Rowland Hill dared preach such a gospel to a proud aristocrat. But what Rowland Hill said was true. Over every rich man as well as over every poor, these three forces are struggling. Christ wants to save the aristocrat just as much as he wants to save the poorest peasant.

There is a beautiful legend told about Zaccheus, which goes thus: Long after his conversion, he continued to live in Jericho. He lived there until he became a very old man. Then in his old age he took upon himself a very curious habit. Every morning he would take a pail and go off alone for a walk and stay away two or three hours. He would come back with a smiling countenance, as though he had been with Christ. When his grown-up daughter would ask him where he went, he would answer nothing. But one day his daughter followed him. She saw her old father go to the outskirts of the town, to an old sycamore tree. When he got there, he took his pail and filled it with water and watered the roots of the tree. Then he plucked up the weeds about this old tree and kissed it and caressed it. Then he knelt down and prayed by it. When the daughter saw him doing thus, she said, "Father, why are you loving that old sycamore tree?" Then the old man said, "Why, daughter, don't you know? It was under this tree that Jesus spoke to me."

My friends, that is only a legend. But has not that legend any message for you? Christ is speaking to you now. He would abide at your house and control your life, and fill your heart. He condescends to plead with you. Open wide your doors give him welcome and learn what a blessing comes to the man whose home has Christ for an inmate.

Tokio's World Student Conference

SINCE the foundation of the World's Student Christian Federation at Wadstena, Sweden, in 1895, conferences have been held in the United States, Germany, France and Holland. This year a mighty body of delegates from nearly every student movement in the world gathered in Tokio, Japan, April 3 to 7 inclusive, to attend the first world's conference, either secular or religious, ever held in Asia.

This conference brought together, for the first time, leaders in Christian work from all parts of Asia; it afforded leaders in the student movements of Christian lands an opportunity to obtain a wide acquaintance, from a new point of view, with the triumphs and the problems of the mission field, and will therefore undoubtedly result in a marked quickening of missionary interest and endeavor throughout Christendom. Moreover, the influential classes in the Orient have never before had so significant an object-lesson in the world relations of Christianity and its hold upon the educated men and women of many lands, as in this gathering of five hundred and eighty Christian students from twenty-four countries; the majority being drawn from the ranks of educated, Christian young men of Japan itself, China, Korea, India, Siam, Ceylon, the Philippines and the Levant, representing the flower of the Asiatic Church. One hundred leaders in Christian work were in attendance from twenty Christian nations. Our own American delegation consisted of the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D.; Prof. E. I. Bosworth, Dean of Oberlin College; John R. Mott and R. C. Morse, representing both the Student Volunteers and the Y. M. C. A. of America, together with many other well-known leaders in Christian work.

The three dominant themes discussed at the Conference were "The Evangelization of the Most Influential Classes of Men," "Bringing Them Up in Faith and Character," and "Enlisting Their Interest in Extending Christ's Kingdom Throughout the World." Mr. John R. Mott, General Secretary of the World's Christian Student Federation, as well as Foreign and Student Secretary of the North American Young Men's Christian Association, known all along the line by his familiar battle-cry of "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation," delivered the address of the Convention. He reviewed the remarkable development of the organization from 1895 to its present work in twenty-nine nations, and outlined a student programme for evangelization of the world.

The very day after the Conference closed, t began one of the most remarkable evangelistic c paigns ever undertaken in any country. Nine dep tions of five men each, composed of a student le from the West, who has previously been successfu evangelistic work among influential classes; an Orie from outside of Japan; a distingui Christian Japanese; a foreign secre of the Young Men's Christian Associat and a Japanese interpreter, started April 8 upon a simultaneous evangel mission throughout Japan, which cease only when every important ce in the empire has been reached. It is garded as especially opportune that Conference should have occurred in Ja at this particular time, as there are to- in the city of Tokio at least 15,000 dents from all the provinces of Chi There has never been a parallel situat in the world's history where so many nation's young men (nearly 20,000) h gone over en masse to another country education and training.

As an example of the attitude which upper classes among the Japanese h assumed toward the Conference and purposes, we may cite the following pertinent: Count Komura, the fam Japanese leader and statesman, not h self a Christian and known to maint a Shinto shrine on his palace groun remarked recently with enthusiasm: is important that these Chinese stude be impressed while over here with fact that Christianity is good for a nation." In meeting, addressed by an American clergyman, hundred young Chinese students rose to their feet declared their intention to embrace Christianity.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR'S FOUNDER IN PERU

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS are following the travels of their honored founder, Dr. Clark, round South America with keen interest. Dr. Clark is accompanied by his daughter. During his visit to Lima and Callao we have had the great pleasure of entertaining these distinguished friends in our home.

On the first evening after his arrival, he addressed the English week night service of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Callao on Christian Endeavor in many lands. His address was a stimulating and refreshing message.

Dr. Clark had an opportunity of visiting the penitentiary of Lima. There one is struck with the discipline, order and cleanliness. The motto, "Silencio, obediencia, trabajo" (silence, obedience, work), catches the eye at every turn. The penitentiary has a school for primary instruction, workshops for learning carpentry, shoemaking, printing, harness-making, and even blacksmithing. There are about four hundred men, and although they looked contented, it is a sad and strange experience to stand before this motley and cutthroat gang. There is little opportunity of circulating Gospel literature, but on other occasions we have presented some of the men with Gospels.

From the penitentiary Dr. Clark's party went to the National Library and the Geographical Society of Peru. Dr. Clark left this building with a new admiration for the dusky sons of the Incas and an increased desire for their evangelization.

President Roosevelt is interested in Dr. Clark's visit to South America, and gave him a cordial letter of introduction to his diplomatic representatives. This enables Dr. Clark as a Protestant minister to visit Presidents and other Ministers holding high office. In Peru, the Protestant missionary has Article IV of the Constitution hanging over his head and ready to fall on any who unwittingly trespass its limits. President Pardo gave Dr. Clark a very cordial interview. The President on hearing of the object and extent of Christian Endeavor inquired if it were Roman Catholic propaganda. When it was pointed out that it was "Christian," he jocularly replied, "Then we will require to apply Article IV," but he hastened to add, "Although the Peruvian Constitution is intolerant in its wording, the people are tolerant."

Dr. Clark left us for South Peru and Bolivia. W are sure the prayers of the young people of Ameri will follow him as he travels in the Land of the Inc

WORK OF THE PEACE CONGRESS

Four Days of Meetings and Addresses Conclude with a Series of Arbitration Resolutions and a Brilliant Double Banquet

THE first American National Arbitration and Peace Congress has come and gone. It is now a part of history. For nearly a week, Carnegie Hall, New York, was the Mecca of thousands of peace pilgrims from all parts of the United States, and not a few from foreign lands. Among the pilgrims were representatives of almost every professional and social grade, including titled and decorated dignitaries from abroad; prominent statesmen, native and foreign; distinguished educators, historians and other literary celebrities; theologians of various creeds, scientists, reformers of both sexes; brilliant club women, judges, governors, congressmen, merchants, manufacturers and representatives of the hardy sons of toil. Amid them all, like the Spirit of Peace, moved Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the host and president of the Congress and the controlling genius in all its deliberations.

Hardly had the vanguard of the hosts of peace reached New York, before it was realized that the coming invasion would be something unprecedented in character and proportions. All preparations had been made in advance for the accommodation of the delegates. Meetings were arranged for Carnegie Hall, the Hotel Astor, Cooper Union, and the Tabernacle Church.

The programme of the Congress was an elaborate one, covering four days, from Sunday evening, April 14, to Wednesday, April 17, inclusive. Sacred music was a feature of the Sunday evening session, and the large audience listened to instructive addresses by Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch of Chicago, Bishop Potter of New York, and others.

The Opening Session

The first business session of the Congress was held Monday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, near Central Park. Long before the time announced for the opening, people were pouring through the entrances in three wide streams, and the street in front of the building was lined with carriages and automobiles. The interior of the great audience hall was handsomely decorated, and showed that the New York committee had left nothing undone to make the setting of the Congress an impressive one. The arched stage had been hung with white, spangled with innumerable stars. In the centre of this white expanse was the word "Peace," done in electric lights. On each side were the national colors inset on banners of white, and about the back and sides of the stage were Venetian banners of the red, white and blue. Around the circle of the boxes were hung the flags of all nations. The top galleries were hung with American flags only, joined with disks of brass. In front of Mr. Carnegie's private box, the red lion of Scotland "ramped" on its field of gold.

The majority of those in attendance were women, and they were dressed as if for a social function. The bright tints of their gowns completed an effective picture.

As one after another of the men of prominence who were scheduled to speak during the Congress came upon the platform, they were greeted with a hearty round of applause. Mr. Carnegie had brought on to New York the men of science and literature from abroad who had been his guests a few days before at the opening of the Carnegie Institute, in Pittsburg, an account of which was given in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Mr. Carnegie, as is well known, is one of the world's most ardent advocates of peace, and the meeting of the present Congress was with him a joyful occasion. He bowed and smiled, his face rosy with satisfaction, as the ladies in the audience clapped their hands and waved their handkerchiefs toward the platform.

Mr. Carnegie was a unique presiding officer. He not only introduced each speaker with a few flattering remarks, introducing Secretary Root as "more than the right hand of the President," but he constituted himself a friendly critic of their speeches after they had finished.

Secretary of State Root was most cordially received, and also Mayor McClellan of Greater New York. The latter, the son of the famous general, welcomed the delegates in behalf of the city, and while expressing approval of peace with honor, he referred to the patriotism of the city and said that when the flag was in danger the men of New York had been always among the first to come to its defense. His speech and that of Secretary Root, and a letter from President Roosevelt, which was read to the meeting, all urged that the Congress should be guided by a moderate common-sense view of the necessities of the age in which we live, and should not spoil the "chance of accomplishing the possible by demanding the impossible and the unobtainable." They could work to lessen the chances of war, but to ask for universal disarmament, the speakers held, would be to alienate those nations whose very existence depended on their military efficiency.

The President's Letter

The reading of President Roosevelt's letter to the Congress made a deep impression on the audience, and at times evoked much enthusiasm. "First and foremost," the President wrote, "I beseech you to remember that though it is our bounden duty to work for peace, yet it is even more our duty to work for righteousness and justice. It is righteousness that exalts a nation, and though normally Peace is the handmaid of Righteousness, yet if they are ever at odds it is righteousness whose cause we must espouse. In the second place, I again earnestly ask that all good and earnest men who believe strongly in the cause, but who have not themselves to bear the responsibility of upholding the nation's honor, shall not, by insisting upon the impossible, put off the day when the possible may be accomplished."

The President pointed out that on account of our geographical position, we were not compelled to keep a large standing army as did other nations, and, therefore, it would ill become the United States to undertake the part of a schoolmaster to the rest, and ask them to do that which might imperil their existence as independent States. Mr. Roosevelt wrote with especial satisfaction concerning the number of arbitration treaties we have concluded with various countries. It was his sincere wish that in the near future the number might be greatly increased. This expression greatly pleased Mr. Carnegie and the delegates, and they broke into loud applause.

The President had sent Secretary of State Root as his special representative. Mr. Root spoke, defining the position of this country among the nations, and stating what it had done for Cuba and the Philippines, and what it intended to do toward assuring cordial relations with foreign countries. His address was one of the most important and practical of the Congress.

Monday evening's session in Carnegie Hall gave the delegates and audience an opportunity to hear eloquent addresses by Baron de Constant of France; Hon. Oscar S. Straus, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Washington; Prof. Hugo Munsterberg of Harvard University; Dr. Ernst Richard, President, German-American Peace Society; Mr. W. T. Stead, editor of the Review of Reviews, London; Col. Sir Robert Cranston, Ex-Lord Provost of Edinburgh; Sir Robert S. Ball, the distinguished professor of astronomy of Cambridge University, and several others.

Professor Munsterberg took occasion, in his address, to eulogize the Emperor William as a leader of peace. When he had concluded, Mr. Carnegie, who was ever alert to keep things on what he considered to be the true line, took exception to the professor's remarks, and a little verbal passage-at-arms, in which Editor Stead also took part, was the result. This was the first of several similar incidents in which there was a free discussion from the platform of the sentiments expressed by speakers, whenever these happened to vary in any marked degree from what the leaders regarded as the true policy of the Congress.

Baron de Constant held that limitation of armaments should not be discussed; the great object to strive for was the substitution of arbitration for war. This should become more and more the normal solution of all international troubles; limitation of armaments would naturally follow as a consequence.

Mr. Straus believed that what we want more than disarmament is international morality. Unrest and dissatisfaction at home antagonize peace and prosperity. A nation often goes to war, being driven into it by reason of internal dissensions. The growth of commerce and industry in this industrial age contributes greatly to the community of nations, and the commercial spirit is a guarantee of peace. Substitute international morality for international expediency, and we will have instead of war the arbitrament of law. No nation should be allowed to collect a debt at the mouth of a cannon, any more than it will allow its own subjects to collect their debts from one another with swords and pistols.

Professor Ball, the famous astronomer, spoke briefly on the evils of war and the part it has played in human history.

Telegrams and letters were read from many foreign countries, expressing wishes for the success of the Congress in its efforts for the world's peace.

The Women's Conference

Tuesday's session was an exceedingly busy one. In the forenoon, the Women's Conference was held in Carnegie Hall, at which Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer presided. Addresses were delivered by Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, ex-President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Chicago; Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead, of Boston; Miss Mary E. Woolley, President of Mount Holyoke College for Women; Mrs. Frederick Nathan, President of the New York Consumers' League; Miss Jane Addams, head of Hull House, Chicago; Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, F.R.S., Secretary of the London Zoological Society; and Mr. William Archer, of London. The meeting was harmonious and enthusiastic.

Mrs. Henrotin said that were the United States to undertake frequent wars, the women of America would follow the example of the women of France, and refuse to bear children for the cannon's mouth. All the speakers favored arbitration.

Tuesday afternoon's session was devoted to a gathering of the children of the public and private schools of the city, and proved a welcome interlude. The hall resembled a huge flower garden, nearly every seat on the floor being filled with children in holiday array. Every box in the two big horseshoes was occupied by young students and their teacher chaperones, while upon the platform in the rear of the speakers rose tier upon tier of white-robed little girls, flanked by the gray-clad ranks upon ranks of boys. These formed the chorus of five hundred children, who sang at intervals, with a melody and precision which delighted the few adults who had succeeded in gaining admittance to the floor or balconies.

Mr. W. H. Maxwell, the city Superintendent of Public Schools, who presided, began with Scripture reading, which he stated was "a time-honored custom of New York's public schools." Professor Henry Turner Bailey; Dr. Nathan C. Schaeffer, Superintendent of Public Instruction in Pennsylvania; Professor Charles Sprague Smith, of the People's Institute; Dr. James Walsh, of St. John's College, and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise were presented in turn to their youthful audience. Professor Smith admirably adapted his eloquent address to his hearers, saying: "If you children, belonging to a nation favored above all other nations; protected by nature upon every side from all hostile powers, endowed above all the other children of the earth with the supreme gift of liberty; if you would clasp hands from ocean to ocean and declare for peace, it would win by acclamation within the generation." He closed by presenting a set of resolutions which were unanimously carried, looking toward the formation of a Children's Peace League, which the children of other nations should be invited to join.

The Baron d'Estournelles de Constant knew how to carry the children with him, talking to them with quaint informality. He referred to his visit to President Roosevelt's children and put a motion, which was carried, that a telegram of appreciation of their President's children should be sent to them from the four thousand children present, representing the schools of New York City.

Senorita Huidobro, Chile's representative at the Congress, told the beautiful story of the "Christ in the Andes," the noble statue erected in commemoration of the peace between Chile and Argentina.

The children gave an enthusiastic greeting to Mr. W. T. Stead, who spoke with buoyant energy upon the topic, "What the Young Folks Can Do." He told of the manner in which he and his brother's family always celebrated the "great and glorious Fourth" at their English home, and how they said that George Washington was "the finest Englishman of the eighteenth century." He appealed to every child in America, saying that where once our Colonies had whipped England well and deservedly, he wanted help now—help to gain a victory in the fields of peace. He begged them to do what they could to become a mighty force in the cause of peace, progress and humanity.

A cleverly executed flag-drill was given by forty schoolboys in white sailor suits, concluded by a "salute to the flag" by the aggregation of pupils. There is no question that the meeting and the principles it stood for made a deep impression upon the receptive minds of the great assemblage of children present.

While this meeting was going on, another was in progress at the Hotel Astor, Baron De Constant, Hon. Oscar S. Straus and Hon. John Barrett, ex-United States Minister to Colombia, being among the speakers. Mr. J. W. Van Cleave, President National Association of Manufacturers, created a stir by declaring that the United States should not lose sight of Cromwell's injunction to "keep your powder dry." He added: "Tennyson's 'parliament of man and federation of the world' will not come in the lifetime of anybody in this hall, but as practical men we must pay a decent regard to the conditions which confront us."

Mr. M. M. Marks, who presided, told the speaker that the audience did not approve of his sentiments, but Mr. Van Cleave continued in the same strain, and several delegates left the hall. The other speakers were more temperate.

A meeting of college delegates was held in Columbia University, and a committee appointed to further the Peace movement among the colleges generally.

At the Tuesday evening session of the Congress at Carnegie Hall, Prof. Nicholas M. Butler of Columbia presided. In his opening remarks, he took occasion to refer rebukingly to Professor Munsterberg's defense of the German army system at the previous day's session. Professor Munsterberg sat in the audience and listened.

Prof. Felix Adler made a short address, in the course of which he said:

> I have often reflected upon the various ways that men stamp their names so that they will live after them. One man gives his name to a flower and his name is perpetuated long after he is dead; another carves his name across the portal of some public building, and there it stays long after he has passed away. But the greater fame has always appeared to me to be sweet anonymity; that a man should do good works, not with the idea of perpetuating his name, but for the sake of the works themselves. The cathedrals of Europe stand as monuments to the life works of men whose names have long since faded into obscurity. We are to have a Temple of Peace at The Hague. But there will some time be a greater and more glorious temple of peace in the hearts of the whole world, and to that each one of us may contribute a stone.

Peace Badges for the Cadets

The interesting incident of this meeting, which was attended chiefly by university men and professors, was the pinning of white peace badges on the uniforms of ten young West Point cadets, who went up to the platform for that purpose.

Tuesday evening also witnessed a large meeting at Cooper Union, presided over by James Duncan, Vice-President, American Federation of Labor. Here as at other meetings Mr. Stead proved himself the "irrepressible delegate." He stirred up the meeting with an impracticable scheme for a pilgrimage of union labor men to the Hague Conference, with Americans leading the procession. This didn't please the audience and they quickly let the speaker know it. As Mr. Stead seemed disposed to monopolize the meeting, he was politely invited to give other speakers a chance; and he gracefully took the hint. Mr. Samuel Gompers of the Federation of Labor, and Algernon S. Crapsey, of Rochester, were among those who addressed the big audience of workers.

On Wednesday, the closing day of the Congress, the audiences at all the meetings were large and that at Carnegie Hall was especially so. The great house was filled from auditorium to topmost gallery, and the platform was fairly crowded when the Hon. Seth Low, ex-Mayor of New York, and a member of the first Hague Conference, took the chairman's seat at the three o'clock meeting. A pleasing incident before the regular proceedings was the presentation of a Peace flag to Mr. Carnegie by the Daughters of the American Revolution. Mrs. Helen Beach Tillotson and Lieutenant Richmond P. Hobson, of Cuban war fame, made the presentation, to which Mr. Carnegie gracefully replied, paying an eloquent tribute to the flag.

Hon. Richard Bartholdt, President of the American Group, Interparliamentary Union, spoke of the and principles of that organization, which had its bership in the Parliaments of all the foremost na There were half a dozen other speakers, but the cipal interest seemed to centre on the address of William Jennings Bryan, who spoke of the Peace gress as not an official, but merely an advisory He said, in concluding:

Mr. Bryan's Remarks

> This Congress can only harmonize. We cannot expect al ple to think alike if they think at all. There are some thing in the resolutions I would like to see there. I would like money made contraband of war just as much as powder and s I hope the time will come when we shall be able to include and enforce it, and I hope we shall be able to make it impo for a few financiers to grow wealthier by encouraging war bet nations.

After a long discussion, the delegates adopted a s of resolutions, carefully compiled from hundred suggestions that had been sent to the Congress. Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, Dr. B Trueblood, explained that it had been considered be to appeal on lines of practical common sense tha indulge in the usual vague and indefinite terms peace propaganda. The resolutions call upon our ernment to request, through its representatives at Hague, the formation of a permanent and compre sive International Union for the application of inte tional law for all international disputes. They fa making the Hague Court permanent and open to nations; they favor also a general arbitration tre providing for reference of all international dispute The Hague; they request our government to urg The Hague the immunity of private property at during war, and they favor the consideration by Hague Conference of the limitation of armame The resolutions close with appreciative mention of efforts of President Roosevelt, Secretary Root Prime Minister Bannerman of Great Britain in the vancement of peace interests.

The Two Banquets

Two simultaneous banquets, one in the Waldorf the other in the Hotel Astor, marked the brilliant cl of the Congress, which thus ended as it had begun, the spirit of generous hospitality. For three days th had been a ceaseless round of receptions and luncheo to delegates, but the finale was destined to eclipse magnificence all that had preceded it. Both banqu were of equal interest and importance, and the gue included prominent persons of both sexes. It w arranged that the leading speakers should attend bo gatherings and make addresses at both, and this uniq plan was quite successfully carried out.

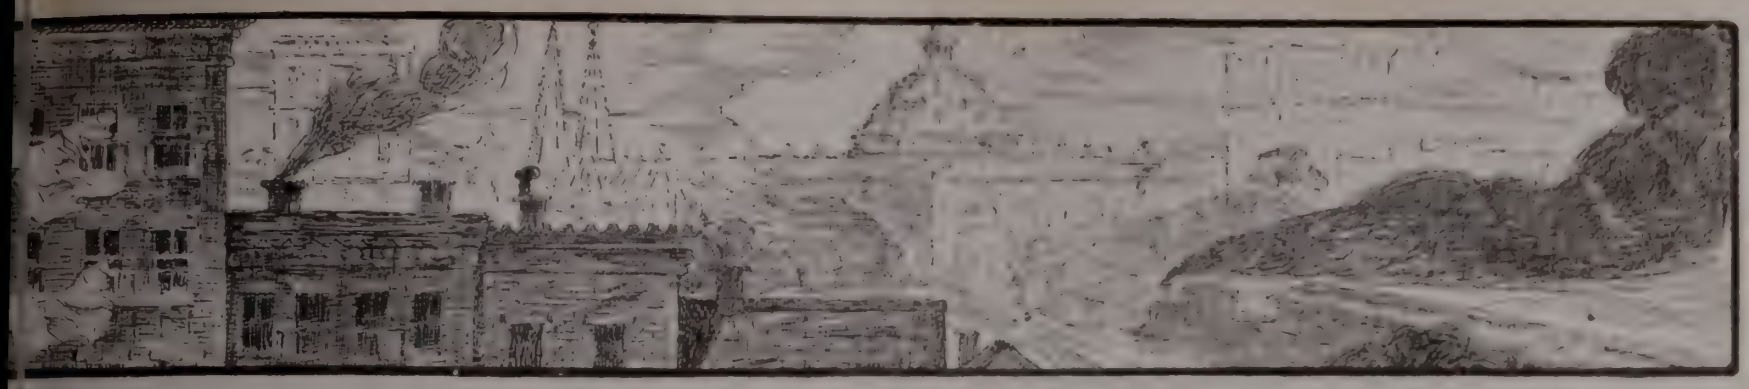
At the Hotel Astor banquet, where there were near six hundred guests, Mr. Carnegie presided. An eve of the evening was the presentation to the host by Bar de Constant of the Cross of the Legion of Honor, as recognition by France of the great work Mr. Carneg had done "as a good citizen of the world."

Among the more distinguished guests at the Hot Astor were Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canad Don Enrique Creel, the Mexican Ambassador, and Ho James Bryce, the new British Minister; while amo those at the Waldorf Astoria were Baron de Constan Hon. W. J. Bryan, His Highness Kang Yu Wei, form adviser of the Chinese Emperor, and other notable pe sonages. The speeches were of the usual congratulato after-dinner order. Almost all the speakers deplored th evils of war and regarded the present peace movemen hopefully.

Perhaps the address of Professor Eliot of Harvar more nearly than others, expressed the general sent ment. He said:

> It would be well if we conducted an international bureau publicity; if we could extend that mode of action so that in ever capital, port, border, city and centre of population in the worl there would be an expert agent for international publicity. A other force which would be a potent aid in establishing worl peace, would be an international police force. Such a force wi always be needed on the earth. There is a misguided sense national honor, and it is frequently the cause of bitter warfar The honor of the nation is said to have been violated if a flag ever hauled down over land upon which it once waved. And ye we in America have gained some there. We hauled down ou flag in Cuba. The duelist's idea of wiping out a stain upon hono should not also be the nation's.

On the whole, the Congress must be regarded as a remarkable one. It was eminently representative, and conservatively conducted. Cranks and visionaries were mostly kept to the rear. The few ripples of excitement which broke upon the surface nowise marred the general harmony. It did its work well and satisfactorily, and can hardly fail to exercise a good influence at The Hague, where its platform will be presented as the expression of the American people in behalf of world peace and international arbitration.



INTO STILL WATERS

A NEW SERIAL STORY WRITTEN EXPRESSLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

CHAPTER VII

L Houghtonsville was interested in the new doctor, and all Houghtonsliked his appearance. The old men is square jaw, noted his steady hand ye, and said that he was skilful; the g men met the genial smile and g hand-clasp, and said that he was a d fellow;" the old women watched uiet strength and ease of manner, said that he was sympathetic; the g women noted his breadth of shoulnd length of limb, and said nothing; hey smiled into his eyes and made rankly welcome.

most immediately after Dr. Spenarrival, the old doctor (whose asat he had come to be) died; and the g man found all the love and allee that had been given to the elder ician transferred as by common con to himself. It touched him prodily; and already the clasp of his carried something of the spirit of ssion. "These are my people," it ed to say.

. Spencer had been two months Houghtonsville when there came the nons to go to the old Kendall place—'great house" of the town.

Ever been thar?" asked old Nathan, hey drove down the wide, elmered street.

athan had held the reins over the old or's horses for nearly forty years, and s well as the love and allegiance, had passed over to the young physician common consent. Houghtonsville d scarcely have recognized the doctor man of healing at all had not old an brought him.

No, I've never been there," returned doctor.

Hm-m; fine place!"

So I judge—from the outside."

lence reigned for a minute, but, as the or well knew, it would not reign for . At first he had tried to check an's somewhat garrulous tongue; but on found that that very tongue was of able assistance to him in making his noses—what he learned about the ent on the way frequently made derfully clear what he learned from patient after he arrived.

s he suspected in this particular case, ad not long to wait.

She's a widder—Mis' Kendall is," obed Nathan, musingly.

Yes?"

Hm-m; husband been dead, let's see wo—six years. It's been more'n two rs, ye know, since the little gal was . You know 'bout that, I s'pose."

Lost? Little girl?" There was real rest in the doctor's voice, and Nathan led back in his seat with a sigh of ent.

Yes. 'Twas in New York. She left little thing in the depot while she went on a errand. She got knocked down he street, an' was sick fur mos' three our months, I guess. When she come k, the little gal wa'n't thar—an' she 't seen hide nor hair of her since."

"The poor woman!" exclaimed the physician under his breath. "I wonder she kept her reason."

"Some say she hain't. Ever seen her?"

"No—not that I know of."

"Humph! You'd know it all right if you had. Thar ain't two 'round here that looks like her. For that matter, thar ain't many that has seen her lately. When she come back that first time from New York, she shut herself right up in that house an' she hain't hardly stirred out of it since—'cept ter go ter New York. She goes thar two or three times a year; an' they do say she goes ter that depot an' sets in that seat where she left the little gal, an' sets, an' sets, an' sets thar with her eyes on the door. Kind o' odd, now, ain't it? Do ye s'pose she expects that child ter come back after all this time?"

"I don't know, Nathan," said the other gravely. Then he asked: "But does she live alone? Isn't there some one, any one that she loves?"

"Thar don't seem to be, doctor," returned Nathan, flicking off a fly with the left rein. "Thar ain't nobody in the house but old Jim Barrett an' his wife; an' they do all that's done, both outside an' in. She must ha' been powerful sick ter sent fur you. They hain't let a soul get further'n that little room off the hall that they call a 'reception-room' fur years. Thar was a time when folks called, an' tried ter show their sympathy an' be sociable; but, land sakes! they don't do that no more. The only one they ever see was old Mis' Barrett, an' she allers said the same thing until they learned it by heart: 'My mistress is indisposed an' begs ter be excused.' Of course, thar wa'n't no gettin' very sociable on that!"

"A gray-haired old woman answered the doctor's ring"

"How she must have suffered, poor thing!"

"Yes; ain't it too bad?" retorted Nathan. "They do say as how thar's a room that used ter belong ter the little gal, an' that was all full of her things; an' that now they're jest exactly as they was left years ago, an' that the door ain't never shut. Ye see, they wa'n't home much the last year. Mis' Kendall, she got restless, an' they was kitin' off here an' thar an' ev'rywhar. The last time they left the house tergether they went kind o' suddin'—so the story goes—an' the little gal's playthings was scattered 'round an' nobody stopped ter pick 'em up, an' Mis' Kendall went right off an' closed the house. When she come back 'twas after the whole thing had happened, an' she looked like a shadder. Well, anyhow, she went inter the house, an' thar was them things; an' thar they've been ever since—an' here we be ourselves," he finished cheerfully, as he drew up before the huge stone lions on either side of the steps at Five Oaks.

A gray-haired, bent old woman answered the doctor's ring.

"Come in, sir, come in," she half whispered; and the doctor noticed that she shook as if frightened.

"You sent for me?" he asked gently.

"Yes, doctor;" and this time the old woman's teeth fairly chattered. "It's my mistress, sir. She's not well. I would have sent for you before, but she wouldn't let me."

"And now?"

"She don't know, sir. She's not right in her head," faltered the old woman. "I made bold myself to send for you."

"You did quite right," said the man, gravely. "Where is she?"

"This way, sir. Come," replied the woman, leading the way through the hall and up the stairs.

The house had the chill and cheerlessness of a tomb. Everywhere were closed doors and drawn shades—everywhere save at the end of the hall upstairs. There a door was wide open and showed the afternoon sun shining full and square on a little woolly dog in the middle of the floor. Very hurriedly, and with a furtive glance at her companion, the woman passed this door. The next instant she had pushed open another door near by, and had motioned him to enter.

Even the sick-room was in the semi-twilight of drawn blinds, and for a moment the doctor could make nothing out distinctly. He crossed to the window, swung back the blinds, and turned toward the bed. Even the nearsighted old woman noticed his start of surprise.

Amy Kendall had been nineteen when Margaret was born; she looked scarcely more than that now to the doctor, with her two heavy braids of golden hair trailing over her shoulders. But a nearer view of the wasted figure, the thin cheeks and the drawn mouth told of the havoc that the last two years had wrought. She was looking straight into his eyes and unconsciously the doctor shivered. Then he advanced to the bed and laid cool firm fingers on the slender wrist lying outside the coverlet.

It was a hard fight and a long one, but in the end the doctor won. It took many

The Peace Congress

NOW that our first National Peace and Arbitration Congress is a thing of the past, its promoters may look back upon it with a certain degree of reasonable satisfaction. That it was a social success must be everywhere admitted. Anyone who attended the sessions at Carnegie Hall, and who saw the imposing array of carriages and automobiles outside, and the still more impressive display of elegant toilettes in the boxes and throughout the beautifully decorated hall, must have felt that, as a social function, the Congress was a brilliant triumph. Besides, there were in attendance many representative men and women, and not a few acknowledged statesmen whose presence and influence gave a distinctive character to the proceedings.
